forcible reasoning of the supreme court of Missouri in State ex rel. Litson v. McGowan, 138 Mo. 193, 39 S. W. 771, along this line. There are other authorities, which we have not thought it necessary to cite at length. There was but one election. It is a complete fallacy to argue that, because the constitutional amendments were submitted and voted on at a general election, the election was separate, and that these were two in number. There was but one election, held at the same time and place, though officers were voted for, and these amendments were voted for or against. The ballot used was a single ballot, on which was printed, along with the names of the candidates, the amendments, with directions to vote for or against them in one body. In the case of Tecumseh Nat. Bank v. Saunders, 51 Neb. 802, 71 N. W. 779, it is shown that votes were deposited for and against the amendments in boxes used for receiving ballots thus cast, all over the state; that these votes were canvassed separately; and that the whole number of votes so cast was 122,000, of which 84,000 were for and 37,000 against. Speaking in round numbers, but 217,000 votes were cast for governor. And the contention was that it was a separate election as to the amendments. See page 803, 51 Neb., and page 780, 71 N. W. But the court held that there was but one election. That was a far stronger case for the idea that it was a separate election, than this one. Here there was no separate deposit of ballots touching the amendments, in separate boxes, and no separate canvass of such ballots. The whole conduct of the election shows it to have been one election.

One final observation: We are not embarrassed in this case, as some of the courts whose decisions we have discussed were embarrassed, by the fact that a construction different from ours has been uniformly acted upon for a long period of time by all the departments of government, and that rights have grown up under such different constructions. The governor of this state, foreseeing the evil effects to come from long delay, and the confusion which would be introduced by waiting for years, it might be, until the validity of these amendments should be otherwise presented, wisely determined to have this question settled now, in advance, finally and authoritatively, by this, the court of last resort in this state. This action saves the people of this state the very great embarrassments which would certainly have attended a delay of the settlement of this much-vexed question. This court recognizes the importance of the co-ordinate legislative department of the government. It has the highest regard for the legislature as a co-ordinate branch of the government, and for its members individually. It is one of the very ablest legislative bodies that has ever assembled in this capital. We do not seek a jurisdiction not imposed upon us by the Constitution. We could not, if we would, escape the exercise of that jurisdiction which the Constitution has imposed upon us. In the particular instance in which we are now acting, our duty to know what the Constitution of this state is, and, in accordance with our oaths, to support and maintain it in its integrity, imposes upon us a most difficult and embarrassing duty,—one which we have not sought, but one which, like all others, must be discharged when the hour comes. The action of the court below is in accordance with the views we have announced. It declared, and we now declare, that for the reason that the said amendments were not submitted to the voters in the state in accordance with the provisions of § 273 of the Constitution of 1890, and because these amendments were not adopted at said election by a majority of all the qualified electors voting at said election, as required by said § 273, the said amendments are null and void, and form no part of the Constitution, and that all the sections of the Constitution which they sought to repeal remain in full force and effect.

Affirmed.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS.

Re Will of Isabella ANDREWS, Deceased.

(162 N. Y. 1.)

An instrument is not subscribed at the end thereof, as required by statute to constitute a valid will, where it consists of four pages in one sheet folded lengthwise down the middle, with the formal opening and a portion of the bequests on the first page of the sheet, another portion on the third page, which is marked page 2, while the remainder and the signature are on the second page, which is marked page 3, there being nothing to connect the portions on the third page with those above the signature.

(February 27, 1900.)

A PPEAL by claimants from an order of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, Second Department, affirming a decree of the Surrogate's Court for Kings County refusing to admit to probate the will of Isabella Andrews, deceased. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. G. G. Reynolds and F. Reynolds, for appellants:

The end of an instrument naturally means where it leaves off; the close of the writing; not necessarily the end of any particular piece of paper.

The different parts of a will need not be physically connected, provided they are connected by their internal sense, or by a coherence and adaptation of parts.

Schouler, Wills, § 284, note 5.

Looking at the evil intended to be guarded against by the statute, abstractly considered, there is not as much danger of a fraudulent alteration of the will by this arrangement as if the will had been so short as to occupy only half of the first page, there leaving a long blank between the writing and the printed closing part of the instrument.

Egan's Will, N. Y. L. J. 1893; In Goods of Carver, 1 Notes of Cases, 276; In Goods of Gore, 2 Notes of Cases, 479; Hitchcock v. Thompson, 6 Hun, 279; Re Dayger, 47 Hun, 127; Re Singer, 19 Misc. 679, 44 N. Y. Supp. 606; In Goods of Stoakes, 31 L. T. N.

NOTE.—As to sufficiency of signature to will when not placed at the end of it, see Warwick v. Warwick (Va.) 6 L. R. A. 775; Re Conway (N. Y.) 11 L. R. A. 796; and Re Booth (N. Y.) 12 L. R. A. 452.
48 L. R. A.

S. 552; In Goods of Coombs, L. R. 1 Prob. & Div. 302; In Goods of Kimpton, 3 Swabey & T. 427.

Even if the "second page" is not, strictly speaking and on the face of it, a part of the body of the will, which is ended and signed on the "third page," it is then to be considered testamentary matter, which, by its paging and its being joined to the will as it was while in the possession of testatrix and when executed by her, is identified and demonstrated so far as to be deemed incorporated into it.

Allen v. Maddock, 11 Moore, P. C. C. 427; In Goods of Almosnino, 1 Swabey & T. 508; In Goods of Watkins, L. R. 1 Prob. & Div. 19; In Goods of Pascall, L. R. 1 Prob. & Div. 606; Van Straubenzee v. Monck, 3 Swabey & T. 12; Tonnele v. Hall, 4 N. Y. 140; Brown v. Clark, 77 N. Y. 369; Caulfield v. Sullivan, 35 N. Y. 155; 59 Albany Law Journal, 445.

Mr. Armour C. Anderson, also for appellants:

While the statute requires the will to be signed at the end thereof, these words should be taken in their ordinary and popular signification; in other words, at the place where the testator intended to stop, not on the last or back page of the paper.

Sisters of Charity v. Kelly, 67 N. Y. 409; People ex rel. Eakins v. Roosevelt, 14 Misc. 536, 35 N. Y. Supp. 1085, Affirmed in 149 N. Y. 574, 43 N. E. 989; Tompkins v. Hunter, 149 N. Y. 117, 43 N. E. 532; Re Laudy, 78 Hun, 479, 29 N. Y. Supp. 136; Younger v. Duffie, 94 N. Y. 535, 46 Am. Rep. 156.

The will in this instance was properly executed. It is signed at the end thereof.

A substantial compliance with the statute is sufficient, "a literal compliance is not required."

Re Dayger, 47 Hun, 127; Gilbert v. Knox, 52 N. Y. 125; Younger v. Duffie, 94 N. Y. 530, 46 Am. Rep. 156; Sisters of Charity v. Kelly, 67 N. Y. 409.

The will may be on separate sheets, fastened together only with a pin.

In Goods of Braddock, L. R. 1 Prob. Div. 433.

When they are found so fastened together, the presumption is that it was done by the testator.

Rees v. Rees, L. R. 3 Prob. & Div. 84; Schouler, Wills, 2d ed. § 314.

Mr. Frederic W. Adee, for respondents:

The paper propounded for probate is not subscribed or attested in the manner required by the statute of wills of the state of New York.

2 Rev. Stat. 63, § 40; 2 Rev. Stat. Banks & Bros. 9th ed. p. 1877; 3 Birdseye, Rev. Stat. p. 3510; Willis v. Lowe, 5 Notes of Cases, 428; In Goods of Parslow, 5 Notes of Cases, 112; In Goods of Tookey, 5 Notes of Cases, 386; Ayres v. Ayres, 5 Notes of Cases, 375; Sweetland v. Sweetland, 4 Swabey & T. 6; Smee v. Bryer, 6 Moore, P. C. C. 404; Dennett v. Taylor, 5 Redf. 561; McCord v. Lounsbury, 5 Dem. 68; Sisters of Charity v. Kelly, 67 N. Y. 409; Re O'Neil, 91 N. Y. 516; Re Conway, 124 N. Y. 455, 11 L. R. A. 796, 26 N. E. 1028; Hays v. Harden, 6 Pa. 409; Glancy v. Glancy, 17 Ohio St. 134.

No evidence upon probate can remove the fatal defects in subscription and attestation.

Re Hewitt, 91 N. Y. 261.

The doctrine of incorporation, ineffectually evoked on behalf of the proponent in both of the lower courts, has no bearing upon the case upon appeal.

Re O'Neil, 91 N. Y. 516; Re Conway, 124 N. Y. 455, 11 L. R. A. 796, 26 N. E. 1028; Booth v. Baptist Church of Christ, 126 N. Y. 215, 28 N. E. 238; Re Whitney, 153 N. Y. 259, 47 N. E. 272; Dennett v. Taylor, 5 Redf. 561.

The court of appeals has not only definitely settled the law against probate of instruments subscribed and attested like the one in question, but has affixed thereto the seal of stare decisis.

Re Conway, 124 N. Y. 455, 11 L. R. A. 796, 26 N. E. 1028; Re Blair, 84 Hun, 581, 32 N. Y. Supp. 845; Re Whitney, 153 N. Y. 259, 47 N. E. 272.

The doctrine of stare decisis et non quicquid movere rests upon clear reason, upon manifest justice, indeed upon a necessity inherent in the constitution of civil society.

1 Bl. Com. *70; 1 Kent, Com. 475, 479; 3 Bl. Com. *432; Chamberlain, Stare Decisis, p. 19; Spicer v. Spicer, Cro. Jac. 527; Doe ex dem. Mansfield v. Peach, 2 Maule & S. 576; Proprietors of Liverpool Waterworks v. Harpley, 6 East, 507; Bowen v. Shapcott, 1 East. 542; Lonsdale v. Littledale, 2 Anstr. 357; Bradford v. Tinkham, 6 Gray, 494; Cohen v. Virginia, 6 Wheat. 399, 5 L. ed. 290; Rockhill v. Nelson, 24 Ind. 424.

Bartlett, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This case comes before us under circumstances so unusual that a few words of comment may not be out of place. The surrogate of Kings county refused probate to the will we are about to consider, on the ground that it was not subscribed at the end thereof, as required by the statute of wills (2 Rev. Stat. p. 63, § 40; 2 Rev. Stat. Banks & Bros.' 9th ed. p. 1877). In so doing, he followed the settled law of this court for years, and many well-reasoned English 48 L. R. A.

cases, when construing a statute similar to our own. 1 Vict. chap. 26. The learned appellate division affirmed the surrogate's decree with a divided court, giving utterance at the same time to a protest both emphatic and unanimous. The opinion states that the conclusion reached was solely under the stress of authority, and that, unaided by the light of judicial decisions, a contrary result would have followed. One of the dissenting justices stated that, while he recognized the principle of stare decisis, cases sometimes arise when a judge is justified in refusing to follow a decision of the court of last resort. The other dissenting justice wrote an opinion in which he succeeded in reaching the conclusion that neither the statute of wills, nor the cases which had compelled the majority of his brethren to reluctantly affirm the surrogate's decree, called for any such result. As the opinion of the appellate division concedes that the question presented is not an open one in this court, we might well content ourselves with an affirmance of the judgment, did we not feel constrained by judicial courtesy to re-examine the legal situation that has been so pointedly called to our attention.

It has long been the settled policy of this state to require certain formalities to be observed in the execution of wills. These provisions are exceedingly simple, and calculated to prevent frauds and uncertainty in the testamentary dispositions of property. Re O'Neil, 91 N. Y. 520; Willis v. Lowe, 5 Notes of Cases, 423. 2 Rev. Stat. p. 63, § 40 (2 Rev. Stat. Banks & Bros.' 9th ed. p. 1877), reads as follows: "Every last will and testament of real or personal property, or both, shall be executed and attested in the following manner: (1) It shall be subscribed by the testator at the end of the will. (2) Such subscription shall be made by the testator, in the presence of each of the attesting witnesses, or shall be acknowledged by him, to have been so made, to each of the attesting witnesses. (3) The testator, at the time of making such subscription, or at the time of acknowledging the same, shall declare the instrument so subscribed to be his last will and testament. (4) There shall be at least two attesting witnesses, each of whom shall sign his name as a witness, at the end of the will, at the request of the testator." These are the only restrictions imposed upon a testator when executing his will, and they appear to be wise, reasonable, and easily understood. It has been repeatedly laid down as the rule in this state, in cases we shall presently discuss, that the intention of the testator is not to be considered when construing this statute, but that of the legislature. The question is not, What did the testator intend to do? but, What has he done in the light of the statute? It is undoubtedly true that from time to time an honest attempt to execute a last will and testament is defeated by failure to observe some one or more of the statutory requirements. It is better this should happen under a proper construction of the statute, than that the individual case should be permitted to weaken those provisions calculated to protect testators generally from fraudulent alterations of their wills.

It may be well, before examining the will which is the subject of this appeal, to refer to a few of the cases which construe the provision of the statute requiring the testator and the witnesses to subscribe at the end of the will. In Sisters of Charity v. Kelly, 67 N. Y. 409, it was held that the provision of the statute requiring the testator to subscribe "at the end of the will" means the end of the instrument as a completed whole, and where the name is written in the body of the instrument, with any material portion following the signature, it is not properly subscribed, nor can it be claimed that the portion preceding the signature is valid as a will. In Re O'Neil, 91 N. Y. 516, a printed blank was used, and the formal commencement was printed on the first page, and the formal termination printed at the foot of the third page. The entire blank space was filled with writing, and, apparently for want of room, a portion of a paragraph containing material provisions was carried over to, and the paragraph finished at, the top of the fourth page. The two portions were not, however, sought to be connected by means of a reference, or anything indicating their relation to each other. The name of the testator was written at the end of the printed form, and the names of the witnesses written below the formal attestation clause on the third page. This court held that there was no legal subscription of the will, and affirmed the judgment denying probate. Chief Judge Ruger, who wrote the opinion of the court, said: "While the primary rule governing the interpretation of wills, when admitted to probate, recognizes and endeavors to carry out the intention of the testator, that rule cannot be invoked in the construction of the statute regulating their execution. In the latter case courts do not consider the intention of the testator, but that of the legislature. . . . The statute fixes an inflexible rule by which to determine the proper execution of all testamentary instruments. . . . It will be seen in all of the cases cited there was no reason to doubt the testator's intention to make a valid disposition of his property, and yet in each case the will was denied probate because in the execution thereof the testator did not conform to the provisions of the statute in failing to place his signature at the physical end of the will." In Re Conway, 124 N. Y. 455, 11 L. R. A. 796, 26 N. E. 1028, a blank form was used, the whole of which was upon one side of the paper. A space was left for the dispositions to be made, preceded by the words, "I give, devise, and bequeath my property as follows." The blank space was filled up by three complete devises. At the end of the last were underlined, in parentheses, the words, "Carried to back of will." Upon the back of the sheet was written the word "Continued." Following it were various bequests, and then the words, "Signature on face of the will." The signature of the testator appeared at the 48 L. R. A.

end of the testimonium clause on the face of the paper, and those of the witnesses under the attestation clause. It was held by the second division of this court that there was not such a subscription and signing by the testator as required by the statute, and that the will had been improperly admitted to probate. Judge Parker, in delivering the opinion of the court, said: "The aim of the statute is to prevent fraud; to surround testamentary dispositions with such safeguards as will protect them from alteration." The learned judge also declared, in substance, that the admitted intention of the testator that the provisions appearing on the page following his signature should form a part of his will would in no way affect the question before the court. In Re Whitney, 153 N. Y. 259, 47 N. E. 272, it was held that a will drawn upon a printed blank, covering only one page, and signed by the testator and subscribing witnesses at the foot of the page, is not subscribed by the testator at the end of the will, as required by the statute, when the blank space in the printed form is filled up by subdivisions marked, respectively, "First" and "Second," followed by the words "See annexed sheet," and additional subdivisions marked, respectively, "Third" and "Fourth," are written on a separate piece of paper attached to the face of the blank, immediately over the first and second subdivisions, by removable metal staples. It was held that the question presented was not an open one in this court, and that the will was not legally subscribed. The court again approved the doctrine that the existence of good faith did not affect the question pending, as the intention of the legislature, and not that of the testator, governed. In Re Blair, 84 Hun, 581, 32 N. Y. Supp. 845, this court affirmed the judgment of the general term, first department, on the opinion below, which reversed a decree of the surrogate's court admitting the will to probate. This instrument consisted of eight pages. The testator signed at the bottom of the seventh page, and the witnesses signed at the end of a proper witnessing clause at the top of the eighth page. After the place for the signatures of the witnesses, but before they were actually signed or the will executed, a clause was added directing the executor to sell at private sale a certain piece of real estate, and to devote the proceeds of sale to liquidating any deficiency in interest or cash bequests under the will. The will was then executed, as before stated, and the testator signed the added clause, but the witnesses did not. 152 N. Y. 645, 46 N. E. 1145. In each of the cases cited it was very clear that the will was not legally subscribed, and that to have admitted it to probate, by yielding to the suggestion that it was an honest attempt to make a will would have been a practical repeal of the statute as to subscription at the end of the instrument. Our present statute of wills, requiring that a will should be subscribed at the end thereof, is similar to 1 Vict. chap. 26, which was in force in England from 1837 until 1863, when it was amended by 15 & 16

Vict. chap. 24, known as "Lord St. Leonards' Act." Prior to this amendment the English courts construed the act as strictly as our own have the present statute of wills. Willis v. Lowe, 5 Notes of Cases, 428; In Goods of Parslow, 5 Notes of Cases, 112; In Goods of Tookey, 5 Notes of Cases, 386; Ayres v. Ayres, 5 Notes of Cases, 375; Sweetland v. Sweetland, 4 Swabey & T. 6; Smee v. Bryer, 6 Moore, P. C. C. 404. In the latter case, Lord Langdale, delivering the opinion of the court, said at page 410: "It may happen, even frequently, that genuine wills, namely, wills truly expressing the intentions of the testators, are made without observation of the required forms; and whenever that happens the genuine intention is frustrated by the act of the legislature, of which the general object is to give effect to the intention. The courts must consider that the legislature, having regard to all probable circumstances, has thought it best, and has therefore determined, to run the risk of frustrating the intention sometimes, in preference to the risk of giving effect to or facilitating the formation of spurious wills, by the absence of forms. It is supposed, and that authoritatively, that the evil of defeating the intention in some cases, by requiring forms, is less than the evil probably to arise by giving validity to wills made without any form in all cases." The reasoning of our own and the English courts finds support in two states where the statute of wills is substantially the same as in New York. Hays v. Harden, 6 Pa. 409; Glancy v. Glancy, 17 Ohio St. 134.

We come, then, in view of the law as it now stands, to the will before us. The testatrix was an unmarried woman, aged about sixty years. She left her surviving no nearer relatives than first and second cousins. No part of her estate is given to any relative. A stranger to her blood is sole executor. The will is in his handwriting, and the proceeds of sale of testatrix's house and lot in Brooklyn are given one half to him and one half divided equally between two religious societies. In addition to this the testatrix gave eight money bequests,—four to religious societies and a cemetery, and the others to persons not of her blood. These bequests aggregate about $4,200. The residuary clause is as follows: "The rest, residue, and remainder of my estate I give unto my executor, to make disposition of and divide in such manner as he, in his judgment, may deem best and proper." No undue influence is charged. The estate is estimated at about $15,000. The will was drawn on a printed blank, being one piece of paper consisting of a sheet of four pages, the two leaves of which were joined from top to bottom on the left side. The formal opening part of the will is printed on the top of the first page, leaving the rest of that page blank. The closing part, containing the clause for the appointment of the executor, and that which follows, including the attestation clause, was printed on the top of the second page of the first leaf, leaving the rest of that page and both pages of the second leaf blank.

48 L. R. A.

The draftsman filled the blank on the first page, and then turned to the first page of the second leaf, being the third page of the blank, and filled that, marking it at the top "2nd page." He then turned to the second page of the first leaf, containing the closing part of the will as before stated, in print, marked it at the top "3rd page," and completed the instrument, save as to its execution, by filling the blanks at the top of that page, except the blank for the date, which was left to be filled in at the time of execution. It is to be observed that a complete will was made out on the two sides of the first leaf, being the first and second pages of the blank. All of the first side of the third leaf, marked "2nd page," could have been written after execution, as no sentence thereof is continued from the first page of the will, nor carried over to the alleged third page thereof. The fourth page of the blank could have been written over in the same way. The first page of the will contains the money legacies, the direction to sell the real estate and divide the proceeds, and two legacies of personal property. The alleged second page of the will contains bequests of personal property and the residuary clause. We have here on one entire piece of paper, folded so as to make four pages, a complete will, so far as form goes, on the first and second pages; and then follows on the third page of the blank, and after the signatures of testatrix and witnesses on the second page of the blank, a page marked "2nd page," not connected with the will proper in any way, but complete by itself. The question is not whether, from the proofs in this case, the page following the signatures of the will is in fact a part of testatrix's will, by reason of her established intention, but, is the instrument so drawn subscribed at the end thereof, as the statute commands? We are of opinion that it is not legally subscribed, and that to hold otherwise would open the door to gross fraud, and be contrary to the statute and the settled law. It was suggested on the argument of this case that the effect of the statute of wills, as strictly construed by this court, is to defeat the intention of many testators, while the fraudulent addition to wills was a crime of rare occurrence. The fallacy of this argument consists in overlooking the fact that the number of frauds prevented by our wise and simple statute can never be known. We might as well ask how many commercial crimes have been prevented by the statute of frauds. The case at bar is one of the strongest illustrations of the wisdom of the statute of wills that has ever come to the attention of this court. With a complete will on the first and second pages of a blank containing four pages, there is nothing to prevent filling up the vacant third and fourth pages with any number of additional provisions, including, as in this case, a residuary clause allowing an executor to dispose of the residue in such manner as he deemed proper. The defeat of testamentary intention in a few cases is not due to the statute, or the construction of it by the courts, but to the fact that scriven-ers and other laymen, ignorant of the simple and clear provisions of the statute, are permitted to draw wills.

It is urged with much ability by the learned senior counsel for the appellants that the alleged second page of this will can be read into it by invoking the doctrine of incorporation as established in England, and to some extent in this state. We are of opinion that under the facts here disclosed that doctrine has no application. If it were otherwise, the evasion of the statute would be so easily accomplished as to render its repeal unnecessary.

We have to say in conclusion that it is quite possible we have given to this appeal undue importance, involving, as it does, a question of law settled in this court; but we desire to express in the most emphatic manner our approval of the statute of wills as now construed.

The order appealed from should be affirmed, with costs to respondent and special guardian, to be paid out of the estate.

Parker, Ch. J., and Gray, O'Brien, Haight, Martin, and Vann, JJ., concur.

Annette B. WETMORE, now Annette B. Markoe, Resp't.,
v.

William Boerum WETMORE, Impleaded, etc., Appt.

(162 N. Y. 503.)

1. An appeal as from a final order in a special proceeding or a final judgment in an action lies from an order of the appellate division of the supreme court to the court of appeals, reversing an order of a special term, which modified provisions of a former decree in a divorce proceeding as to payment of income of a trust fund as alimony, which proceeding was instituted in accordance with permission contained in the former decree upon affidavits that were given the effect of pleadings, the facts becoming the subject of reference, and the order being based upon the report of the referee.
2. The fact that defendant in a divorce suit is guilty of contempt in refusing to come into the jurisdiction of the court and submit to cross-examination is not sufficient where the record does not show a reversal on the facts, and the statute requires the reviewing court under such circumstances to presume it was on the law, to authorize the court of appeals to affirm an order of the appellate division of the supreme court which reversed an order of the special term modifying a decree awarding the income of a fund held in trust for his benefit, as alimony, but some legal error in the order must be pointed out.
3. The remarriage of a divorced woman to one whose ability to support her is unquestionable will prevent the further application for her benefit as alimony of the income of a testamentary trust instituted for the support of the husband from whom she was divorced.

(Bartlett and Martin, JJ., dissent.)

(April 17, 1900.)

A PPEAL by defendant from an order of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, First Department, reversing an order of a Special Term for New York County which denied defendant's application to reduce the amount to be paid to plaintiff as alimony out of the income of a trust fund established for defendant's benefit. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Thomas P. Wickes, for appellant:

The manner in which the defendant has been accustomed to live is a controlling feature upon this application.

Moulton v. De Ma Carty, 6 Robt. 533; Sillick v. Mason, 2 Barb. Ch. 79; Hann v. Vorhees, 1 Law Bull. 65; Stow v. Chapin, 21 N. Y. S. R. 38, 4 N. Y. Supp. 496; Nichols v. Eaton, 91 U. S. 727, 23 L. ed. 257.

This action is in equity to apportion a fund of which equity has sole jurisdiction. It is not an action in which the defendant can be punished for his alleged misdoings in the past.

Mr. Flamen B. Candler, for respondent:

The court should not grant any relief to the defendant William B. Wetmore until he shall return to this state and submit himself to the jurisdiction of the court and purge himself from his contempt in not complying with the judgment of divorce when he was able to do so.

The motion papers did not disclose any adequate reason for a reargument of the motion which was denied by Mr. Justice Storer.

A reargument will be granted only where some question decisive of the case and duly submitted by counsel was overlooked, or where a decision is in conflict with the express statute or a controlling decision to which attention was not called by counsel.

Banks v. Carter, 7 Daly. 417; Heald v. Macgowan, 15 Daly. 233, 5 N. Y. Supp. 450; Stearns v. Hemmens, 22 N. Y. S. R. 24, 3 N. Y. Supp. 16; Mahon v. Sewell, 27 N. Y. S. R. 816, 7 N. Y. Supp. 600; Duncan v. Root, 23 N. Y. S. R. 58, 4 N. Y. Supp. 613; People ex rel. Ward v. Purroy, 45 N. Y. S. R. 49, 18 N. Y. Supp. 953.

O'Brien, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The record in this case is the concluding part of the history of a long and bitter controversy between husband and wife. The appeal is from an order of the court below reversing an order of the special term, which modified the last judgment entered, with respect to the payment of alimony by the de-defendant to the plaintiff. In order to get a clear view of the questions involved, it will be necessary to recall briefly the history of the litigation: In April, 1892, the plaintiff obtained an absolute divorce from the defendant dissolving the marriage, and awarding to her the custody of the three children, and alimony of $3,000 per annum for her own use, and $3,000 more per annum for the support of her children. The defendant failed to pay the alimony, and went to reside in another state, remaining out of the jurisdiction of the courts of this state. The defendant's father, who died in 1885, made a provision by will for the benefit of his son, whereby a fund of $100,000 was created, the net income of which was to be paid to the defendant during his life. The plaintiff brought another action, to which the trustee of the fund was made a party, for the purpose of procuring a judgment appropriating the income of the trust to the payment of the alimony accrued or to accrue. In this action she was successful, and the judgment in her favor was finally affirmed in this court. 149 N. Y. 520, 33 L. R. A. 708, 44 N. E. 160. But, as the judgment devoted the whole income of a trust for the defendant's benefit to the payment of the plaintiff's alimony, this court modified it by giving permission to the defendant to apply at any time in the future for leave to share in the income, or to have the award of alimony modified or reduced by a proper provision at the foot of the decree in the action. Since the entry of that judgment the income of the trust has been paid to the plaintiff. The decision of this court in that regard was based upon the assumption that the circumstances of the parties might be so changed in the future as to render it inequitable for the wife to absorb the entire income of the trust. The defendant insists that this contingency has now happened, and this proceeding now before us was commenced to meet it. The defendant applied to the court below, at special term, for a modification of the judgment which appropriated the income of the trust to the payment of the plaintiff's alimony. In his affidavit bearing date July 11, 1896, the history of the litigation is stated with considerable detail. There were two facts stated, however, that had a direct bearing on the application, namely, that he was then possessed of no property of any substantial value, and was without means of support, since the income of the trust had been diverted to the use of the plaintiff and the children, and that the plaintiff was not in need of the income, for the reason that she had married a man of means, and was then on a visit to Europe with her new husband and the children. The defendant was then forty-six years of age, without a profession or any business capacity; he having graduated from West Point, and spent his early life in the army. The court was requested to modify the judgment by reducing the allowance of alimony payable from the income of the trust to the $3,000 awarded to the children, and providing for the payment of the balance, if any, to the defendant for his support. The plaintiff, by her counsel, opposed the application, in an affidavit recalling at considerable length what had appeared previously in the course of the litigation in regard to the defendant's pecuniary condition. The defendant's application was denied at the special term, but on appeal the order was reversed, and the case remanded to the special term for another hearing. The appellate court appointed a referee to take the proofs, and report the same to the court at special term, with his opinion. The order of reversal also directed the referee to treat the affidavits used on the previous motion as in the nature of pleadings, and as a supplemental application to modify the judgment. It was said in the opinion that, while the absolute denial of the motion was improper, it should not be granted upon affidavits, without a trial of the issue, where the witnesses must appear before the referee and submit to examination and cross-examination. 29 App. Div. 507, 51 N. Y. Supp. 797. The referee made his report to the court, in which he found, among other things, that the defendant had been adjudicated a bankrupt in one of the district courts of the United States on the 13th of January, 1890; that the plaintiff on November 22, 1894, was married to Dr. Markoe, of New York, who was in receipt of an income of about $6,000 per annum; that the defendant had failed to appear before him for examination as to the facts stated in the affidavit; and that his application to share in the income of the trust fund should be denied. When the report was submitted to the special term it was treated as advisory, merely, and not as conclusive; and the learned judge proceeded to examine the testimony and determine the facts, treating the affidavits as pleadings in an action upon an issue of fact, wherein the allegations on each side not denied by the other side were deemed to be admitted. It appeared from the proceedings reported by the referee that the defendant's counsel at the hearing offered to produce the defendant for examination and cross-examination if the plaintiff's attorney would stipulate that no attempt would be made to arrest him for nonpayment of alimony or disobedience of the decree, while in attendance, or in going to and returning from the place of the hearing; but the plaintiff's attorney distinctly refused to enter into any such stipulation. The court was of the opinion that the omission of the defendant, under these circumstances, to appear for examination before the referee, was not conclusive against the application; that, while the plaintiff was under no obligation to enter into any such stipulation, yet it could not have deprived her of any advantage which she otherwise had; and that her refusal to make it, coupled with the absence of any denial of the defendant's statements as to his present financial condition, warranted the conclusion that she believed that a cross-examination of the defendant would not tend to disprove the allegations of his affidavit as to his financial condition. After a careful examination of the referee's report and the testimony contained in it, and of the moving and opposing affidavits, treating them as in the nature of pleadings, the special term granted the application, and determined that the judgment should be modified by reducing the amount to be paid from the income of the trust fund to $3,000 for the children alone. The learned appellate division reversed this order upon the plaintiff's appeal, and it is from this order of reversal that the present appeal to this court was taken.

NOTE.—For former decision in this case, see 33 L. R. A. 708.

As to power of court to modify alimony after decree therefor has become final, see Sampson v. Sampson (R. I.) 3 L. R. A. 349; Kemp-ster v. Evans (Wis.) 15 L. R. A. 391; Cole v. Cole (Ill.) 19 L. R. A. 811, and note; McKay v. San Francisco City & County Super. Ct. Cole (Ill.) 19 L. R. A. 811, and note; McKay v. ander (D. C.) 45 L. R. A. 806.

The learned counsel for the plaintiff insists that this court has no power to review the order. It certainly has, if it is a final order in a special proceeding. Whatever it may be called, it is clear that it is a final determination of the proceeding, since it not only reversed the order of the special term, but denied the application. It was a proceeding instituted in pursuance of the provisions of the judgment in the action to sequester the income of the trust fund, based upon affidavits on both sides that by the order of the court were given, in some sense, at least, the effect of pleadings. The facts were the subject of a reference, and a report to the court upon which the order was made that has been reversed. It seems to me that the objection that it was not a special proceeding is without force. But, if it was not a special proceeding, then it must have been a proceeding in an action, supplemental in character, to modify the judgment by provisions at the foot of the decree. If so, the final determination was a judgment, since it finally determined the rights of the parties. So that it must be either a final order in a special proceeding, or a final judgment in an action. It is not very material to determine which, since either or both are appealable to this court.

Assuming, therefore, that we are required to review this order, it must be admitted that the special term had full power and jurisdiction to make the order that it did, granting the application. The motion called for the exercise of discretion upon the facts. The learned appellate division had power to reverse the order upon the facts, and, in its discretion, deny the application. But, since the order does not contain any statement that the reversal was upon the facts, or in the exercise of discretion, this court is required to presume that it was upon the law. Code, § 1338. So we must look at the order and proceedings of the special term for some error of law, in order to sustain the reversal. It is quite obvious that there was no question of law before that court, except the one hereafter considered, but not referred to in either of the courts below. The questions actually considered were all questions of fact or of discretion. The decision of these questions was open to review on appeal, but the statute requires this court to presume that they were not reviewed, but that the reversal was upon some question of law. The opinion of the learned court below indicates very clearly that it was convinced that the application should not be granted until the defendant returned from another state to the jurisdiction of the court, and submitted to examination and cross-examination. The fact that the defendant has been and is in contempt of the authority of the court has been a potent argument against him in this litigation, and, if this court had any discretion in the case before us, we would feel inclined to uphold the court below, within the limits of its power, in the enforcement of its authority and the defense of its own dignity. It is clear, however, that we must find some legal error in the decision of the special term before we can sustain the order appealed from, and, obviously, none can be pointed out.

But we think the record presents a question much broader and more important than any statutory rule for the disposition of appeals by this court, and, while it is a question of law, it tends to sustain the special term, instead of the order appealed from. The judgment in this case appropriated the income of a testamentary trust, made for the support of the defendant to the use of his wife and children, after an absolute divorce. The defendant resisted the proceeding on the ground that what was proposed amounted to a violation of the terms and the purpose of the trust in his father's will. When the discussion of that question in this court and in the courts below is examined, it will be seen that the defendant's contention was answered by arguments based upon the unity of husband and wife, and the obligation of the husband to support her and his children. While the defendant, by his misconduct, was adjudged to have forfeited all the rights growing out of that relation, the wife and children, being innocent, still retained them all. It was said, in substance, that the testator, in constituting a trust for the benefit of his son, must have contemplated that it should also be for the benefit of his wife, should he marry, and his children, should any result from the marriage. This, we thought, was a reasonable and just view of the question presented. The plaintiff had not then contracted another marriage, or, if she had, the record before the court did not disclose that fact. If the same facts appeared then that appear now in the record before us, the line of argument in answer to the defendant's contention would have had little application. The relation of the parties to each other is now completely changed. The unity of that relation then existing has been dissolved. The facts and circumstances upon which the judgment was rendered no longer exist. The question now is not whether the testator, in creating a trust for the benefit of his son, necessarily contemplated that his wife and children should share with him in the enjoyment of the income, but whether the plaintiff, who was once his wife, and is now the wife of another man, shall continue, in her new relations, to share in that income. Unless the courts can, in reason and justice, hold that the testator contemplated such a disposition of his bounty, the income of the fund cannot now be diverted to that purpose without a plain violation of the trust. The protection and enforcement of such trusts, according to the spirit and intention of the founder, is one of the peculiar functions of a court of equity. We are not now concerned with the effect of a second marriage upon a decree awarding alimony generally. The only question we are now dealing with is when and under what circumstances such alimony can be made a charge upon the income of a testamentary trust created for the benefit of the husband, from whom the wife has procured an absolute divorce, and remarried. Upon the plaintiff's marriage to her present husband, she ceased to be, in any sense, the defendant's wife; and hence the reason upon which her right to share in the income of the trust rested ceased also. In contracting that marriage she became the wife of another man, who, as it appears from the record, is abundantly able to support her. The contingency contemplated by this court, in modifying the judgment, has, therefore, happened; and after the second marriage the courts cannot devote the income of the trust fund to her support without diverting it to a purpose that could not have been contemplated by the testator. Some incongruous results frequently follow with respect to alimony and property rights when the wife procures an absolute divorce from the husband, and it may be possible that, under certain circumstances and conditions, the wife may be entitled to support from two husbands at the same time. But however that may be, we think that, upon a second marriage of the wife to a husband whose ability to support her is unquestionable, she ceases to have any claim in law or equity to the income of a trust fund created by will for a very different purpose.

For these reasons, we are of opinion that the order appealed from should be reversed, and that of the special term affirmed, without costs to either party.

Parker, Ch. J., and Haight, Vann, and Landon, JJ., concur.

Bartlett, J., dissenting:

We have here a defendant who is in flagrant contempt of the supreme court, and, under its well-settled rule, is entitled to no hearing or relief until he places himself in a proper attitude to ask it. The order appealed from is not reviewable upon the facts in this court, for the technical reason that it does not state that the reversal of the order of the special term was upon the facts as well as the law. While it is true that we will not look into the opinion of the court below to ascertain whether the reversal was on the facts, nevertheless it is the practice of this court, in exceptional cases, to hold the appeal, and permit the appellant to apply to the court granting the order to amend it so as to show that the reversal was on the facts as well as the law, if such be the case. I think the present appeal presents a very clear exception to our general rule, and that this order should be amended, as the opinion of the appellate division shows that the reversal was upon the facts, and for the additional reason that the requirement of the court respecting proof to be made before the referee of the changed condition of the defendant's circumstances was not complied with in any sense, "either technically or in spirit" as stated in opinion below. The question as to what extent the income of a trust created for the husband's benefit can be devoted to the payment of alimony due from him to his divorced wife, after her second marriage, was not considered by the special term or the appellate division, and has not been argued at our bar. A question of such importance, so far-reaching in its results, ought not to be determined without full argument and careful consideration. I am also of opinion that we should aid the supreme court in enforcing obedience to its mandates and vindicating its authority.

Martin, J., concurs.

Albert L. PURDY, Respt.,
v.

ERIE RAILROAD COMPANY, Appt.

(.....N. Y.....)

1. A railroad company which was incorporated and acquired its property rights and franchises after the enactment of Laws 1895, chap. 1027, requiring such companies to issue 1,000-mile tickets at reduced prices, is not deprived of property without due process of law by the enforcement of such statute.
2. An amendatory statute is not invalid on the ground that it imposes burdens on a pre-existing corporation, if the amendments merely modify a statute to which the corporation was subject, by making the provisions more favorable to the company.
3. The court cannot take judicial knowledge of the history of railroad lines operated by a particular railroad company.
4. A state statute requiring the issuance of mileage books at reduced rates for transportation wholly within the state is not invalid as an attempt to regulate interstate commerce, although a railroad affected thereby extends into other states.

(February 27, 1900.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, Fourth Department, denying defendant's motion for new trial on exceptions heard before it in the first instance after verdict in plaintiff's favor at the Allegany County Circuit in an action brought to recover the statutory penalty for refusal to sell a mileage ticket. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Moot, Sprague, Brownell, & Marey, for appellant:

As the statute in question violates the Constitution of the state of New York, which provides: "No person shall be . . .

NOTE.—For statute as to mileage books, see also Atty. Gen. v. Old Colony R. Co. (Mass.) 22 L. R. A. 112.

deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law;" also the Constitution of the United States, which provides: "No state shall . . . deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws."—it follows that said statute is void, and the judgment herein has no foundation on which to rest.

N. Y. Const. art. 1, § 6; U. S. Const. art. 14, § 1.

The power of making bargains for individuals has not been delegated to any branch of the government. It is not to be presumed that such a power exists, and those who set it up should tell where it may be found.

Taylor v. Porter, 4 Hill, 140; Re Jacobs, 98 N. Y. 98, 50 Am. Rep. 636; People v. Marx, 99 N. Y. 377, 52 Am. Rep. 34, 2 N. E. 29; Forster v. Scott, 136 N. Y. 577, 18 L. R. A. 543, 32 N. E. 976; Smith v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 114 Mich. 460, 72 N. W. 328; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Smith, 173 U. S. 684, 43 L. ed. 858, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 565.

The legislation in question does not apply to this defendant, because of the statute incorporating the Erie, and subsequent statutes, and therefore judgment should have been rendered against plaintiff, not defendant.

The fact is so public and well known that this defendant is the successor of the railroad company which was originally called "The Erie," although its name was "The New York & Erie Company," that the court will take judicial cognizance of it.

The original Erie Company was incorporated by chapter 224 of the Laws of 1832.

This act incorporating the Erie, and giving it the power to fix tolls, was acted on and relied on by the Erie, and was a contract between the Erie and the state. The state reserved the power to alter or modify the act, but it could not take all income from defendant by such alteration.

Covington & C. Bridge Co. v. Kentucky, 154 U. S. 204, 38 L. ed. 962, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 649, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1087; Reagan v. Farmers' Loan & T. Co. 154 U. S. 362, 38 L. ed. 1014, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 560, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1047; Smyth v. Ames, 169 U. S. 466, 42 L. ed. 819, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 418.

The legislation in question amounts to a regulation of interstate commerce, and is therefore void.

Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Illinois, 118 U. S. 557, 30 L. ed. 244, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 31, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 4.

Mr. Clarence A. Farnum, for respondent:

The mileage book act is not invalid as being in violation of art. 14, § 1, U. S. Const. or art. 1, § 6, N. Y. Const. in this, that the defendant is deprived of its property without due process of law.

What is "reasonable compensation" is a judicial question to be determined by the courts in each particular case when the question is presented. The rates fixed by the legislature are to be deemed reasonable, and proof is required to overcome such presumption.

Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 24 L. ed. 77; Budd v. New York, 143 U. S. 517, 36 L. ed. 247, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 45, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 468, Affirming 117 N. Y. 1, 5 L. R. A. 559, 22 N. E. 670, 682; Georgia R. & Bk. Co. v. Smith, 128 U. S. 174, 32 L. ed. 377, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 47; Stone v. Farmers' Loan & T. Co. 116 U. S. 307, 29 L. ed. 636, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 334, 388, 1191; Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. 734-738; Dow v. Beidelman, 125 U. S. 680, 31 L. ed. 841, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 56, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1028; Winchester & L. Turnp. Road Co. v. Croxton, 98 Ky. 739, 33 L. R. A. 17, 34 S. W. 518; Chicago & G. T. R. Co. v. Wellman, 143 U. S. 339, 36 L. ed. 176, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 400.

This act does not attempt to regulate commerce between the states, and does not purport to, nor could it, act outside of the state of New York.

Chicago & G. T. R. Co. v. Wellman, 143 U. S. 339, 36 L. ed. 176, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 400; Henderson Bridge Co. v. Kentucky, 166 U. S. 150, 41 L. ed. 953, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 532; New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 158 U. S. 431, 39 L. ed. 1043, 45 Sup. Ct. Rep. 896; Hopkins v. United States, 171 U. S. 578, 43 L. ed. 290, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 40.

The mileage book acts do not deny to the defendant the equal protection of the laws.

Hayes v. Missouri, 120 U. S. 71, 30 L. ed. 580, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 350; Brocn v. New Jersey, 175 U. S. 172, 44 L. ed. 119, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 77; State v. Broadbelt (Md.) 45 L. R. A. 433, 43 Atl. 771; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Humes, 115 U. S. 512, 29 L. ed. 463, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 110; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Matthews, 174 U. S. 96, 43 L. ed. 909, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 609; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Mackey, 127 U. S. 205, 32 L. ed. 107, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1161.

The mileage book act (chap. 1027, Laws 1895) being in force at the time the defendant was incorporated, it does not lie within the power of the company to allege its invalidity.

Pierrepont v. Loveless, 72 N. Y. 216; Plumb v. Christie, 103 Ga. 686, 42 L. R. A. 181, 30 S. E. 759; Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. 196, 197; People v. Rensselaer & S. R. Co. 15 Wend. 113; Reid v. Eatonton, 80 Ga. 755, 6 S. E. 602.

The legislature having the power to give or refuse the defendant corporate life and existence, the created being cannot question the powers of its creator, existing at the time of its creation.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. 479; People ex rel. West Side Street R. Co. v. Barnard, 110 N. Y. 548, 18 N. E. 354; New York v. Broadway & S. Ave. R. Co. 17 Hun, 242; Ashley v. Ryan, 153 U. S. 436, 38 L. ed. 773, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 664, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 865; Columbia & G. R. Co. v. Gibbs, 24 S. C. 60; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Kentucky, 161 U. S. 677, 40 L. ed. 849, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 714; Brushwick & N. Bridge & Turnp. R. Co. v. Eb- bets, 3 Edw. Ch. 353; Philadelphia v. Com. 52 Pa. 451; Owen v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 83 Mo. 454; Nolensville Turnp. Co. v. Quinby, 8 Humph. 476; Charlotte, C. & A. R. Co. v. Gibbs, 27 S. C. 385, 4 S. E. 54; Alabama & V. R. Co. v. Odneal, 73 Miss. 34, 19 So. 202; McCandless v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 38 S. C. 103, 18 L. R. A. 440, 16 S. E. 429.

Cullem, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action, similar in character to that of Bardsley v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 15 App. Div. 251, 44 N. Y. Supp. 175, is brought to recover penalties for the refusal of the defendant to issue mileage books, as prescribed by chapter 1027 of the Laws of 1895, as amended by chapter 835 of the Laws of 1896. The record in this case, however, differs materially from that in the Bardsley Case, both in its facts and in the objections taken by the counsel to the right of the plaintiff to recover. The complaints (there were originally several actions, which were subsequently consolidated into one) allege that the defendant is a railroad corporation organized under the laws of this state, and then set forth the various matters necessary to bring the defendant within the terms of the statute, and the details of the plaintiff's applications for mileage books, and the defendant's refusal to issue them. They do not state when the defendant was incorporated. The answers to the several causes of action admitted the incorporation of the defendant, and certain other allegations of the plaintiff in reference to the mileage of road operated by the defendant, and its rates of fare, and put in issue the other averments of the complaint. They further set up that the defendant owned and operated a railroad extending through several states, and charge that the statute of 1896 "is unconstitutional and void, because it is in violation of the provision of the Constitution of the United States, which commits to Congress the sole power to regulate commerce between the several states; and that it is unconstitutional and void, because it is in violation of various other provisions of the Constitution of the United States and of the Constitution of the state of New York." On the trial of the action the plaintiff put in evidence the certificate of the defendant's incorporation, of which the record contains only the following: "Certificate referred to shows that the Erie Railroad corporation, defendant, was duly organized and incorporated November 14, 1895, under the general laws of the state of New York for the incorporation of railroads." The earliest refusal to issue a mileage book for which it is sought to recover the penalty occurred on June 23, 1896. The defendant put in evidence a map showing the various lines of the Erie Railroad, extending through this state and others, and, "to make the description of the lines of the defendant more certain," as was stated by the counsel in offering them, two deeds,—one from Arthur H. Masten, special master, to Charles Caster and others; and he other from Caster and others to the defendant. All the record states of these deeds is that they were "of the New York, Lake Erie, & Western lines," and that they were delivered and recorded in November, 1895. This is all that appears concerning the original title to defendant's road. There is nothing to show the defendant has succeeded to the rights or franchises of any company antedating the enactment of the statute of 1895. While our personal knowledge may inform us of the history of the railroad lines operated by the defendant, to that we cannot appeal, and we can indulge in no presumption as to the existence of facts not appearing in the record. As the case stands before us, we have a railroad company created after the statute of 1895, and whose franchises and property rights must be assumed to have accrued subsequently to that time. The question, therefore, is whether the statute of 1895, though void as to existing railroad companies, is not constitutional and valid as to companies organized and acquiring property and franchises in the future. That a statute, which is unconstitutional so far as it purports to operate retrospectively, may be upheld as to future cases, is settled by authority. People v. O'Neil, 100 N. Y. 251, 16 N. E. 68; Cooley, Const. Lim. 180. We do not assent, however, to the broad claim of the learned counsel for the respondent that a corporation cannot object to the constitutionality of any statute enacted by the state prior to the time of its organization. Whether the proposition contended for is true or false depends on the ground on which the validity of the statute is assailed or its invalidity declared. If the state should require or enact that railroad companies thereafter organized must subject the management and conduct of any interstate transportation and business they may carry on to state control, such a statute would be void, as in contravention of the Constitution of the United States, which commits to Congress the regulation of interstate commerce. It is probable that there are provisions of the state Constitution, such as those regulating the administration of justice, and ordained for the security of persons and property, which the legislature could not require even future corporations to waive as a condition of their charters. But the ground on which the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Smith, 173 U. S. 684, 43 L. ed. 858, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 565, held the mileage book act unconstitutional, was that it was an invasion of the property rights of the railroad company, in that it required the company to transport persons willing and able to purchase 1,000-mile books at a less sum than the general or maximum rate allowed by law; in other words, that it compelled the company to surrender, as to such persons, the difference between the special rate of fare and the regular rate. This exaction was illegal, because it was without due process of law. We know of no reason, however, why a railroad company may not agree, upon sufficient consideration, to surrender or transfer any specific pecuniary right. The right to contract as to property is one of the inherent rights of a citizen, of which he cannot be deprived, except as to that class of contracts which are condemned in the exercise of the police power; such as usury and the like. People v. Gillson, 109 N. Y. 389, 17 N. E. 343. The same liberty of contract exists in the grant of charters by the legislature. Therefore a regulation as to the price of transportation, which would be an illegal exaction when sought to be imposed on existing corporations solely by legislative fiat, may, in the case of future corporations, be the mere performance of the obligation of a contract. The authority to construct and operate a railroad is not the natural right of a citizen, but a franchise proceeding from the favor or grant of the state. As a condition of such grant, the legislature might require the company to transport passengers at any prescribed rate of fare. Equally, it may require that certain classes of passengers be transported at a particular rate of fare, or that any passenger, under certain circumstances, and on compliance with certain requirements, be transported at such rate. In Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Maryland, 21 Wall. 456, 22 L. ed. 678, the Supreme Court of the United States said: "This unlimited right of the state to charge, or to authorize others to charge, toll, freight, or fare for transportation on its roads, canals, and railroads arises from the simple fact that they are its own works, or constructed under its authority. It gives them being. It has a right to exact compensation for their use." So it was held that a reservation by the state to itself of one fifth of the receipts for transportation of passengers was valid, and it was said that the state might have exacted the whole receipts. See also Ashley v. Ryan, 153 U. S. 430, 38 L. ed. 773, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 664, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 865, and Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Kentucky, 161 U. S. 677, 40 L. ed. 849, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 714.

The statute of 1896 was passed subsequently to the incorporation of the defendant, and if the statute increased the burden imposed on the defendant by the act of 1895, as to such additional burden it would be invalid. But a comparison of the two acts shows that all the modifications of the statute of 1895 effected by the statute of 1896 are favorable to the railroad company. By the first act the mileage books entitled the holder—i. e., the bearer or assignee—to transportation; by the second the use of the book is limited to the purchaser and to certain members of his family and employees. By the act of 1895 there was imposed on the company the general duty to issue mileage books; by that of 1896 the company is required to keep such books for sale only at stations in incorporated villages and cities. By the earlier statute the company was practically required to accept the mileage books from passengers on the train in lieu of tickets; by the latter act the mileage book can be used only in the purchase at the ticket office of a ticket for the proposed journey. We are of opinion, therefore, that the enactment of 1896 is constitutional and valid in the same cases where the statute of 1895 would be upheld.

While we have discussed at some length the constitutionality of the statutes of 1895 and 1896 as applied to future corporations, we doubt very much whether the defendant's objections and exceptions are sufficient to raise the question. So far as the pleadings are concerned, the only attack on the validity of the statutes is that already quoted from the defendant's answer. At the opening of the trial the defendant moved to dismiss the complaint because it failed to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action for a penalty. No particular ground for the attack on the complaint is stated. At the close of the evidence, the defendant renewed its motion to dismiss the complaint, but the sole ground on which it assailed the validity of the statute itself was that it constituted an interference with the regulation of interstate commerce, and hence was in violation of the Constitution of the United States. The objection that the statute was an invasion of the defendant's property rights, and contravened, for that reason, either the Constitution of the United States or the Constitution of this state, does not anywhere appear in the record; and the rule seems settled that such an objection, to be available here, must have been raised in the courts below. Vose v. Cookcroft, 44 N. Y. 415; Delancy v. Brett, 61 N. Y. 78.

The objection that the statutes of 1895 and 1896 are regulations of interstate commerce, and hence in conflict with the Federal Constitution, is satisfactorily dealt with in the very clear opinion of Mr. Justice Merwin, of the appellate division, delivered in the Beardsley Case, 15 App. Div. 251, 44 N. Y. Supp. 175. That such a statute, if limited in its scope to transportation wholly within the limits of the state, is a valid exercise of state authority, is settled by the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in Stone v. Farmers' Loan & T. Co. 116 U. S. 307, 29 L. ed. 636, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 334, 388, 1191, where it was said: "It [the state] may, beyond all question, by the settled rule of decision in this court, regulate freights and fares for business done exclusively within the state." This doctrine has never been overruled or limited; on the contrary, it is fully recognized in the later cases. Hennington v. Georgia, 163 U. S. 299, 41 L. ed. 166, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1086; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. James, 162 U. S. 650, 40 L. ed. 1105, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 934; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Ohio, 173 U. S. 285, 43 L. ed. 713, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 465. In Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Illinois, 118 U. S. 557, 30 L. ed. 244, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 31, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 4, a statute of Illinois regulating fares was held void solely on the ground that the act, as interpreted by the supreme court of the state, included cases of transportation partly within and partly without the state. It was there stated: "If the Illinois statute could be construed to apply exclusively to contracts for a carriage which begins and ends within the state, disconnected from a continuous transportation through or into other states, there does not seem to be any difficulty in holding it to be valid." There is nothing in the language of the statutes now before us that shows they were intended to affect any but interstate transportation, but, if their interpretation be doubtful, "the courts must so construe a statute as to bring it within the constitutional limitations, if it is susceptible of such a construction." Sage v. Brooklyn, 89 N. Y. 189; People ex rel. Sinkler v. Terry, 108 N. Y. 1, 14 N. E. 815. Within this principle these statutes must be construed as applying to transportation wholly within the state, and, so construed, they do not infringe upon the Constitution of the United States.

The judgment appealed from should be affirmed, with costs.

Parker, Ch. J., and Gray, Bartlett, Vann, and Werner, JJ., concur. Martin, J., concurs in result.

J. Francis MURRAY, by Guardian ad Litem, Resp.,
v.

Harvey A. DWIGHT, Appt.

(161 N. Y. 301.)

A servant of a truckman who is sent with a horse by his master, by whom he is paid, to a warehouse, to use the horse in operating tackle for hoisting goods, which work is under the direction of the foreman of the warehouseman, is not a fellow servant with the warehouseman's servants, by whose negligence in putting in place the pulley blocks and tackle he is injured.

(Gray, J., dissents.)

(January 9, 1900.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, Third Department, reversing a judgment of a Trial Term for Albany County in defendant's favor in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinions.

Mr. Randall J. Le Boeuf, for appellant:
The relation of master and servant existed between the defendant and plaintiff at the time and in respect to the very transaction out of which the injury arose.

NOTE.—As to which of two or more persons is the master of another who is conceded to be the servant of one of them, see Hardy v. Shedden Co. (C. C. App. 6th C.) 87 L. R. A. 83, and note; also Gagnon v. Dana (N. H.) 41 L. R. A. 389; and Channon v. Sanford Co. (Conn.) 41 L. R. A. 200.

As to the right of a servant to recover damages from persons other than his master for injuries received in the performance of his duties, see Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Berry (Ind.) 46 L. R. A. 33, and note.

48 L. R. A.

Wyllie v. Palmer, 137 N. Y. 248, 19 L. R. A. 285, 33 N. E. 381; McInerney v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. 151 N. Y. 411, 45 N. E. 848; Higgins v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 156 N. Y. 75, 50 N. E. 500; Murray v. Currie, L. R. 6 C. P. 26; Rourke v. White Moss Colliery Co. L. R. 2 C. P. Div. 205; Hasty v. Sears, 157 Mass. 123, 31 N. E. 759; Powell v. Virginia Constr. Co. 88 Tenn. 692, 13 S. W. 691.

The defendant, as plaintiff's master, did not fail in the performance of any duty which he owed to Murray by reason of that relation, and plaintiff could not, therefore, recover.

Kimmer v. Weber, 151 N. Y. 422, 45 N. E. 860; Sisco v. Lehigh & H. R. Co. 145 N. Y. 296, 41 N. E. 90.

The execution of the part of the work during which the accident happened was a mere detail of that work which defendant might properly intrust to his employees. Having furnished all the appliances which experience had shown were safe and adequate, it was no part of the work which required personal supervision, or which was so important in its character as to have placed the servant carrying it into execution in the place of the master, and therefore make him responsible as if he had himself directed it to be done.

Kimmer v. Weber, 151 N. Y. 422, 45 N. E. 860; Perry v. Rogers, 157 N. Y. 251, 51 N. E. 1021.

Plaintiff at the time of the injury was a co-servant engaged with the other servants of Dwight in a common employment, and if any negligence other than his own contributed to the injury it was that of a fellow servant.

Plaintiff, as the servant of the defendant, was required to show by direct proof that the defendant had failed in the performance of some duty which he owed him by reason of their relation to each other.

Dobbins v. Brown, 119 N. Y. 188, 23 N. E. 537; Clark v. Riter-Conley Co. 39 App. Div. 598, 57 N. Y. Supp. 755; Allen v. Banks, 7 App. Div. 405, 39 N. Y. Supp. 1016; Denenfeld v. Baumann, 40 App. Div. 502, 58 N. Y. Supp. 110.

Messrs. Countryman & DuBois, for respondent:

The plaintiff was not a fellow servant with defendant's employees.

The plaintiff, while engaged in the care and management of his master's property, was engaged with such property in his master's business, and, except as he was directed by signal when to stop and when to go forward, was in no way under the direction or control of the defendant, but was performing the duties, and only the duties, that he owed to his master, in connection with his master's property, and in the general course of his employment as his master's servant and driver.

He remained the servant of his general master, and in no way became a fellow servant with defendant's employees.

1 Shearm. & Redf. Neg. 5th ed. § 162, pp. 244, 245, § 225, pp. 402, 403; Laugher v. Pointer, 5 Barn. & C. 579; Quarman v. Burnett, 6 Mees. & W. 497; Jones v. Liverpool, L. R. 14 Q. B. Div. 890; Jones v. Scullard [1898] 2 Q. B. 565; Michael v. Stanton, 3 Hun, 462; Gerlach v. Edelmeyer, 15 Jones & S. 292, Affirmed in 88 N. Y. 645; Bradley v. New York C. R. Co. 3 Thomp. & C. 288, Affirmed in 62 N. Y. 99; Blake v. Ferris, 5 N. Y. 48, 55 Am. Dec. 304; Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Farver, 111 Ind. 195, 60 Am. Rep. 696, 12 N. E. 296; Story, Agency, 453a, 453b, 454a, 455, pp. 561-565; Huff v. Ford, 126 Mass. 24, 30 Am. Rep. 645; New Orleans, B. R. V. & M. R. Co. v. Norwood, 62 Miss. 565, 52 Am. Rep. 191; Fuhrmeister v. Wilson, 163 Pa. 310, 30 Atl. 150; Hexamer v. Webb, 101 N. Y. 377, 54 Am. Rep. 703, 4 N. E. 755; Builer v. Townsend, 126 N. Y. 105, 26 N. E. 1017; Johnson v. Netherlands American Steam Nav. Co. 132 N. Y. 576, 30 N. E. 505; Svenson v. Atlantic Mail S. S. Co. 57 N. Y. 108; Kilroy v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. 121 N. Y. 22, 24 N. E. 192; Kelly v. Cohoes Knitting Co. 84 Hun, 154, 32 N. Y. Supp. 459; Sanford v. Standard Oil Co. 118 N. Y. 571, 24 N. E. 313; Sullivan v. Tioga R. Co. 44 Hun, 304, Affirmed in 112 N. Y. 643, 20 N. E. 569; Currier v. Henderson, 85 Hun, 300, 32 N. Y. Supp. 608.

The principle of the rule of the nonliability of the master for injuries to a servant, occasioned by the negligence of his fellow servant, rests on the implication of law that, as part of the contract of service, the servant agrees to and does assume the risk of injury from the negligence of other servants, and he is presumed to have contracted with reference to such risks.

Sherman v. Rochester & S. R. Co. 17 N. Y. 153; Wood, Railway Law, § 388; Shearm. & Redf. Neg. 5th ed. § 236, pp. 430, 431; Smith v. New York & H. R. Co. 19 N. Y. 127, 75 Am. Dec. 305.

Even assuming that the fellow-servant rule and the ad hoc doctrine would apply had the accident happened during the operation of the work, the defendant cannot claim the benefit of either, as the accident did not occur in the performance of any work with which the plaintiff had any connection whatever.

1 Shearm. & Redf. Neg. 5th ed. § 234, p. 428.

O'Brien, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff, a young man about twenty years of age, received a personal injury from the falling of a pulley block at the defendant's warehouse on the 24th day of March, 1894. The evidence tended to show that the block fell by reason of the negligence of the defendant's general employees, or some of them, and the question presented at the trial was whether the plaintiff was a coservant with them, within the rule that relieves employers from liability in cases of accidents of this character. The trial court held that the plaintiff was a coservant of the person whose negligence caused the injury, and the common-law rule was applied.

plaint was dismissed. On appeal to the appellate division, this judgment was reversed, and a new trial granted, and in this condition the case comes here.

The opinion of the learned court below contains a clear and concise statement of the facts concerning the accident, the substance of which we may safely adopt. The defendant was the owner of a warehouse in which there was a hoisting apparatus for the purpose of hoisting and lowering heavy articles from one story to another. There is a projection at the roof in which there is an iron wheel, over which a chain passes down in front of the building, and about a foot and a half therefrom. This chain at the roof passes into the building, and around a drum, and thence to the back part of the building. An endless rope is attached to the drum, by means of which a man in the building may operate it and hoist or lower the chain outside. If it is desired to use horse power in hoisting, a pulley block is attached to the door post in the lower story, and another pulley block, with tackle, is hooked on the chain, and drawn up to the top of the building. A rope connected with the upper block passes down and over the lower pulley, and thence into the building, and to this a horse is attached. In operating the tackle, the horse moves forward and backward within the building. The plaintiff was the servant of a truckman, and was sent by his master with a horse to hoist at the defendant's warehouse. The goods to be moved from the first to a higher floor in the warehouse were barrels of lime. The plaintiff, on arriving at the warehouse with his horse, stopped near the curbstone in front of the door, while other men in the employ of the defendant were putting in place the pulley blocks and tackle. The upper pulley block was hooked onto the chain, and was being drawn up to its place by one of the men operating the drum inside. When the block was nearly up the plaintiff was told to go in, and as he started to do so, the block fell upon the plaintiff. He had not worked there before, and, as the testimony tended to show, knew nothing about the apparatus for hoisting. He had nothing to do with placing it in position. The horse belonged to the truckman, the plaintiff's master, and the plaintiff was paid by him. The work of moving the barrels of lime from the lower to a higher story was under the direction of the defendant's foreman.

The question when and under what circumstances the servant of a general master becomes the servant of another is often difficult of solution. There is some apparent conflict in the authorities, due more to the difficulty of applying the legal principle to ever-varying facts than to any discord with respect to the principle itself. Moreover, the rule is subject to some distinctions that are not always easy to state in such a way as to render the result in every case so plain as to command acquiescence, or to give to the decision the character of a conclusive authority. Counsel upon both sides have, in the argument of this case before us, subjected the leading authorities to a very careful and able examination, that has thrown so much light upon the question that we have been greatly aided in arriving at what appears to us to be the proper conclusion. We think the judgment of reversal in the court below is correct. The opinion of Judge Merwin contains such a clear statement of the law as deduced from the numerous cases, and such a judicious application of it to the facts, that we would not attempt to add anything to his reasoning but for the fact that the learned counsel for the defendant has attempted to prove by an argument, which bears all the marks of industry and discrimination, that it is in conflict with two or three recent cases in this court. Before referring to these cases, it may not be amiss to point out a feature of the controversy peculiar to this case, and which distinguishes it from many, if not all, of those cited.

The relation of master and servant is often confused with some other relation. The mere fact that one person renders some service to another for compensation, expressed or implied, does not necessarily create the legal relation of master and servant. There are many kinds of employment which are peculiar and special, where one person may render service to another without becoming his servant in the legal sense. A servant is one who is employed to render personal services to his employer otherwise than in the pursuit of an independent calling. The truckman who transports the traveler's baggage or the merchant's goods to the railroad station, though hired and paid for the service by the owner of the baggage or the goods, is not the servant of the person who thus employs him. He is exercising an independent and quasi-public employment in the nature of a common carrier, and his customers, whether few or many, are not generally responsible for his negligent or wrongful acts, as they may be for those of other persons in their regular employment as servants. A contract, whether express or implied, under which such special jobs are done or such special services rendered, is not that of master and servant, within the law of negligence. Jackson Architectural Iron Works v. Hurlbut, 158 N. Y. 34, 52 N. E. 665; 1 Parsons, Contr. 101-109.

The plaintiff, beyond all doubt, was in the general service of the truckman, and so was his general servant. In that capacity he represented his master, and hence was a truckman himself. In the pursuit of that calling he was directed by his master to render special services to the defendant, not in moving goods from the store or warehouse to a place of shipment, but from the lower floor of the warehouse to an upper floor. It so happened that in this particular job it was not necessary to use the truck, but it was necessary to use the horse in order to furnish power to hoist the goods. Neither the time, nor duration of employment, nor the rate of compensation, was the subject of any express contract with the defendant, and 48 L. R. A.

from the nature of the case there could not well have been any well-defined agreement on the subject. The employment, in its scope and character, was in no respect essentially different from that which every truckman enters into with his numerous customers in the course of a day as a carrier of baggage or goods. The fact that the plaintiff detached the truck and performed the job with a horse alone did not change the character of the employment, nor the legal relation that exists between an ordinary truckman and his customers. The goods were moved, it is true, not by the truck, but by another contrivance, and the plaintiff's duty was to manage and guide the horse which was the real power behind the pulleys and tackle, as it would have been when hitched to the truck. In this capacity the plaintiff represented his general master, the truckman, and was all the time his servant, and did not become, in any legal sense, the servant of the defendant any more than he would if employed to move the goods to a railroad station on the truck, and if not such servant he could not, of course, have become the co-servant of the defendant's regular workmen.

The recent cases in this court cited by the learned counsel for the defendant, and to which we will now briefly refer, differ widely from this in the nature of the employment, and in the legal relations held by the person guilty of the wrong or negligent act and the party sought to be charged with its consequences.

In Wyllie v. Palmer, 137 N. Y. 248, 19 L. R. A. 285, 33 N. E. 381, the defendants sold fireworks to an organized committee in a city for the purpose of a celebration. They agreed to, and did, send to the committee, at its own expense, a competent man, who was their general servant, to set off these fireworks, under the direction of the committee, and this man brought with him a boy, also in the general service of the defendants, as a helper. In the course of the display the committee virtually separated the boy from the control of the man, and set him at firing rockets, a work which he was not competent to do, and which neither his general master nor the man intended that he should do. One of these rockets was discharged into a crowd through his negligence, and the plaintiff, a bystander, was injured. This court held that, if his negligent act was to be imputed to any third party, it should be imputed to the committee giving the order to the boy to do something for which he was incompetent, rather than to his general master, who was not present, and who had sent him there for a different purpose.

In Higgins v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 156 N. Y. 75, 50 N. E. 500, the plaintiff was injured by the negligent act of a person operating an elevator, and who was the general servant of the defendant. The plaintiff was the servant of the contractor for the repair of the building, including the furnishing of the elevator itself. The contractor had placed the elevators in the building some time before the accident, and they were in use at times by the defendant to carry passengers and by the contractor for purposes of his own. But he had not completed the contract, and had not turned over the building, with the elevators, to the defendant. They were still, for all practical purposes, under the control of the contractor, who had a right to use them for the purpose of carrying materials and workmen from the lower to the higher floors. The plaintiff's master wanted to use the elevator on the day of the accident as a platform upon which to stand while plastering the shaft in which it had been placed, and procured the defendant's general servant to operate it by moving it up and down through the shaft for the convenience of the plaintiff engaged in the work of plastering. The injury to the plaintiff occurred while the elevator was being used for this purpose, and, as the proof tended to show, by the negligent act of the operator. This court held that the operator, at the time of the accident, was not engaged in his general master's work, but was acting under the orders of the plaintiff and in a different capacity. It is apparent, I think, that the plaintiff in that case occupied a different relation to the person moving the elevator than he would had the injury occurred while being conveyed as a passenger in the elevator to his place of duty on an upper floor, and while the elevator was being used as a passenger elevator, and while it was in law the defendant's elevator and in charge and control of its servants.

In Molnerney v. Delaware & H. O. Co. 151 N. Y. 411, 45 N. E. 848, the question that we are now concerned with was not involved, as will be seen by the opinion, which expressly disclaims any intention to deal with the question whether the plaintiff in that case was injured by the act of a fellow servant. So, we think that the case at bar is not governed by these decisions, since there is a material difference in the facts, as we have attempted to point out.

The judgment of the court below should therefore be affirmed, and judgment absolute ordered for the plaintiff, with costs.

All concur except Parker, Ch. J., not sitting, and Gray, J., dissenting.

Gray, J., dissenting:

While it is true that a variance in the facts of a case of negligence may vary the application of established rules, courts should aim at consistency, and, where the facts do not materially differ, apply them strictly. This case, in my opinion, falls clearly within certain recent authoritative decisions in this state, as it does within recent decisions in Massachusetts and in England. A general principle of the law of master and servant is that, among the risks which the employee assumes upon entering an employment, is that of injury caused by the negligence of his fellow servants engaged in the same employment. Where one servant is injured by the negligence of a fellow servant, the master, if the negligence was with respect to a duty pertaining to a workman, and not to some duty owing from the master, is not liable for the injury. Crispin v. Babbitt, 81 N. Y. 522, 37 Am. Rep. 521. The facts of this case are clear and undisputed. The defendant dealt in building materials, and owned two warehouses, into and from which it was frequently necessary that the materials should be hoisted or lowered. Hoisting tackle, made fast to chains running through the upper part of the warehouses, and over a drum within them, was used upon these occasions. The drum was worked by an endless rope in the hands of a man within the building, and, as it was made to revolve, caused the chain to descend to the street, or to be pulled up, as it was required. To the end of the chain was attached the hoisting tackle, and, when it was necessary to hoist materials, the chain was pulled up, and ropes, running over pulleys upon the tackle, fell down and passed over a pulley fastened at the entrance to the warehouse. A horse would be attached to one of the ropes, and, as he was driven forward or backward, within the basement of the warehouse, the article would be hoisted up or lowered. A foreman of the defendant supervised the workmen, when engaged in the work of hoisting articles in or out, and it was customary, at the time, to employ a man and horse to aid them. The plaintiff was in the general employment of a truckman named McManus, who was not usually resorted to by the defendant for this assistance; but upon this occasion he was applied to, and the plaintiff was sent with a horse as he says, "to hoist at Dwight's," meaning the defendant. He went to one of the defendant's warehouses, and, under the directions of the latter's foreman, in common with the other employees upon the premises, took part in the work of hoisting up barrels of lime into the lofts, by driving the horse forward or backward in the basement, as he was bidden. After the hoisting was completed at that warehouse, he, with the other men, went off to do similar work at the other warehouse near by. Until the hoisting tackle was made fast, and the chain drawn up, preparatory to the hoisting of the barrels, the plaintiff, instead of going within the building, remained outside, upon the street and under the tackle. Owing to the carelessness of one of the men, who was stationed in the doorway to signal another man, who was operating the drum through the endless rope, the hoisting tackle was allowed to strike with force against the wheel or frame over which the iron chain passed, and, breaking thereby, fell upon and caused the injuries to the plaintiff for which this action was brought.

I had supposed that the principles of law which were applicable to the facts of such a case, and which were to determine the relative rights of the plaintiff and defendant, were well settled by recent cases, and that their doctrine was well applied by the learned trial judge when he dismissed the plaintiff's complaint. The question is, Was the plaintiff, while engaged with the defendant's servants in doing the work described, for the time being, in the service of the defendant? That he was, and that he was in no wise acting independently in the matter, or as a stranger to the defendant, seems to me to be a very plain proposition, in view of what this court and other courts have laid down as guiding principles. If I read these cases right, they sustain the doctrine that one who is the servant of the general master may, if employed elsewhere temporarily, ad hoc become the servant of the special master, and it is of no consequence whether he is loaned for the purpose, or whether he is hired, not directly, but through his general master. If the particular employment subjects him to the directions and orders of another than his general master, he ceases to be the latter's servant for the time, whose responsibility for his acts also ceases. Wyllie v. Palmer, 137 N. Y. 238, 19 L. R. A. 285, 33 N. E. 381; McInerney v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. 151 N. Y. 411, 45 N. E. 848; Higgins v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 156 N. Y. 75, 50 N. E. 500; Hasty v. Sears, 157 Mass. 123, 31 N. E. 759; Donovan v. Laing, W. & D. Constr. Syndicate [1893] 1 Q. B. 629; Rourke v. White Moss Colliery Co. L. R. 2 C. P. Div. 205. In the case of Higgins v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 156 N. Y. 75, 50 N. E. 500, this court passed upon a state of facts which cannot be distinguished, in the principle of the decision, from those in the case before us. The telegraph company had contracted with a contractor to restore its building and to replace the elevators within it. Before the completion of the contract, the contractor was making use of the elevator as a platform upon which the plaintiff, one of his men, might stand in doing some plastering upon the shaft. It was necessary to move the elevator up and down for the work to be done, and the contractor, instead of making use of one of his own men, procured from the defendant one of the men in its regular service for the purpose of running the elevator. The defendant was using the elevator for the purpose of carrying passengers up and down during portions of the day; but, on the day of the accident in question, the elevator ceased carrying passengers about noon, and after that time was made use of by the contractor for the rest of the day. The conductor of the elevator was negligent, and allowed the car to start up without signal from, or warning to, the plaintiff, who was at work upon it, with the result of causing serious injury to the latter. The judgment which the plaintiff had recovered below was reversed here, upon the theory that the relation of master and servant between the conductor of the elevator and the defendant was suspended during the time he was doing the work for the contractor, in moving the plaintiff up and down in the shaft. In the opinion, which was delivered by my Brother O'Brien, who now differs with me in his view of this case, the question of the responsibility of the defendant for the negligence of its servant was carefully considered in the light of the authorities in this state and in England, and 48 L. R. A.

the principles there laid down seem to me to be strictly apposite to the discussion here. It was observed that there was no question with respect to the fact that the conductor of the elevator, whose negligence caused the accident, was in the general service and pay of the defendant; but the question was whether, at the time of the accident, he was engaged in doing the defendant's work, or the work of the contractor, and that, as he was not at the time taking any orders from the defendant, but was directed by the contractor's servant in moving the elevator up and down, he became the servant of the contractor, engaged for the time being in doing his work and subject to his orders. The general proposition was advanced that servants who are employed and paid by one person may, nevertheless, be ad hoc the servants of another in a particular transaction, and that, too, when their general employer is interested in the work. He quotes the remark of Lord Cockburn in Rourke v. White Moss Colliery Co. L. R. 2 C. P. Div. 205, that, "when one person lends his servant to another for a particular employment, the servant, for anything done in that particular employment, must be dealt with as the servant of the man to whom he is lent, although he remains the general servant of the person who lent him." The conclusion that was reached by Judge O'Brien, that the conductor of the elevator had become, at the time, the servant of the contractor, fits exactly the facts of this case, inasmuch as this plaintiff, like the conductor of the elevator, was, for the time being, engaged in the employment of another than his general employer in the common work which was being done, and therefore was the servant of the defendant. If we apply the test, which was believed in the Higgins Case to be the true one in such cases, namely, who directs the movements of those who are engaged in the work, we see that the plaintiff was, in the performance of his work, at the time solely under the direction of the defendant or his foreman. As cases supporting and justifying his conclusions, Judge O'Brien very properly relied upon Wyllie v. Palmer, 137 N. Y. 248, 19 L. R. A. 285, 33 N. E. 381; and McInerney v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. 151 N. Y. 411, 45 N. E. 848, which illustrated how the servant of a general employer may be, for a particular employment, the servant of another and dealt with accordingly. In the Wyllie Case, the defendants, with whom a contract had been made to furnish fireworks for an exhibition in the city of Auburn, sent with the articles contracted for two of their servants to render aid in the exhibition. An accident occurred, due to the negligence of one of these servants while obeying an order of a member of the committee having in charge, for the city, the exhibition of the fire works, and the plaintiff was injured. He sued the contractors to recover for the injury inflicted by their servant's carelessness; but a judgment of nonsuit was affirmed in this court, upon the ground that the plaintiff was not engaged in the defendants' business at the time, but was a servant of the committee. In the McInerney Case the defendant railroad company had furnished an engine and a crew, which Willard, an owner of a lumber yard, had requested for the purpose of moving cars which were being loaded in his yard. When they arrived at his yard, Willard assumed direction, and ordered the moving of the engine, until the cars were all attached which were to be moved out. The plaintiff was one of Willard's servants, and upon the occasion in question, not having been warned by anyone, was caught between two cars, and injured, by the backing down of the engine. He brought an action against the railroad company, and a judgment of nonsuit was affirmed in this court, upon the theory that the crew of the engine were under Willard's orders, who was held to be, as to them, as well as to his own men who were engaged in the work, their common master.

If Higgins and the conductor of the elevator were fellow servants under the contractor, although the telegraph company had merely loaned the conductor, was not this plaintiff quite as much a fellow servant with the employees of this defendant? If McInerney and the crew of the railroad engine were fellow servants while doing the work of moving cars in Willard's yard, although the railroad company had furnished its own men to operate the engine, how can it be fairly said that this plaintiff was not a fellow servant with the defendant's employees? The doctrine laid down by the supreme court of Massachusetts in Hasty v. Sears, 157 Mass. 123, 31 N. E. 759, is exactly applicable. There the plaintiff, who was a carpenter in the employ of N. & Co., was sent by them to do some work for the defendant upon his building. The defendant's superintendent directed him to do work upon the elevator shaft. The conductor of the elevator had received orders not to run down below the second floor until the plaintiff had finished his work. He disobeyed the order, and, in consequence, the plaintiff received injuries, for which he sued the defendant, who was the owner of the building. It was held that he and the elevator conductor were both servants of the defendant at the time of the injury, and, as their employment was a common employment, the negligence of the conductor was an obvious risk which the plaintiff assumed, and for which the defendant was not answerable to him.

The English cases fully recognize the rule that a man may be a general servant of one person, and yet, at the same time, be the servant of another in relation to a particular matter. They hold that the important element, in determining whose servant for the time being he is, is, Which of the two persons had the control of him in the conduct of the particular business? Jones v. Scullard [1898] 2 Q. B. 565; Donovan v. Laing, W. & D. Constr. Syndicate [1893] 1 Q. B. 629. In Donovan v. Laing, W. & D. Constr. Syndicate, we find a situation which is not to be distinguished from the one in the present 18 L. R. A.

case. In that case, Jones & Co. were wharfingers, and contracted with the defendants, a construction company, to send their crane, with one of their men to run it, for the purpose of loading a ship at the firm's wharf. When the defendants' crane and man arrived at the wharf, the plaintiff, a servant of Jones & Co., acted in giving signals to set the crane in motion for the purpose of raising and lowering the goods. The defendants' man, without waiting for a signal, negligently allowed the crane to swing around, and the plaintiff was injured. It was held, in an action against the defendants, that they were not liable; for they had placed their crane and man at the disposal of Jones & Co., and had no control over the work he was to do, and that, in the working of the crane, he was no longer their servant, but was bound to work under the orders of Jones & Co. The court relied upon Rourke v. White Moss Colliery Co. Lord Esher, M. R., observed that, "so far as the working of the crane went, . . . the man in charge was the servant of Jones & Co., and was not the servant of the defendants." Lords Lindley and Bowen agreed in that view; the former remarking that Jones & Co. "must, for that particular job, be considered as Wand's [the defendant's servant] masters," and the latter holding the law to be clear, and pointing out the distinction between the carriage cases (Laugher v. Pointer, 5 Barn. & C. 547, and Quarman v. Burnett, 6 Mees. & W. 499) and the case at bar, where the general master has placed the servant under the control of another. It was also observed by Lord Bowen that "we have only to consider in whose employment the man was at the time when the acts complained of were done, in this sense: that by the employer is meant the person who has a right at the moment to control the doing of the act." Whether, therefore, we regard the recent authorities in this state, or in Massachusetts, or in England, we find the doctrine to be well settled that one who is the general servant of a master, who employs and pays him, may, nevertheless, become the servant of another in a special employment, and that it is immaterial that he does not enter the special employment by any direct hiring or contract. In the Higgins Case, the telegraph company loaned its servant to the contractor, and in other cases, from our and from other courts payment for the services of the servants was made to their general master.

The plaintiff in this case was as much in the defendant's employment, and under his direction and orders, as though the latter had engaged him, individually, to come in and assist in the work which was to be done in his building. That the plaintiff was in the general employment of a truckman, having an independent business, cannot possibly affect the question of the relation which he bore towards the defendant, or the servants of the defendant, when he entered upon the performance of the particular work under the directions of the latter or his foreman. In all the cases the existence of the relation of fellow servants between the plaintiffs and those from whose negligence their injuries were received depended upon the sole question of whether, at the time, they were under the direction and control of the temporary employer in performing the special work for which they were loaned or contracted. In no essential respect can the position of this plaintiff be regarded as differing essentially from that in any one of the cases referred to, where the plaintiffs, though in the service of a general master, were held, for the time being, to become the servants of other masters. Of course, cases of independent contractors, where the contracts of the parties have fixed their relative obligations, including the furnishing of men and defining their duties, are mostly inapplicable.

Nor do I consider it to be any answer to the proposition that the plaintiff was injured by the act of a fellow servant, and therefore cannot hold the defendant liable, that at the particular moment when the accident happened the plaintiff was not at work. His engagement was "to hoist" at the defendant's warehouses, and his employment in that respect was continuous from the time when he reported for duty. The preliminary work of hoisting the tackle, which was necessary to be done at the second building before the plaintiff could go on with his part of the work, was being done by the defendant's servants, with whom he was engaged in the same employment, namely, to hoist bags of lime from the street into the upper lofts of the warehouses. He was as much, at the time, under the control and direction of the defendant, or his foreman, as he had been at any time during the day. If the defendant did not direct him to take part in the hoisting up of the tackle, that was a mere matter of the division of labor, and it seems to me to be the purest kind of technical reasoning to say that because at the moment the plaintiff was at rest, and not actually driving his horse to and fro, or helping in getting up the tackle, he was therefore withdrawn pro tanto from the defendant's employment. I think that the judgment of nonsuit at the circuit was correct, and in accordance with the principles of the adjudged cases.

Mary W. LYNDE

v.

Charles W. LYNDE.

(162 N. Y. 405.)

1. A binding judgment against defendant in a divorce proceeding is authorized by his voluntary appearance, without reservation and without objection to jurisdiction, seeking advantage of the decree in opposition to an application for amendment of the decree so as to allow alimony, NOTE.—As to the effect of appearance by a nonresident to give jurisdiction of a divorce suit, see Ellis's Appeal (Minn.) 23 L. R. A. 287, and note.

48 L. R. A.

although it is void as to him for want of service of process.

2. The supreme court of New York will enforce a final decree of the New Jersey chancery court adjudging a defendant in a divorce proceeding over whom it has jurisdiction indebted to plaintiff in a definite sum as alimony, but it will not enforce provisions as to future alimony and as to equitable remedies to enforce compliance with the decree.

3. The provisions of the New York statute upon the subject of alimony in divorce proceedings are not available to a plaintiff seeking to enforce in the courts of that state a decree of another state granting alimony and providing for its own enforcement.

(April 6, 1900.)

CROSS-APPEALS from a judgment of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, Second Department, modifying a judgment of a Special Term for Suffolk County in a proceeding to enforce a decree for alimony; the defendant appealing from so much as undertook to enforce the decree; and plaintiff appealing from so much as refused to enforce it in its entirety. Affirmed.

Statement by Gray, J.:

This action was brought upon a final decree of the court of chancery of the state of New Jersey, which, as the result of proceedings to recover alimony, adjudged that the plaintiff is entitled to recover of the defendant the sum of $7,840, and a counsel fee of $1,000; that the defendant pay to her permanent alimony at the rate of $80 a week from the date of the decree, and that he give security for the payment of the several sums directed by the decree to be paid; and further provided, upon his failure to comply with the decree, that application might be made for sequestration proceedings, for a receivership, and for an injunction. The complaint also asked to have enforced an order, made subsequently to the final decree, which appointed a receiver, and enjoined the defendant from disposing of his property, etc. The plaintiff and the defendant were married in the state of New Jersey in 1884, and were domiciled there. In 1892 the plaintiff filed her petition in chancery in that state, which alleged, among other things, desertion by her husband, and cruel treatment, and prayed that she might be divorced from him, and that reasonable alimony might be decreed to be paid to her. The defendant was not served personally, but by publication of process, and did not appear in the action, nor answer the petition. Thereafter such proceedings were had in the case that in 1893 a final decree was made, divorcing the petitioner from the defendant upon the ground of his wilful and continued desertion, but containing no provision with respect to alimony. In 1896 the plaintiff filed a petition upon affidavits for the amendment of the decree of divorce so as to provide for an award of alimony. The grounds of the application were that, though her petition in the divorce proceedings prayed for alimony, through the inadvertence tence or neglect of her solicitor the decree was entered without making provision adjudging the payment of alimony, or reserving the consideration thereof for hearing upon a future application. An order was granted by the chancellor directing the defendant to show cause why the petition should not be granted, which, with the moving papers, was personally served upon the defendant in this state. The defendant appeared in opposition to the application by J. Herbert Potts as his solicitor, and without any reservation upon the record as to the appearance. He filed an affidavit, in which he alleged that his residence was in the state of New York; that he "was, by the decree of this court, divorced from the said petitioner from the bond of matrimony, upon her petition, on August 7, 1893, and that since that time he has been married again to another woman, with whom he is now living," etc.; that "the decree for divorce was purposely drawn without providing for or reserving any alimony," etc.; that he was "financially unable to pay alimony;" and "that he is advised by counsel and believes that, the said decree having been made without reserving the question of alimony, and this defendant having been absolutely divorced from the said petitioner by said decree, and having since formed new relations and matrimonial obligations, that it would be illegal, inequitable, and unjust to now impose upon him the burden of alimony, so long after the granting of said absolute decree dissolving his first matrimonial relations absolutely without terms." After testimony had been taken pursuant to an order of the chancellor, during the course of which Mr. Potts appeared as defendant's solicitor, and after argument upon the same by the solicitor for the petitioner and the solicitor for the defendant, the chancellor ordered that the decree of divorce theretofore made should be amended by inserting therein that "it is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the petitioner, Mary W. Lynde, shall have the right to apply to this court at any time hereafter, at the foot of this decree, for reasonable alimony, and such other relief in the premises touching alimony as may be equitable and just; and this court reserves the power to make such order or decree as may be necessary to allow and compel the payment of alimony to petitioner by defendant, or to refuse to allow alimony." It appears in the opinion of the chancellor, which is made a part of the record (54 N. J. Eq. 473, 35 Atl. 641), that he was satisfied that the omission of the decree to reserve the question as to alimony was due to the inadvertence of the petitioner's counsel, and that under the rule recognized by the court it will "amend its enrolled decree when the amendment is necessary to give full expression to its judgment." From the order amending the decree of divorce the defendant appealed to the court of errors and appeals, where the order was affirmed. 39 Atl. 1114. Thereupon, after reciting the various proceedings relating to the amendment of the decree of divorce, an order of reference was made as to whether alimony should be allowed to the petitioner, and, if so, how much. This order was entered after service of a notice upon the defendant's solicitor, and the reference was proceeded with after personal service upon the defendant of a summons to attend. Neither the defendant nor his solicitor appeared upon the reference, although duly notified, and such proceedings were had that the final decree herein sued upon was made on December 23, 1897, by the chancellor, which, after reciting the proceedings had, and the report of the master to whom it had been referred to report as to alimony, and "adjudging that a money judgment should be rendered against the defendant," adjudged and decreed as first hereinabove briefly described. Thereafter, upon proof of the failure of the defendant to comply with the final decree, an order dated February 8, 1898 (referred to in the complaint as of "24th day of March, 1898"), was made, appointing a receiver of the defendant's property in New Jersey, and directing the issuance of an injunction, etc. The receiver was unable to obtain possession of any of the defendant's property in New Jersey, and the defendant did not comply with the decree in any respect. The trial court decided that the plaintiff was entitled to a judgment against the defendant enforcing against him the decree of the chancery court of New Jersey, and further enforcing against him the order of that court which provided for the enforcement of the decree by the appointment of a receiver and by an injunction. She was held entitled to judgment against the defendant for the amount of alimony, counsel fees, and costs due or incurred under the New Jersey decree; for the amount of alimony accrued since the decree; that he pay to her the sum of $80 a week from the date of the decision as and for permanent alimony; that he give a bond in the sum of $100,000 to secure the payment of the several sums of money specified; and that, upon his failure to comply with the provisions of the decision, a receiver might be appointed, ancillary to the receiver appointed by the court of chancery of New Jersey. Exceptions were filed to the decision, and thereafter judgment was entered in conformity with the decision. The appellate division, upon the defendant's appeal, modified the judgment so as to adjudge that the plaintiff recover of the defendant the sum of $8,840, and, as so modified, affirmed it. 41 App. Div. 280, 58 N. Y. Supp. 567. The amount of the recovery, as allowed by the appellate division, represents the only and the precise amount of money which the final decree of the court in New Jersey adjudged to be due and payable from the defendant to the plaintiff at the date of its rendition. Cross-appeals were taken by the parties from the judgment of the appellate division; the plaintiff because of its modification, and the defendant because of its affirmance, of the judgment of the trial court.

Messrs. Henry B. Gayley and Matthew C. Fleming, with Mr. James Westervelt, for plaintiff:

The chancery decree awarding alimony has the same effect in New Jersey as a judgment at law in personam.

Aspinwall v. Aspinwall, 53 N. J. Eq. 684, 35 Atl. 470.

Defendant's solicitor, Potts, was authorized to appear generally on the application for alimony, and he did so.

Lynde v. Lynde, 54 N. J. Eq. 473, 35 Atl. 641, Affirmed in 55 N. J. Eq. 591, 35 Atl. 641; Crane v. Brigham, 11 N. J. Eq. 29.

A decree of divorce and a subsequent order fixing alimony pursuant to a reservation in the decree are both parts of one action, no matter how many years may intervene, and jurisdiction having once attached in the cause, the court can provide for alimony whenever it becomes necessary.

Forrest v. Forrest, 25 N. Y. 501; Galusha v. Galusha, 138 N. Y. 272, 33 N. E. 1062; Hauscheld v. Hauscheld, 33 App. Div. 296, 53 N. Y. Supp. 831.

Where a court of equity has jurisdiction and entertains a case it will ordinarily retain the case until the whole subject is disposed of.

Ostrander v. Weber, 114 N. Y. 95, 21 N. E. 112; Taylor v. Taylor, 43 N. Y. 578; Henderson v. New York C. R. Co. 78 N. Y. 423; Lynch v. Metropolitan Elev. R. Co. 129 N. Y. 274, 15 L. R. A. 287, 29 N. E. 315; Madison Ave. Baptist Church v. Baptist Church, 73 N. Y. 82.

Where a state court has obtained jurisdiction of the subject-matter, and of defendant's person, any error arising thereafter is an irregularity, and can be taken advantage of only by way of motion or by appeal. No evidence can be introduced of such irregularity to impeach the judgment in an action brought in another state to enforce it.

Jones v. Jones, 108 N. Y. 415, 15 N. E. 707; Rigney v. Rigney, 63 Hun, 457, 6 N. Y. Supp. 141, 127 N. Y. 408, 28 N. E. 405; Loring v. Rigney, 160 U. S. 531, 40 L. ed. 525, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 366; Nations v. Johnson, 24 How. 195, 16 L. ed. 628; Cornett v. Williams, 20 Wall. 226, 22 L. ed. 254; McNitt v. Turner, 16 Wall. 366, 21 L. ed. 348; Kinnier v. Kinnier, 45 N. Y. 535, 6 Am. Rep. 132; Dunstan v. Higgins, 138 N. Y. 70, 20 L. R. A. 668, 33 N. E. 729.

It is proper to apply summarily by petition to amend or supplement a final decree in equity, without the necessity of again setting the cause down.

Dan. Ch. Pl. & Pr. 6th Am. ed. pp. 991, 996; Campbell v. Gardner, 11 N. J. Eq. 423, 69 Am. Dec. 598; Lynde v. Lynde, 54 N. J. Eq. 473, 35 Atl. 641. Affirmed in 55 N. J. Eq. 591, 35 Atl. 641; Dorsheimer v. Rorback, 24 N. J. Eq. 33; Jarmon v. Wiswall, 24 N. J. Eq. 68.

The Constitution of the United States requires that full faith and credit be given to the decree and order of the New Jersey court.

U. S. Const. art. 4; U. S. Rev. Stat. § 905; Dobson v. Pearce, 12 N. Y. 156, 62 Am. Dec. 48 L. R. A.

152; Fletcher v. Ferrel, 9 Dana, 372, 35 Am. Dec. 143; Cheever v. Wilson, 9 Wall. 108, 19 L. ed. 604; Barber v. Barber, 21 How. 582, 16 L. ed. 226; Shields v. Thomas, 18 How. 253, 15 L. ed. 368; Nations v. Johnson, 24 How. 195, 16 L. ed. 628.

It is proper to file a bill in equity to enforce in all its parts a chancery decree of a sister state.

Bullock v. Bullock, 52 N. J. Eq. 561, 27 L. R. A. 213, 30 Atl. 676; Fletcher v. Ferrel, 9 Dana, 372, 35 Am. Dec. 143; Barber v. Barber, 21 How. 582, 16 L. ed. 226; Shields v. Thomas, 18 How. 253, 15 L. ed. 368; Nations v. Johnson, 24 How. 195, 16 L. ed. 628; Cheever v. Wilson, 9 Wall. 108, 19 L. ed. 604.

The supreme court is the successor of the old court of chancery having general equity jurisdiction, and as such may grant equitable relief independent of the Code.

Youngs v. Carter, 10 Hun, 194; Sherman v. Felt, 2 N. Y. 186, Approved in Wegman v. Childs, 41 N. Y. 159; Shields v. Thomas, 18 How. 253, 15 L. ed. 368; Post v. Neafie, 3 Cal. 22; Pennington v. Gibson, 16 How. 65, 14 L. ed. 847.

A court of equity has power to bring its judgment down to date, and make it conform to the facts as they exist when the judgment is rendered.

Lynch v. Metropolitan Elev. R. Co. 129 N. Y. 280, 15 L. R. A. 287, 29 N. E. 315; Van Allen v. New York Elev. R. Co. 144 N. Y. 174, 38 N. E. 997; Inderlied v. Whaley, 85 Hun. 63, 32 N. Y. Supp. 640; Kilbourne v. Sullivan County Supers. 137 N. Y. 170, 33 N. E. 159.

Mr. John H. Kemble, with Mr. George S. Ingraham, for defendant:

The courts of this state have the right to examine judgments of courts of other states on jurisdictional grounds.

Jacobs, Domicil, § 47; Thompson v. Whitman, 85 U. S. 457, 21 L. ed. 897; Ward v. Boyce, 152 N. Y. 191, 36 L. R. A. 549, 46 N. E. 180; Douglass v. Phenix Ins. Co. 138 N. Y. 209, 20 L. R. A. 118, 33 N. E. 938.

The original basal decree of divorce was and is void as against the defendant for want of jurisdiction.

People v. Baker, 76 N. Y. 78, 32 Am. Rep. 274; O'Dea v. O'Dea, 101 N. Y. 23, 4 N. E. 110; Atherton v. Atherton, 155 N. Y. 129, 40 L. R. A. 291, 49 N. E. 933; Re Kimball, 155 N. Y. 62, 49 N. E. 331.

Notice by publication is not sufficient to lay the foundation for a personal judgment.

Jacobs, Domicil, § 47; Potter v. Ogden, 136 N. Y. 384, 33 N. E. 228; Kilburn v. Woodworth, 5 Johns. 37, 4 Am. Dec. 321; Prople v. Baker, 76 N. Y. 78, 32 Am. Rep. 274; Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, 24 L. ed. 565; Cooley, Const. Lim. 405; St. Clair v. Cor. 106 U. S. 350, 27 L. ed. 222, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 354; Harkness v. Hyde, 98 U. S. 476, 25 L. ed. 237; Owens v. Henry, 161 U. S. 642, 40 L. ed. 837, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 693; Hemietta Min. & Mill. Co. v. Johnson, 173 U. S. 221, 43 L. ed. 675, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 402.

The void decree for divorce will not support a judgment in personam awarding alimony.

Erkenbrach v. Erkenbrach, 96 N. Y. 456; Rigney v. Rigney, 127 N. Y. 408, 28 N. E. 405.

An appearance only in a supplemental proceeding will not render an otherwise void judgment of another state valid.

Ward v. Boyce, 152 N. Y. 191, 36 L. R. A. 549, 46 N. E. 180.

Gray, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

I think that the appellate division has very correctly decided the questions in the case, and the opinion of Mr. Justice Bartlett, speaking for that court, leaves little, if anything, to be added to its reasoning. With respect to the main question—whether the court of chancery of the state of New Jersey acquired jurisdiction over the defendant to render the final decree for the payment of alimony—it is argued in his behalf that the decree of divorce was invalid as to him, and therefore afforded no support for the decree of alimony. That the decree of divorce was of no force as to him cannot be disputed. It is quite settled, at the present day, that no state can exercise jurisdiction and authority over persons or property without its territory. Its laws and the judgments of its tribunals can have no extra-territorial operation, except so far as the former may be allowed such by comity. The decree of divorce which the plaintiff obtained in New Jersey was effectual to determine her status as a citizen of that state towards the defendant, but as to him it effected nothing, and was void for want of personal service of process, or of an appearance by him in the divorce proceedings. One or the other of these conditions was required to be shown to enable the court to proceed with jurisdiction in personam. As the service of process was constructive, by publication, however authorized by the laws of the state, it was ineffectual against the defendant for any purpose. People v. Baker, 76 N. Y. 78, 32 Am. Ren. 274; Re Kimball, 155 N. Y. 62, 49 N. E. 331; Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, 24 L. ed. 565; Story, Conf. L. § 530. This action, however, is upon a final decree of the chancery court of New Jersey, which rendered a money judgment in personam against the defendant in a proceeding in which there was a voluntary appearance on his part. Upon service of the order of the chancellor directing him to show cause why the petition of the plaintiff for the amendment of the decree of divorce should not be granted, he appeared in the proceeding, without any reservation of record, and without making any objection to the jurisdiction of the court. Not only was that so, but in his affidavit which was filed in the proceeding, he asserted that he had been divorced from his matrimonial relations upon the plaintiff's petition: that he had subsequently married again; and his objections to the granting of the plaintiff's petition were carefully formulated. He alleged that "the decree for divorce . . . 48 L. R. A.

was purposely drawn without providing for or reserving any alimony," etc.; that he was "financially unable to pay alimony;" and "that, the said decree of divorce having been made without reserving the question of alimony, and this defendant having been absolutely divorced from said petitioner by said decree, and having since formed new relations and matrimonial obligations, that it would be illegal, inequitable, and unjust to now impose upon him the burden of alimony," etc. In short, he appeared and submitted himself to the jurisdiction of the court, appealing to its consideration of the facts, and not objecting to its power to proceed; not repudiating the divorce, but relying upon it. There cannot be the slightest question that his appearance was general. He was represented by counsel until the order of the chancellor, which amended the decree of divorce by reserving to the petitioner the right to apply at the foot thereof for alimony, and to the court the power to make any further order with respect thereto, had been affirmed by the court of errors and appeals upon his own appeal, and until the application for a reference to determine the amount of alimony. Is he, then, in a position to invoke the invalidity of the original decree of divorce? As he was not personally served, and did not appear in the divorce action, the decree divorcing the plaintiff could not have given her any judgment in personam. It did not reserve the right to apply thereafter for alimony when jurisdiction in personam was obtained of the defendant; but that was an unintentional omission, as the chancellor decided, which was due to the inadvertence of plaintiff's counsel, and would be remedied by amending the decree. The affirmance of the order in that respect on defendant's appeal settled the law of that state to be that the court may, upon petition, amend its enrolled decree, when the amendment is necessary to give full expression to its judgment, and is matter which would, without doubt, have been incorporated in the decree when made, if attention had been called to it. Lynde v. Lynde, 54 N. J. Eq. 473, 35 Atl. 641. The demand for alimony in a divorce suit is not an essential part of the cause of action, but is merely incidental to the action and the judgment. Forrest v. Forrest, 25 N. Y. 501; Galusha v. Galusha, 138 N. Y. 272, 281, 33 N. E. 1002; Lynde v. Lynde, 54 N. J. Eq. 473, 35 Atl. 641. In Kamp v. Kamp, 59 N. Y. 212, the question was not up as to whether the court might amend its judgment granting divorce simpliciter, when the omission to reserve the question of alimony was shown to have been through inadvertence. The application there was for an order directing the payment of alimony upon a judgment of divorce which was silent as to alimony, and it was held that the power to allow it in subsequent proceedings does not exist, in view of the legal presumption that the judgment had finally decided every question involved in the action, which would include the right of the plaintiff to claim alimony.

In my opinion, assuming, as we must, that the decree of the chancery court, which amended the original decree of divorce, expressed the law of the state of New Jersey (Laing v. Rigney, 160 U. S., at page 542, 40 L. ed. 528, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 366), jurisdiction was obtained over the defendant by his appearance, plea, and submission, to so far cure the invalidity of the divorce decree as to render it effective as a basis for alimony proceedings. But, whether its invalidity was cured or not in the subsequent proceeding, to which the defendant was a party, a final decree was entered adjudging that he pay to the plaintiff a certain sum of money. The jurisdiction once obtained could not be defeated by his refusal to appear in the later stages of the proceeding. He cannot now attack the final decree of the court collaterally, after having had his day in court. In Laing v. Rigney, 160 U. S. 542, 40 L. ed. 528, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 366, after the wife had filed a bill against her husband in the court of chancery in the state of New Jersey, alleging acts of adultery, and the defendant had appeared, and answered, denying the allegations, the plaintiff filed a supplemental bill, wherein she alleged that the defendant had committed adultery with a person named since the commencement of the suit, and prayed that she might have the same relief against the defendant as she might if the facts had been stated in the original bill. Process upon the supplemental bill could not be served personally upon the defendant, who was a nonresident, and there was a substituted service by publication. He filed no answer to the supplemental bill, nor did he appear, and a final decree was rendered by the chancellor granting the divorce and awarding alimony, etc. An action was then brought in this state by the wife upon the decree to recover against her husband the amount awarded for alimony and costs, and the question was whether the New Jersey court had jurisdiction to render the decree. In the Supreme Court of the United States, to which the case was taken from this court (127 N. Y. 408, 28 N. E. 405) by writ of error, it was held that, in affirming the dismissal of the plaintiff's complaint upon the trial, due effect had not been given to the provisions of article 4 of the Constitution of the United States, which require that full faith and credit shall be given in each state to the judicial proceedings of every other state. It was conceded that, if the judgment of the court of chancery was not binding upon the defendant therein personally in that state, no such force could be given to it in the state of New York; but it was held that the law of the state of New Jersey must be deemed to be as declared by the chancellor, who had rendered a final decree, based upon the original bill, the process under which had been served upon the defendant within the state, and upon the supplemental bill, a copy of which, with the rule to plead, had been served upon the defendant without the state. It was said that, "so long as this decree stands, it must be deemed to express the law of the state. If the defendant deemed himself aggrieved thereby, his remedy was by appeal."

In other words, the Supreme Court of the United States held that, the New Jersey court having once acquired jurisdiction of the defendant in the action, whether it retained that jurisdiction, so as to render the final decree in the proceedings leading thereto, was a question depending upon the law of that state, which could not be attacked collaterally. Laing v. Rigney is much in point, inasmuch as jurisdiction of the defendant, in this case, having been obtained in the proceeding, it was retained by the court until it made the final decree. The jurisdiction conferred the power to render the decree, and it will be regarded as valid and binding until set aside in the court in which it was rendered. Kinnier v. Kinnier, 45 N. Y. 542, 6 Am. Rep. 132. Ward v. Boyce, 152 N. Y. 191, 36 L. R. A. 549, 46 N. E. 180, has no application. The action was upon a promissory note made by the defendant to the plaintiff's order, and the issue between the parties was as to the plaintiff's ownership. The defendant claimed that the record of a certain proceeding in a justice's court in the state of Vermont was conclusive evidence that the note was not her property, but was that of her husband. The proceeding in the Vermont court was by way of trustee process, and was instituted by a creditor of Mr. Ward, this plaintiff's husband, against him and Boyce, the maker of the note, as his debtor. Ward was a nonresident, did not appear, and judgment went against him by default. Boyce, the other defendant, appeared, and stated that he gave the note to Mrs. Ward for cattle purchased, and he asked that she be cited to appear. A citation was served upon her in the state of Vermont to show cause why the note should not be adjudged to be held as her husband's property by his creditor. She did not appear, and judgment was rendered in conformity with the terms of the citation. We held that the judgment did not conclude Mrs. Ward, because she was not a party to the proceeding, and was cited to appear at a stage of it when she had no opportunity to litigate the fundamental issue. The principal fact had then been adjudged,—that the indebtedness for the cattle, for which the note was given, was owing to the husband,—and this in a special statutory proceeding, in which the court had acquired no jurisdiction by service of any process upon him, or upon his wife, who held the note. When she was cited, it was not that she might contest the validity of the judgment against her husband, but merely to show cause why the note she held should not be adjudged as her husband's property, and to be held by his creditor. I can perceive no resemblance in the principle of the decision in Ward v. Boyce to that involved here. I am satisfied, without further discussion, that the court of chancery in New Jersey had ample jurisdiction to render the final decree now in question against the defendant.

With respect to how far the supreme court of this state will enforce the final decree of the New Jersey court, I think the determinport a judgment in personam awarding alimony.

Eirkenbrach v. Eirkenbrach, 96 N. Y. 456; Rigney v. Rigney, 127 N. Y. 408, 28 N. E. 405.

An appearance only in a supplemental proceeding will not render an otherwise void judgment of another state valid.

Ward v. Boyce, 152 N. Y. 191, 36 L. R. A. 549, 46 N. E. 180.

Gray, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

I think that the appellate division has very correctly decided the questions in the case, and the opinion of Mr. Justice Bartlett, speaking for that court, leaves little, if anything, to be added to its reasoning. With respect to the main question—whether the court of chancery of the state of New Jersey acquired jurisdiction over the defendant to render the final decree for the payment of alimony—it is argued in his behalf that the decree of divorce was invalid as to him, and therefore afforded no support for the decree of alimony. That the decree of divorce was of no force as to him cannot be disputed. It is quite settled, at the present day, that no state can exercise jurisdiction and authority over persons or property without its territory. Its laws and the judgments of its tribunals can have no extra-territorial operation, except so far as the former may be allowed such by comity. The decree of divorce which the plaintiff obtained in New Jersey was effectual to determine her status as a citizen of that state towards the defendant, but as to him it effected nothing, and was void for want of personal service of process, or of an appearance by him in the divorce proceedings. One or the other of these conditions was required to be shown to enable the court to proceed with jurisdiction in personam. As the service of process was constructive, by publication, however authorized by the laws of the state, it was ineffectual against the defendant for any purpose. People v. Baker, 76 N. Y. 78, 32 Am. Rep. 274; Re Kimball, 155 N. Y. 62, 49 N. E. 331; Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, 24 L. ed. 505; Story, Conf. L. § 530. This action, however, is upon a final decree of the chancery court of New Jersey, which rendered a money judgment in personam against the defendant in a proceeding in which there was a voluntary appearance on his part. Upon service of the order of the chancellor directing him to show cause why the petition of the plaintiff for the amendment of the decree of divorce should not be granted, he appeared in the proceeding, without any reservation of record, and without making any objection to the jurisdiction of the court. Not only was that so, but in his affidavit which was filed in the proceeding, he asserted that he had been divorced from his matrimonial relations upon the plaintiff's petition: that he had subsequently married again; and his objections to the granting of the plaintiff's petition were carefully formulated. He alleged that "the decree for divorce . . . 48 L. R. A.

was purposely drawn without providing for or reserving any alimony," etc.; that he was "financially unable to pay alimony;" and "that, the said decree of divorce having been made without reserving the question of alimony, and this defendant having been absolutely divorced from said petitioner by said decree, and having since formed new relations and matrimonial obligations, that it would be illegal, inequitable, and unjust to now impose upon him the burden of alimony," etc. In short, he appeared and submitted himself to the jurisdiction of the court, appealing to its consideration of the facts, and not objecting to its power to proceed; not repudiating the divorce, but relying upon it. There cannot be the slightest question that his appearance was general. He was represented by counsel until the order of the chancellor, which amended the decree of divorce by reserving to the petitioner the right to apply at the foot thereof for alimony, and to the court the power to make any further order with respect thereto, had been affirmed by the court of errors and appeals upon his own appeal, and until the application for a reference to determine the amount of alimony. Is he, then, in a position to invoke the invalidity of the original decree of divorce? As he was not personally served, and did not appear in the divorce action, the decree divorcing the plaintiff could not have given her any judgment in personam. It did not reserve the right to apply thereafter for alimony when jurisdiction in personam was obtained of the defendant; but that was an unintentional omission, as the chancellor decided, which was due to the inadvertence of plaintiff's counsel, and would be remedied by amending the decree. The affirmation of the order in that respect on defendant's appeal settled the law of that state to be that the court may, upon petition, amend its enrolled decree, when the amendment is necessary to give full expression to its judgment, and is matter which would, without doubt, have been incorporated in the decree when made, if attention had been called to it. Lynde v. Lynde, 54 N. J. Eq. 473, 35 Atl. 641. The demand for alimony in a divorce suit is not an essential part of the cause of action, but is merely incidental to the action and the judgment. Forrest v. Forrest, 25 N. Y. 501; Galusha v. Galusha, 138 N. Y. 272, 291, 33 N. E. 1002; Lynde v. Lynde, 54 N. J. Eq. 473, 35 Atl. 641. In Kamp v. Kamp, 59 N. Y. 212, the question was not up as to whether the court might amend its judgment granting divorce simpliciter, when the omission to reserve the question of alimony was shown to have been through inadvertence. The application there was for an order directing the payment of alimony upon a judgment of divorce which was silent as to alimony, and it was held that the power to allow it in subsequent proceedings does not exist, in view of the legal presumption that the judgment had finally decided every question involved in the action, which would include the right of the plaintiff to claim alimony.

In my opinion, assuming, as we must, that

the decree of the chancery court, which amended the original decree of divorce, expressed the law of the state of New Jersey (Laing v. Rigney, 160 U. S., at page 542, 40 L. ed. 528, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 366), jurisdiction was obtained over the defendant by his appearance, plea, and submission, to so far cure the invalidity of the divorce decree as to render it effective as a basis for alimony proceedings. But, whether its invalidity was cured or not in the subsequent proceeding, to which the defendant was a party, a final decree was entered adjudging that he pay to the plaintiff a certain sum of money. The jurisdiction once obtained could not be divested by his refusal to appear in the later stages of the proceeding. He cannot now attack the final decree of the court collaterally, after having had his day in court. In Laing v. Rigney, 160 U. S. 542, 40 L. ed. 528, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 366, after the wife had filed a bill against her husband in the court of chancery in the state of New Jersey, alleging acts of adultery, and the defendant had appeared, and answered, denying the allegations, the plaintiff filed a supplemental bill, wherein she alleged that the defendant had committed adultery with a person named since the commencement of the suit, and prayed that she might have the same relief against the defendant as she might if the facts had been stated in the original bill. Process upon the supplemental bill could not be served personally upon the defendant, who was a nonresident, and there was a substituted service by publication. He filed no answer to the supplemental bill, nor did he appear, and a final decree was rendered by the chancellor granting the divorce and awarding alimony, etc. An action was then brought in this state by the wife upon the decree to recover against her husband the amount awarded for alimony and costs, and the question was whether the New Jersey court had jurisdiction to render the decree. In the Supreme Court of the United States, to which the case was taken from this court (127 N. Y. 408, 28 N. E. 405) by writ of error, it was held that in affirming the dismissal of the plaintiff's complaint upon the trial, due effect had not been given to the provisions of article 4 of the Constitution of the United States, which require that full faith and credit shall be given in each state to the judicial proceedings of every other state. It was conceded that, if the judgment of the court of chancery was not binding upon the defendant therein personally in that state, no such force could be given to it in the state of New York; but it was held that the law of the state of New Jersey must be deemed to be as declared by the chancellor, who had rendered a final decree, based upon the original bill, the process under which had been served upon the defendant within the state, and upon the supplemental bill, a copy of which, with the rule to plead, had been served upon the defendant without the state. It was said that, "so long as this decree stands, it must be deemed to express the law of the state. If the defendant deemed himself aggrieved thereby, his remedy was by appeal." In other words, the Supreme Court of the United States held that, the New Jersey court having once acquired jurisdiction of the defendant in the action, whether it retained that jurisdiction, so as to render the final decree in the proceedings leading thereto, was a question depending upon the law of that state, which could not be attacked collaterally. Laing v. Rigney is much in point, inasmuch as jurisdiction of the defendant, in this case, having been obtained in the proceeding, it was retained by the court until it made the final decree. The jurisdiction conferred the power to render the decree, and it will be regarded as valid and binding until set aside in the court in which it was rendered. Kinnier v. Kinnier, 45 N. Y. 542, 6 Am. Rep. 132. Ward v. Boyce, 152 N. Y. 191, 36 L. R. A. 549, 46 N. E. 180, has no application. The action was upon a promissory note made by the defendant to the plaintiff's order, and the issue between the parties was as to the plaintiff's ownership. The defendant claimed that the record of a certain proceeding in a justice's court in the state of Vermont was conclusive evidence that the note was not her property, but was that of her husband. The proceeding in the Vermont court was by way of trustee process, and was instituted by a creditor of Mr. Ward, this plaintiff's husband, against him and Boyce, the maker of the note, as his debtor. Ward was a nonresident, did not appear, and judgment went against him by default. Boyce, the other defendant, appeared, and stated that he gave the note to Mrs. Ward for cattle purchased, and he asked that she be cited to appear. A citation was served upon her in the state of Vermont to show cause why the note should not be adjudged to be held as her husband's property by his creditor. She did not appear, and judgment was rendered in conformity with the terms of the citation. We held that the judgment did not conclude Mrs. Ward, because she was not a party to the proceeding, and was cited to appear at a stage of it when she had no opportunity to litigate the fundamental issue. The principal fact had then been adjudged,—that the indebtedness for the cattle, for which the note was given, was owing to the husband,—and this in a special statutory proceeding, in which the court had acquired no jurisdiction by service of any process upon him, or upon his wife, who held the note. When she was cited, it was not that she might contest the validity of the judgment against her husband, but merely to show cause why the note she held should not be adjudged as her husband's property, and to be held by his creditor. I can perceive no resemblance in the principle of the decision in Ward v. Boyce to that involved here. I am satisfied, without further discussion, that the court of chancery in New Jersey had ample jurisdiction to render the final decree now in question against the defendant.

With respect to how far the supreme court of this state will enforce the final decree of the New Jersey court, I think the determination of the appellate division to be quite correct. The action was to recover upon a final decree of the court of another state, which, being rendered with jurisdiction over the person of the defendant, is to be deemed conclusive, in so far as it adjudged the defendant to be indebted to the plaintiff at the date of its rendition. The proceeding in chancery had terminated in an unconditional decree that the defendant must pay a definite sum of money, established as a debt against him, and therefore it had extraterritorial value and force. Wharton, Conf. L. § 804. As a debt of record against the defendant, the courts of this state should give it full credit and effect; but as to its other provisions for future alimony, and for equitable remedies to enforce compliance, I do not think we should say that it falls within the rule of the Federal Constitution. I do not think that the courts of this state should give effect to the decree by enforcing any of the collateral remedies which the prevailing party may be entitled to in New Jersey, and which the subsequent order gave to her. So far as it made provision for the payment of alimony in the future, it remained subject to the discretion of the chancellor, and lacked conclusiveness of character. The chancellor's action was not final on the subject. As he observed in Lynde v. Lynde, 54 N. J. Eq. 473, 35 Atl. 641, referring to the law of New Jersey: "The statute exhibits an intention that the subject shall be continuously dealt with according to the varying conditions and circumstances of the parties." The provision of the Federal Constitution which requires that full faith and credit shall be given to the judicial proceedings of another state, in my opinion, should be deemed to relate to judgments or decrees which not only are conclusive in the jurisdiction where rendered, but which are final in their nature. If they, once and for all, establish a debt or other obligation against a party, the record is available in other jurisdictions as a foundation for a judgment there. The provisions of our Code for the enforcement of a direction, in a judgment of divorce, for the payment of alimony, by equitable remedies, pertain only to such judgments as are recovered here. Article 4, chap. 15. The jurisdiction of the supreme court of this state to dissolve a marriage is conferred solely by statute, and its provisions upon the subject of alimony are not available to the plaintiff in aid of her decree. The plaintiff's decree was, therefore, available to her as evidence in this action that the subject-matter of the proceedings leading to its rendition, viz., the liability for alimony, had become a debt of record in the state of New Jersey, which could not be avoided but by plea of nul tiel record. M'Elmoyle v. Cohen, 13 Pet. 312, 324, 10 L. ed. 177, 183.

The case of Barber v. Barber, 21 How. 582, 16 L. ed. 226, cited by the plaintiff in support of her claim that the decree of the New Jersey court should be enforced in all its parts, was not parallel in its facts, and the observations of Justice Wayne, which are 48 L. R. A.

referred to, if intended as supposed, were not necessary to the decision of the particular question. In that case the wife had obtained a judgment of divorce from her husband in the court of chancery of this state, and the final decree awarded her a sum of money representing alimony retrospectively due to her for the interval between the filing of the bill and the rendition of the decree, directed execution therefor, and further, ordered the payment of permanent alimony in the future, during her life, in quarterly payments, which was "vested in her for her own and separate use, and as her own and separate estate, with full power to invest the same, . . . to dispose of the same by will, or otherwise, from time to time during her life, or at her death," etc. The husband then left this state, and went to Wisconsin. A bill was filed there in the United States court by the wife, through her next friend, setting forth the proceedings had in the New York court and the decree, charging the husband with not having paid any part of the alimony adjudged to his wife, and alleging that there was then due to her a certain amount of money on that account. In his answer he admitted the rendering of a decree of divorce after contestation, and that by it he "was subjected to the payment of alimony to the extent and in the way it is claimed in the bill," and alleged that, as he had obtained a divorce from his wife in Wisconsin, she thereby "became a feme sole, and, being so, could not sue by her next friend," etc. The action resulted in a decree, adjudging that a stated amount of money "is due from the defendant upon the alimony sued for," and, upon his default in payment, ordering execution therefor. It will be observed that the situation of the parties was quite other than it is here; that the decree of the New York court was the basis of a bill in equity in the Federal court; and that its finality as an adjudication with respect to alimony past due and in the future (in which latter respect it was made a vested estate in her for life) was admitted by the answer to the bill. It will also be observed that the decree obtained in the United States court in Wisconsin merely adjudged a certain amount to be due complainant which the defendant must pay. The question in the case was stated to be whether the wife might sue in another state, "by her next friend, in equity, in a court of the United States, to carry into judgment the decree;" and much of the discussion proceeded upon the jurisdiction in equity. As to the nature of a decree which awards alimony, it was remarked, in the course of the opinion, that when the court having jurisdiction of the wife's suit for divorce, allows her alimony, "it becomes a judicial debt of record against the husband." As Mr. Justice Bartlett very correctly suggests in his examination of Barber v. Barber, Mr. Justice Wayne, when he further observed in his opinion that the wife might sue her husband in another jurisdiction, "to carry the decree into a judgment there with the same effect that it had in the state in which the decree was given."

could not have intended that she could carry with her judgment into another state the right to any particular remedies for its enforcement, because that would have been in conflict with the rule which he had laid down many years earlier in M'Elmoyle v. Cohen, 13 Pet. 312, 324, 10 L. ed. 177, 183. So far, therefore, as the final decree of the court in New Jersey adjudged moneys to be due and payable to the plaintiff from the defendant, it became a judicial debt of record, which the former was entitled to have enforced by the courts of this state, under the provisions of the Federal Constitution, and a judgment recovered thereupon could be executed only as our laws permit (Barber v. Barber, 21 How. 582, 16 L. ed. 226), which would not include the particular equitable remedies provided by the statute in the chapter on matrimonial actions. So far as the plaintiff's decree provided for methods to enforce payment, its provisions were in the nature of execution, and operative upon the defendant only as he, or property belonging to him, might be found within the jurisdiction of the courts of New Jersey. The subsequent order, dated February 8, 1898, and which is set out in the complaint (but referred to as of March 24, 1898), is not enforceable here, for it was merely an order which sought to carry the final decree into execution within the state by the equitable remedies of a receivership and of an injunction. No action will lie upon such an order. Sheehy v. Professional Life Assur. Co. 2 C. B. N. S., at page 256.

I advise an affirmance of the judgment, without costs.

Parker, Ch. J., and Haight and Werner, J.J., concur. O'Brien, J., not voting. Cullen, J., not sitting.

Landon, J., concurring:

I concur in the opinion of Gray, J., in overruling the defendant's appeal. I would go further, and sustain the plaintiff's appeal. The plaintiff seeks such equitable judgment in this state as shall give full faith, credit, and effect to a decree of the court of chancery of New Jersey awarding her alimony against her husband. The case embraces a Federal question, and the decisions of the United States Supreme Court become authoritative, so far as they are applicable. The question is not whether the jurisdiction of the courts of this state to grant alimony is equitable or statutory, but whether a plaintiff who has obtained a decree for alimony in another state can, in an equitable action in this state, upon sufficient allegations and proofs, not only obtain judgment upon such foreign decree, but also such means of enforcing it as are suited to periodical payments, and the peculiar duty incumbent upon the husband in respect of alimony, which means equity alone can give. Barber v. Barber. 21 How. 582. 16 L. ed. 226, holds that equity has jurisdiction in such a case. In Wood v. Wood. 7 Misc. 579. 28 N. Y. Supp. 154, the court refused to follow the decision, and the appellate division has 48 L. R. A.

adopted the refusal. But the case there was upon a French decree, and no Federal question existed, and the court was not bound by the authority of the Barber Case. It is otherwise here. If equity has jurisdiction, then it can adapt its remedies to the exigencies of the case. This the special term did, and I think did right.

Frederic B. VANDEGRIFT, Respt.,
v.

COWLES ENGINEERING COMPANY et al., Impleaded, etc., Appts.

(161 N. Y. 435.)

1. A general assignment for creditors, made by a contractor, does not abrogate the contract or constitute a breach of it, so as to entitle the other party to take possession of the property on which the work is being done before the expiration of the time agreed upon for performance, although the assignment contains no provisions with respect to the assignee's power to carry out contracts.
2. Taking possession of a vessel which is being built by a contractor before its completion or the expiration of the time therefor, merely because the contractor has made an assignment for creditors, though it might be treated by his assignee as a trespass, may be regarded, instead, at his option, as an acceptance under the contract.
3. One who takes possession of a vessel which a contractor is building is estopped from denying that he has accepted it under the contract, when he could lawfully take it only by accepting it.
4. A penalty which by the terms of a contract is to be paid only by a deduction from the final payment cannot be recovered when no part of that payment has been made.

(Bartlett, Gray, and O'Brien, J.J., dissent.)

(January 9, 1900.)

APPEAL by defendants from an order of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, First Department, reversing a judgment of the New York County Circuit in defendants' favor in an action brought to recover damages for breach of a contract to build a steamboat. Reversed.

Statement by Martin, J.:

Appeal from an order of the first appellate division, reversing a judgment which dismissed the complaint, and granting a new trial. From that order the defendants the Cowles Engineering Company and Vaulx Carter, its assignee, appealed to this court. On the 3d day of March, 1893, the engineering company entered into a written contract with the Interstate Steamboat Company, by which the former agreed to build and complete for the latter a steamboat of the character, dimensions, and speed therein provided, and to deliver the same at a time and place provided in the contract. In consideration thereof the Interstate Company was to pay $50,000 as follows: Ten per cent on the signing of the agreement; 25 per cent when all the steel for the steamer was in the yard and snops of the defendant company, being worked upon; 25 per cent when the steamer was in the frame, and the principal forgings, castings, plates, and tubes for the engines and boilers were in the shops of the defendant company, being worked upon; 25 per cent when the steamer was launched; and the remaining 15 per cent upon its completion in accordance with the agreement. Five thousand dollars of the fourth and $5,000 of the fifth payments were permitted to be paid in the bonds of the plaintiff's assignor, to be made and to become due as therein mentioned, and to be secured by a first mortgage upon property therein described. It was also mutually agreed that in case the defendant company should not complete the steamer on or before the 22d of August, 1893, it should forfeit to the plaintiff's assignor the sum of $100 per day after that date as damages for each day's delay in the completion of the steamer, to be deducted from the amount of the bonds which the plaintiff's assignor might pay on the final payment. It was also agreed that, if the steamer was not completed within two months after the time named, the plaintiff's assignor might accept or reject her upon her completion, and that, if she was rejected, then the defendant company should repay, with interest, all sums paid to it under this agreement. It was likewise agreed that all the time which delay in the completion of the steamer should be caused by strikes of workmen, whether in the works of the defendant company, or in the works where any of the materials or machinery for such steamer were made, or by epidemics, or by the elements, or by delays of carriers, or by other causes beyond the control of the defendant company, should be added to the time fixed for the completion of such steamer, and the time extended accordingly. A bond in the penal sum of $25,000 was executed by the defendant company, and by the defendants Nevins and Tumbridge as sureties, conditioned for the performance of the contract by the defendant company. The latter entered upon its performance, and in August, 1893, the first four instalments provided for, amounting to $42,500, had been paid by the plaintiff's assignor. During that month the defendant company failed, and upon the 30th day of the month it executed a general assignment to the defendant Carter for the benefit of its creditors.

NOTE.—As to right to rescind or abandon contract because of other party's default, see note to Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Richards (Ill.) 30 L. R. A. 33.

Upon the trial the plaintiff proved the contract and specifications, the bond, and an assignment by his assignor to him, which assigned the bond and all the debt and obligation thereby secured; that the plaintiff's assignor executed a mortgage upon its real estate and upon certain personal property to the Camden Safe-Deposit Company, as trustee, to secure its bonds; and that bonds were issued under that mortgage to the amount of $26,48 L. R. A.

000. The plaintiff then proved that his assignor made all the payments required by the contract, except the last; that the boat was launched the early part of August, 1893, was named by the plaintiff's assignor, but was never completed by the defendant company; that when launched she had some decking, her hull, and engines, but no boilers, and there was nothing above the hull; that no offer or tender of the boat to the plaintiff's assignor was made by the defendant company; that there were parts of the boat in the shops of the defendant company, brass works, part of the rudder, tiller wheel, brass fittings for the different parts of the boat, and a number of things; that the boilers, brass fittings, and other things were sold by the sheriff of Kings county, but it was not proved when the sale occurred; that they were not purchased by the defendant company, but were bought by a young man in the office of Parsons, Shepard, & Ogden; that the boat laid at Bush's Wharf, Brooklyn, six weeks, during which time she was in charge of the employees or officers of the Interstate Company, and on the 9th or 15th of October was, by the direction of the president of that company, taken to Philadelphia and completed by direction of the plaintiff's assignor. Briefly stated, this is all the evidence that was given upon the trial.

When the plaintiff rested, the defendants moved to dismiss the complaint upon the grounds: "First. That there is no evidence tending to show that the Interstate Steamboat Company or its assignee, Vandegrift, has sustained any damage by reason of the failure to complete the boat. Second. That it appears that within the time within which, by the terms of the contract, the Cowles Engineering Company was to complete the boat, the Interstate Steamboat Company removed the boat from the possession of the assignee, and deprived him and the Cowles Company of the power of completing the boat. Third. That the removal of the boat within such time, and prior to the expiration of the time for her completion, was an acceptance by the Interstate Steamboat Company of the boat as a completed boat in accordance with the terms of the contract. Fourth. Upon the further ground that there is no evidence of a breach of the contract by the Cowles Engineering Company. On the further ground that he has not shown that the defendant the Cowles Engineering Company was not prevented from completing the boat by strikes." This motion was granted, and the plaintiff duly excepted.

Messrs. Henry W. Goodrich and Jerry A. Wernberg, with Messrs. Shepard & Prentiss, for appellants.

Messrs. Esck Cowen and Robert D. Benedict, for respondent:

By the fair construction of the contract of March 3, 1893, the Cowles Company was to deliver the boat on or before August 22, 1893, unless delayed by "causes beyond the control" of that company.

Where one party to a contract under seal refuses to perform his part, the other may either sue on the contract for damages for the breach, or rescind the contract and recover on assumpsit the money paid, for which he receives no benefit.

American L. Ins. Co. v. McAden, 109 Pa. 399, 1 Atl. 256.

The assignment by the Cowles Company of the subject-matter of the contract to a trustee, with instructions to sell the boat and divide the proceeds among its creditors, thus divesting itself of all title to the boat, and of all right to complete and deliver it, was of itself a breach of the contract, and gave the plaintiff an immediate right of action.

If one party to an executory contract, by his own act, makes the performance of his promise impossible, the other party may at once bring an action for a breach, and is not bound to make a tender, or perform any other condition precedent on his part.

Heard v. Bowers, 23 Pick. 455; Newcomb v. Brackett, 16 Mass. 161; Ford v. Filey, 6 Barn. & C. 325; United States v. Behan, 110 U. S. 339, 28 L. ed. 168, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 81; Reusens v. Mexican Nat. Constr. Co. 22 Fed. Rep. 522; Hawley v. Keeler, 53 N. Y. 114; Woolner v. Hill, 93 N. Y. 576; Burtis v. Thompson, 42 N. Y. 246, 1 Am. Rep. 516; Windmuller v. Pope, 107 N. Y. 674, 14 N. E. 436.

Where a party has a contract to sell and deliver personal property on a future day, and before that day has arrived has sold and delivered the property to another, he is immediately liable to an action at the suit of the party with whom he had first contracted.

Bowdell v. Parsons, 10 East, 359; Crist v. Armour, 34 Barb. 378; Raymond v. Minton, L. R. 1 Exch. 244.

There is a plain distinction between an assignment to an individual, and one to a general assignee in trust, in the case of an executory contract.

Clark v. Dickinson, 74 N. Y. 47; Mandeville v. Reed, 13 Abb. Pr. 173; Woolner v. Hill, 93 N. Y. 576.

Martin, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This controversy is based upon the agreement between the plaintiff's assignor and the defendant company, and the bond given to secure its performance by the latter. To authorize a recovery upon the bond, upon the contract or for the money paid thereon, it was incumbent upon the plaintiff to show that there was something due under the agreement, or that it had been broken by the defendant company without fault of the plaintiff's assignor, and anterior to any breach by the latter. This involves a determination as to the time within which the defendant company was required to complete and deliver the steamer to the plaintiff's assignor. The appellants insist that, in any event, the time for the fulfilment of the contract did not expire until the 22d day of October, 1893, and as there was no proof that the company was not delayed by strikes, epidemics, delays of carriers, or other causes beyond its control, it was not shown that its time did not extend beyond that day. The first clause of the contract relating to the subject provides that the steamer shall be completed on or before the 22d day of August, 1893. If this was all of the agreement relating to the question of time, there would be no difficulty in determining it. But we find two others, both of which relate to, and bear directly upon, the intention of the parties as to the time within which the defendant company was bound to complete and deliver the boat. The first is to the effect that the company should forfeit $100 for each day's delay in completing her after August 22d, and, if she was not completed within two months after that time, the plaintiff's assignor might, at its option, accept or reject her upon completion. From this provision the plain and necessary implication is that the defendant company was to have two months' further time for her completion, although it might be liable to pay the specified penalty for its delay. The next provides that any delays caused by strikes or other conditions mentioned should be added to the time fixed for the completion of the work, and that the time should be extended accordingly. Thus, it is manifest that the time for the completion of the vessel was not fixed absolutely as the 22d of August, so far as the defendant company was concerned. While it may be that the plaintiff's assignor could not have been required to accept the boat and pay the full consideration before that time, yet the provisions of the contract show a clear intent that the defendant company should not be absolutely required to complete her on or before that date. It is true, if it did not it might become liable to pay the penalty prescribed. But this was the only loss or liability to which it was to be subjected until two months after that time, when the plaintiff's assignor might accept or reject her as it saw fit. Thus, prior to October 22d, it possessed no right to reject her, and, consequently, if she was completed in accordance with the contract within that time, it was bound by its agreement to accept her and pay the contract price, less only the penalty which was provided for delay after the 22d of August. Moreover, in case of strikes, epidemics, delays of carriers, or other causes beyond the control of the defendant company, the time of such delays was, by virtue of the contract, added to the time provided for her completion. It is therefore obvious that under the contract the defendant company had at least until the 22d of October within which to complete its work. As there was no rejection of the steamer by the plaintiff's assignor, and no breach of the agreement upon the part of the defendant company by reason of her noncompletion, it follows that the plaintiff's assignor had no right of action at the time it took possession of and removed her. The contract being then in force, the defendant company having broken none of its provisions, the plaintiff's assignor had no right to the possession of the vessel, and the contract was first broken by it when, about six weeks before the 9th of October, it took possession of her, and thus prevented her completion. It is no answer to say that the steamer could not have been completed between the time it was taken and the 22d of October, as there was no proof that it could not have been thus completed, nor that the time had not been extended by reason of strikes, or some other of the causes mentioned in the agreement. The defendant company had the full time given by the contract, of which nearly two months remained, within which to perform it if possible; and the plaintiff's assignor was not authorized to prevent its performance, or its attempted performance, during that time, by the removal of the boat. That the title to it remained in the defendant company until it was delivered and accepted by the plaintiff's assignor, is expressly admitted by the respondent.

While impossibility of performance is, in general, no answer to an action for damages for nonperformance of a contract, provided the contingency was such as the promisor should have foreseen and provided against, yet, if the impossibility arises directly or even indirectly from the acts of the promisee, it is a sufficient excuse for nonperformance. This is upon the principle that he who prevents a thing may not avail himself of the nonperformance which he has occasioned. Dolan v. Rodgers, 149 N. Y. 489, 491, 44 N. E. 167.

Nor was there any proof of a tender of performance by the plaintiff's assignor, or demand that the defendant company should perform the contract upon its part. It is evident from the agreement that the intention of the parties was that the completion and delivery of the vessel, and the payment of the last instalment, should be dependent and concurrent acts. Where, by the terms of a contract, the acts are to be concurrent, it is the duty of him who seeks to maintain an action for its breach, either by way of damages for its nonperformance, or for the recovery of money paid thereon, not only to be ready and tender performance upon his part, but he must demand performance from the other party. Ziehen v. Smith, 148 N. Y. 558, 42 N. E. 1080; Higgins v. Eagleton, 155 N. Y. 466, 50 N. E. 287; Glenn v. Rossler, 156 N. Y. 161, 50 N. E. 785; Benjamin, Sales, 7th ed. § 592; Gazley v. Price, 16 Johns. 267. While there are qualifications to this rule where a formal tender or demand becomes unnecessary, such as a refusal in advance to comply with the terms of the contract, or where its performance is proved to have been impossible, yet they have no application here, as neither of those facts was established upon the trial.

The respondent, however, contends that the general assignment by the defendant company constituted a breach of the contract, and hence this action could be maintained. We do not assent to that proposition. A general assignment does not constitute a breach of a contract with the assignor, by reason of the insolvency which such an act imports. The insolvency of one of the parties to an executory contract of sale is not equivalent either to a rescission or a breach. Pardee v. Kanady, 100 N. Y. 121, 2 N. E. 885. Where the subject of the contract involves no personal relation or confidence between the parties, or the exercise of personal skill or science, and there are no words restraining its assignment, the mere assignment by one of the parties will not operate as a rescission or termination of the agreement. Devlin v. New York, 63 N. Y. 8; Rochester Lantern Co. v. Stiles & P. Press Co. 135 N. Y. 209, 216, 31 N. E. 1018; Wells v. Alexandre, 130 N. Y. 642, 15 L. R. A. 218, 29 N. E. 142. Nor is the rule different where the assignment is for the benefit of creditors. New England Iron Co. v. Gilbert (Metropolitan) Elev. E. Co. 91 N. Y. 153. In the case last cited, where there was a general assignment for the benefit of creditors, it was expressly held that insolvency and the making of such an assignment did not justify the defendant in treating the contract as abrogated, or give cause for rescinding, and did not discharge the defendant from its obligations thereunder. The principle of that case seems to be controlling upon the question we are now considering, unless it is distinguishable from the case at bar. The only distinction claimed is that in the New England Iron Co. Case there was a provision in the assignment which gave the trustees power to make such arrangement and disposition of the company's contracts as they should deem judicious, while no such provision is found in the assignment in this case. Hence, in determining the pertinency and weight of that decision, the question arises whether that provision in the assignment in any way changed its effect. It seems to us not. It in no way changed the rights of the assignees. The same duties were imposed and the same rights existed by virtue of the assignment, independently of that provision, as existed under it. Indeed, if it had changed the character of the assignment, it would, for that reason, have rendered it void. Dunham v. Waterman, 17 N. Y. 9, 72 Am. Dec. 406; Robbins v. Butcher, 104 N. Y. 575, 11 N. E. 272. "It frequently occurs that the assignor had entered into contracts prior to his assignment, which at the date of the execution of that instrument were still incomplete, or, if executed, remained unpaid for. The interest in all such contracts passes, with the rest of the debtor's property, to the assignee; and he may enforce the same against the parties interested in the same manner as his assignor might have done, or may, at his option, go on and complete the contracts, either on his own discretion or under an order of the court, as the case may be." Headly, Assignments, citing Robbins v. Butcher, 104 N. Y. 575, 11 N. E. 272; Van Dine v. Willett, 38 Barb. 319; Collins v. Colmey, 14 N. Y. S. R. 444. In Burrill on Assignments (§ 396) it is said: "Independently, however, of any authority contained in the assignment, the assignee may, in certain cases, continue the business as it has been conducted by the debtor. Thus, where an assignor is conducting a manufacturing business when he makes an assignment, and he has a large amount of material on hand for the purpose of being manufactured, the assignee can conduct the business in his own name, for the purpose of working up the material thus ready for manufacture, where it is manifestly for the benefit of the estate." In Woodward v. Marshall, 22 Pick. 468, 474, it is said: "They [the assignees] of necessity have some discretion in the administration of the trust property. If it be perishable, they are bound to resort to the proper means for its preservation until it can be advantageously disposed of. . . . So, if it be unsalable, by reason of the unfinished state of its manufacture, we can see no reason why it should not be completed and prepared for market. And, in our opinion, the authority here expressly conferred [which authorized the assignees to work up the stock in process of manufacture] would have been implied by law, as necessarily incident to the principal powers granted. Where the estates of insolvent men are liable to be transferred, and that, too, generally, without much discretion in the selection of a propitious opportunity, it will necessarily happen that property of all kinds, and in every stage of preparation for market, will come into the hands of assignees; and, unless they exercise the power of preparing it for market, it will often perish or be sacrificed. Of the propriety and expediency of the measures to be adopted, they must judge in the first instance. Whether they abuse their trust or not may be inquired into in a proper form of action." In Miller v. Mulford, 31 N. J. Eq. 661, it was held that such an assignee might, for the benefit of the estate, complete unfinished contracts of the debtor, provided he exercises reasonable discretion. In Watson v. Butcher, 37 Hun, 391, there was a general assignment for the benefit of creditors, which contained a clause providing that, should it be necessary to the better performance of the trust, the assignee should have full power and authority to finish such work as was unfinished, to complete such buildings as were incomplete, and to pay all necessary charges and expenses for such completion prior to the debts and liabilities of the assignor; and it was there held that this clause gave to the assignee no additional right beyond that which the law gave and imposed, and hence that its insertion in the assignment did not render it fraudulent as to creditors, or require it to be set aside. In Re Carter, 21 App. Div. 118, 47 N. Y. Supp. 383, which was an accounting, to which the plaintiff in the present action, his assignor, and the defendant assignee were parties, this agreement was under consideration. It was there held (1) that the general assignment by the defendant company did not per se constitute a rescission or breach of the agreement now under consideration; (2) that there was no breach of the contract by reason of the failure of the defendant company to complete the boat; (3) that the damages were not liquidated; and (4) that, there having been an omission for four years to present a claim against the assignee, no recovery upon the bond or upon the contract should be allowed on his final accounting. The decision in that case was affirmed by this court without opinion. 155 N. Y. 627, 49 N. E. 1094.

The discretion vested in the assignee in respect to the completion of unfinished contracts is, however, limited and temporary in its nature, and is strictly confined to the time necessary to close out the stock or finish the incomplete business. In the case at bar it evidently would have been to the interest of the estate for the assignee to complete the work, thus becoming entitled to the remainder of the contract price, and at the same time obviating any claim by the plaintiff's assignor for the money paid thereon. Therefore, presumptively, he would have done so but for the interference of the plaintiff's assignor, by which he was prevented from completing the boat. Again, it is obvious that no one, other than creditors, could interfere with the assignee in the disposition of the affairs of the assigned estate; and, if he had the consent of the creditors to complete the boat, his doing so would clearly have been proper, and the plaintiff's assignor would have had no right to prevent its completion by him, if finished within the time provided in the contract. Headley, Assignments, 76. There is no evidence that he did not have that consent, nor that he did not possess the right to perform the contract in behalf of the defendant company and its creditors. Under these circumstances, we are of the opinion that the principle of the case of New England Iron Co. v. Gilbert (Metropolitan) Elev. R. Co. is applicable, and that the assignment did not abrogate the contract between the plaintiff's assignor and the defendant company, or constitute a breach of it. Therefore it was while the contract was executory, and before the time for its completion had expired, that the plaintiff's assignor took possession of the vessel, and subsequently procured its completion. While it may be that the assignee of the defendant company would have been justified in treating such taking as a trespass, he was not required to do so, but might disregard the tort, and regard the taking as an acceptance under the provisions of the contract. It was taken before the period when the plaintiff's assignor had a right to reject it, and there was no proof of any rejection. Therefore, in view of the situation at that time, the taking might well be regarded as an acceptance under the contract. It having paid $42,500, and the defendant company being insolvent, it doubtless regarded it more to its advantage to accept the property in its incomplete condition as a compliance with the contract, than to rely upon the responsibility of the defendant company for the money paid thereon. Having thus taken possession of the vessel, as it could rightfully do only in case it was accepted under the contract, presumptively it was so accepted; and the plaintiff's assignor, after having elected to thus accept the boat, is estopped from insisting to the contrary, and thereby imposing upon the defendant company a liability which might not otherwise have arisen.

The appellants also contend that there was no proof that the plaintiff sustained any damage by reason of a breach of the contract of which he complains. The only proof in the case bearing upon this question was the execution of the contract; the payments made under it by the plaintiff's assignor; that the boat was not fully completed by the defendant company on August 22; that the latter made an assignment for the benefit of creditors on the 30th of August; that the plaintiff's assignor almost immediately took possession of the boat; and that she was subsequently completed under the directions of that company. From this proof, it is difficult to perceive that damages to any amount were established. The plaintiff's assignor having taken the boat with no proof that it was not of a value equal to the amount paid on the contract, or even of greater value, we do not find any evidence which would have justified the court in submitting the question of damages to the jury, even if we were to assume that there had been a breach of the contract upon the part of the defendant company or its assignee, which is by no means permissible, as we have already seen.

If it be said that the proof disclosed a covenant upon the part of the defendant company to forfeit to the plaintiff's assignor $100 for each day's delay after the 22d of August, the answer is that, if it was a provision for a penalty, the plaintiff could recover only the actual damages sustained; but be that as it may, inasmuch as it was not to be paid by the defendant company, except by a deduction of the amount from the bonds of the plaintiff's assignor, which were to be delivered on the final payment of the consideration for the vessel, it is plain that under the evidence the plaintiff could not recover any portion of the penalty prescribed by the contract under the proof in this case.

For the reasons stated, we are of the opinion that the trial court was justified in dismissing the plaintiff's complaint, and that the learned appellate division erred in reversing its determination.

The order of the Appellate Division should be reversed, and judgment of the trial court affirmed, with costs in all the courts.

Parker, Ch. J., and Haight and Vann, JJ., concur.

Bartlett, J., dissenting:

The important chronology of this case is 48 L. R. A.

confined to the year 1893. The Cowles Engineering Company agreed in writing to construct a steamer for the Interstate Steamboat Company for $50,000, to be completed by August 22d. The contract further provided that, if the steamer should not be completed within two months after August 22d, the Interstate Company might accept or reject her upon completion; receiving $100 a day as damages if accepted, and the money paid on contract if rejected. The Cowles Company did not complete the steamer by August 22, and on August 30 made a general assignment for the benefit of its creditors. On or about the 15th of October the Interstate Company took possession of the steamer, towed her into another jurisdiction, and completed the work of construction. The Interstate Company received a bond from the Cowles Company for the faithful performance of the contract, and now seeks, by its assignee of the cause of action, to recover damages. The record discloses that the Interstate Company had paid $42,500 on the contract prior to the general assignment of the Cowles Company, and the question is whether it was damaged after completing the boat. As the complaint was dismissed, the plaintiff is entitled to the benefit of every fact that the jury could have found from the evidence, and to all inferences warranted thereby. The plaintiff's proofs show that the Cowles Company never completed the steamer, and that the Interstate Company did; that the Interstate Company did not take possession until about a week before October 22d; that the steamer was not launched until August, but her boilers were not on board, and there was nothing above the hull; that there were parts of the boat in the shops of the Cowles Company,—brass works, portions of the rudder, the tiller wheel, the brass fittings; that the boilers, brass fittings, and other things were sold by the sheriff of Kings county, and the Cowles Company did not buy them. The fair inference from all this proof, in addition to other facts, is that the steamer was not completed by the Cowles Company or its assignee, and that neither intended to do so; that it would have been impossible to complete the contract during the time between the Interstate Company taking possession and October 22,—about a week. I think the Interstate Company, through the plaintiff, should have been allowed to prove such damages as it had suffered, if any, subject to the defenses the Cowles Company or its assignee might interpose and establish. I favor affirmance.

Gray and O'Brien, JJ., concur.

CONNECTICUT SUPREME COURT OF ERRORS.

PLATT BROTHERS & COMPANY

v.
City of WATERBURY, Appt.

(72 Conn. 531.)

1. A city is responsible for the acts of a board of sewer commissioners within the scope of their authority under a charter which gives the board authority to execute certain powers vested in the city.
2. Sustaining a demurrer to special defenses is not prejudicial error, when defendant has had the benefit on the trial of all evidence that could have been introduced under those defenses.
3. The use of a stream for drainage is unreasonable, when it results in the concentration of filth, and its discharge into the stream in such quantities that it is necessarily carried to the premises of another, where it produces a nuisance dangerous to health and destructive of the value of the property.
4. A prescriptive right to pollute a river in a certain manner does not justify pollution thereof by an additional and different use.
5. There can be no right by prescription to maintain a nuisance by the pollution of a river so as to carry filth and noxious substances to the premises of a lower proprietor, thereby endangering his health and destroying the value of his property.
6. Merely granting to a city authority to construct sewers for the convenience and benefit of its inhabitants does not necessarily make their use a governmental use in the sense that there can be no remedy, unless given by statute, for consequential injuries resulting therefrom.
7. Damage to a riparian owner by noxious and filthy substances deposited on his premises in consequence of the pollution of the river by sewers emptying into it above his land is not a mere consequential damage, but a direct appropriation of his well-recognized property rights which are within the guaranty of the Constitution.
8. Lack of charter authority to condemn the property rights of a riparian owner

- will not relieve a city from liability to make compensation for damage to such rights by the unlawful pollution of a river by sewers.
9. The right of surface drainage into a river does not include the right to discharge into it from sewers such noxious substances and in such quantities that the river cannot dilute them or safely carry them off without injury to the property of lower proprietors.
 10. The pollution of a river by city sewers, though it may become justifiable when done for a public purpose, is subject to payment of compensation for the invasion of the property rights of riparian owners.
 11. The use of city sewers by connecting property therewith does not preclude the owner from recovering damages to his riparian property rights in premises further down the river on account of the pollution of the waters by the sewers, where it does not appear that the damage was due in part to his fault.
 12. An injunction to protect riparian proprietors against the pollution of a river by city sewers cannot be refused because of the possibility of future legislative action respecting a plan of sewerage.
 13. The grant of an injunction will not be disturbed on appeal, unless the discretion of the court was abused.
 14. Evidence that a foreman refused to take charge of premises because of a stench is admissible to prove that fact, though not to prove the fact of the stench.
 15. Evidence that a person refused to work on certain premises because of a stench is not inadmissible because the refusal was made pending an action, although that fact might affect its weight.
 16. Evidence that a city at a special meeting voted not to accept a certain act which provided for its acceptance at a meeting held for that purpose is inadmissible for the purpose of proving the construction of the act.
 17. Evidence of the acts of a city with respect to the construction of sewers is inadmissible for the purpose of showing that it was compelled to build a sewer.

(January 4, 1900.)

NOTE.—Right of municipal corporation to drain sewage into waters.

- I. Introduction.
- II. Statutory authority.
- III. Taking or damaging property.
- IV. Miscellaneous.

I. Introduction.

Whatever may be the rule with respect to surface water, there seem to be no authoritative decisions asserting the right of municipal corporations, merely as riparian owners and without legislative authority, either express or implied, to drain sewage into waters to the injury of others, although there is an intimation to that effect in VALPARAISO V. HAGEN.

The rule that exempts municipal corporations from liability for consequential damages to private property from public improvements does not apply when the act which causes the damages is in excess of the authority of the municipality, or when, although the act is expressly or impliedly within its authority, the infliction of the damages amounts to a taking of property within the constitutional prohibition against taking private property for public use without compensation. Hence, the first question reached in determining the right of a municipality to drain sewage into waters to the injury of others is whether or not the authority to do so has been conferred, either expressly or impliedly, upon the municipality. In England, of course, the inquiry stops here, and if a statute is construed to confer the authority the individual must submit to the injuries necessarily resulting, unless, indeed, the statute itself gives him a remedy; but in the United States, if a statute is construed to confer the authority, the inquiry goes further, and touches the question whether or not the infliction of the injuries amounts to a taking of property in the constitutional sense. If the answer is in the affirmative, the statute affords no protection to the municipality unless it has also been authorized to acquire, upon payment of compensation, the right to inflict such injuries, and has duly pursued such authority.

APPPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for New Haven County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to restrain defendant from casting sewage into a stream on which plaintiff was a riparian owner and to recover damages for injury already inflicted. Affirmed.

Statement by Hamersley, J.:

The amended complaint alleges that the plaintiff is the owner of land and a water privilege on the Naugatuck river, 2 miles south of Waterbury, with manufacturing establishments, dwelling houses, and other buildings thereon, and that the water is conducted in a canal to the manufacturing establishments for the purpose of supplying power; that the plaintiff is entitled to a natural flow of said river in a pure condition; that from about July 12, 1884, to the present time, the defendant has discharged into the waters of said river, above the property of the plaintiff, large quantities of sewage and other noxious substances, which contaminated the waters in the river, and rendered the same noxious and filthy, producing noxious and unhealthy gases, permeating the plaintiff's said buildings; that, by said action of the defendant, the plaintiff has been deprived of all use of the water in said river, except for the purpose of furnishing power, and its manufacturing establishments have been injuriously affected by reason of said noxious and unhealthy gases, and that the value of said land, buildings, and water privilege has been largely diminished; that the plaintiff has duly notified the defendant, and requested it to desist from such defilement of the river, but the defendant has, notwithstanding, continued the nuisance to the present time; that the plaintiff has already been damaged to the extent of $25,000, and the continuance of said nuisance will still more injure and damage its property. The plaintiff claims $25,000 damages, and an injunction against the continuance of said nuisance. The answer of the defendant admits the plaintiff's ownership of the property as alleged, and denies all other allegations. It contained, also, a special defense, setting up certain statutes, and action in pursuance of the same, and alleging that the action complained of is the action of the board of sewer commissioners of the city of Waterbury, and not of the defendant. The plaintiff demurred to this special defense. The court (G. W. Wheeler, Judge) sustained the demurrer, because the statutes referred to show that the board of sewer commissioners was created to act for the city, and had no power except to act for the city, and because the statement of the defense was too inadequate and indefinite to present any other claims. The defendant by leave of court then filed three special defenses, setting up substantially the claims appearing below in the statement of the defendant's claims in the finding of the court. Upon demurrer the court (G. W. Wheeler, Judge) held the defenses insufficient on the ground that the facts which could not be proved under the denials of the answer did not constitute a defense. The case was then tried on the issues formed by the denials of the plaintiff's allegations, and judgment rendered that the plaintiff recover $500 damages, and that the defendant be enjoined against discharging the sewage from its sewers into the Naugatuck river above the premises of the plaintiff, whereby such sewage shall be carried down the river to said premises, during the months of June, July, August, September, and October in each year, from and after the 1st day of December, 1902. The defendant asked that this injunction be modified so as not to prejudice its rights under possible future legislation in respect to a state sewerage commission, and also to include a provision that the injunction should become inoperative whenever the defendant might acquire the plaintiff's property by condemnation. The modification was denied, as unnecessary.

The court (Shumway, J.) made the following findings:

"(1) At the time of the institution of the

II. Statutory authority.

The first question—whether the municipality has authority to inflict the injuries, or rather to do the act which necessarily causes them—is not always easily determined, since the authority may be implied by statutes which do not expressly, or in terms, confer it.

Thus, Richmond v. Test, 18 Ind. App. 482, 48 N. E. 610, and Valparaiso v. Hagen, which uphold the right of municipal corporations to drain sewage into streams, and deny the right of riparian owners whose property is injured thereby either to enjoin the nuisance or recover damages therefor, infer the authority from the general power of municipalities to construct sewers and outlets in connection with the fact that the stream affords the only practicable outlet or is the natural drainage way.

In Joplin Consol. Min. Co. v. Joplin, 124 Mo. 129, 27 S. W. 406, infra, the court held that the power conferred upon a city by a statute to establish public sewers along the principal courses of drainage authorized it to so construct a sewer as to discharge into a creek. The court said, however, that it would not pass upon the question whether the city could so exercise such power as to create a public nuisance.

Attwood v. Bangor, 83 Me. 582, 22 Atl. 466, and Merrifield v. Worcester, 110 Mass. 216, 14 Am. Rep. 592, infra, hold that city authorities act in a judicial or quasi-judicial capacity in determining where sewers shall discharge, and that when, in the exercise of their discretion, the sewers are made to discharge into waters, the city is under no common-law liability for the incidental damages.

On the other hand, Valparaiso v. Moffitt, 11 Ind. App. 250, 39 N. E. 909, held a city liable for damages to a riparian owner from the discharge of sewage into a stream, thereby polluting it, upon the ground that the pollution of the stream was declared by statute to be a nuisance, and that a municipal corporation is liable in a civil action for erecting and maintaining a nuisance, the same as a natural person.

When the legislature authorizes a city or town to construct sewers, or to use a natural stream as a sewer, it is not to be assumed that it intends to authorize the city or town so to construct the sewers, or to use the stream suit, and for many years before, the plaintiff, as admitted in the answer to the first paragraph of the complaint, was the owner of the tract of land situated in the town of Waterbury, about 2 miles southerly from the city of Waterbury, with manufacturing establishments, dwelling houses, and other buildings thereon, through which said land flowed the Naugatuck river. On the said lands of the plaintiff there was a valuable water privilege, from which water was conducted in an artificial canal to the several manufacturing establishments of the plaintiff for the purpose of supplying water therein.

"(2) Under an amendment to the charter of the city of Waterbury (9 Spec. Laws, pp. 233-237), and in accordance with the provisions thereof, the city of Waterbury, by the board of sewer commissioners, began the construction of sewers in said city in 1883, according to a sewerage system by which the contents of the sewers were all discharged into the Naugatuck river at points about 2 miles above the manufacturing establishments of the plaintiff.

"(3) The place where said manufacturing establishments were carried on always has been, and is now, known as 'Platt's Mills.' At that place there has been a mill site for about a hundred years, at least; the dam across the Naugatuck river being at the same place, and substantially of the same height, as it was in 1811. It was raised 1 foot about twenty-five years ago. From a pond made by the dam the water has always been taken out by means of an artificial canal, the property of the plaintiff, which carried it down to the said manufacturing establishments, a distance of about $\frac{1}{2}$ mile. About \$150,000, in all, has been invested in the plaintiff's manufacturing establishments at Platt's Mills.

"(4) Prior to the construction of said sewers in accordance with the said sewerage system by the city of Waterbury, the waters of the Naugatuck river at Platt's Mills had contained no substances in sufficient quantity to be annoying to the plaintiff, or injurious to its business or property.

"(5) The defendant commenced to discharge into the Naugatuck river the sewage from said sewers about July, 1884, but it was several years before the plaintiff experienced any special difficulty therefrom.

"(6) No attempt had or ever has been made by the city of Waterbury to agree with the plaintiff as to any compensation to be paid it for any injury to any 'estate, property, right, privilege, or franchise' which might be incurred by it by said use of the Naugatuck river for the discharge therein of the contents of said sewers, nor has any such compensation been made.

"(7) For a considerable period prior to the institution of this suit the plaintiff was very much and specially annoyed and injured, as hereafter stated, in the use and enjoyment of its property, by reason of the sewage discharged from said sewers into the Naugatuck river. It also appeared in evidence that there were other sources of pollution by which the water of the said river was also affected.

"(8) In the early part of the year 1891, and before this suit was brought, the plaintiff requested said city, both through its board of sewer commissioners, whose authority is described in said amendment to the charter of the city of Waterbury hereinbefore referred to, and through its court of common council, to desist from continuing to discharge the contents of such sewers into the Naugatuck river; or, if the city should persist in so doing, that the city should take steps under said amendment to assess damages and compensation to the plaintiff for any injury to their estate, property, right, privilege, or franchise which might or would be incurred by the use of Naugatuck river as an outlet for the discharge of said sewers. Said city of Waterbury neglected to comply with said request in either particular, and has taken no steps as to create a nuisance, unless this is the necessary result of the powers granted. On the contrary, if it is practicable to do the work authorized without creating a nuisance, it is to be presumed that the legislature intends it shall be so done. Morse v. Worcester, 139 Mass. 389, 2 N. E. 694.

Edmondson v. Moberly, 98 Mo. 526, 11 S. W. 990, held that an action would lie against a city for the impairment of the value of private property near a stream, caused by the pollution of the stream by city sewage discharged into it. This decision rests upon the ground that the authority conferred by the city charter to establish a sewer system was general, and did not expressly indicate and sanction the particular arrangement of drains adopted, and that the power must be regarded as subject to the just limitation forbidding its exercise in such a manner as to create a nuisance injurious to private rights or property, where such consequence is not a necessary result of exerting the power.

Nolan v. New Britain, 69 Conn. 668, 38 Atl. 708, held that the pollution of a stream to the damage of riparian property outside the city was not authorized by a statute which empowers the common council, "whenever in their opinion the public health or sewerage shall require such action, to take, occupy, and appropriate . . . any stream or part of a stream, natural or artificial, running in or through said city." This decision was, in a great measure, induced by the failure of the statute to provide for compensating the owner of such property, the court expressing its opinion that the pollution of a stream to the injury of riparian proprietors amounts to a taking of their property.

So, also, Cator v. Lewisham Bd. of Works, 5 Best & S. 115, 34 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 74, 11 Jur. N. S. 340, 13 L. T. N. S. 212, 13 Week. Rep. 254, denied the right of a district board of works to pollute a private stream flowing through another's land by the discharge of sewage therein. The decision rests upon the ground that the statute did not expressly give the power, and that it would not be inferred by reason of the supposed necessity for discharging the sewage into the stream.

Public works ordered by act of Parliament must be so executed as not to interfere with the private rights of individuals; and in deciding on the right of a single proprietor to an injunction to restrain such interference, the circumstance that a vast population will suffer to prevent the pollution of the waters of Naugatuck river by the sewage discharged into it from said sewers, or to assess such damages.

"(9) In 1854 the population of the city of Waterbury was about 10,000. It was agreed on the trial that its present population is about 42,500. Of late years the population has rapidly increased.

"(10) There are about 32 miles of highways in said city, which it is the duty of said city to maintain in a condition safe and convenient for public travel. For this purpose these highways are drained into the sewers of said city by means of gutters and catch-basins, and thereby a quantity of filth from the streets finds its way into the Naugatuck river, and a further quantity of surface water flows over said highways into Great brook and Little brook, and this is carried into said Naugatuck river.

"(11) The contents of the discharges of said sewers have been, and are, the same as are continually discharged from city sewers containing organic matter capable of decomposition and putrefaction, and, if not further diluted or purified, will putrefy.

"(12) The sewerage system of the city of Waterbury has continually been extended since 1884, and is now being extended as the growth and wants of the city require. The number of sewer connections in January, 1885, was 359; on the 1st of January, 1893, 1,748; on the 1st of January, 1898, 3,046,—extending through about 31 miles of streets. These connections are with manufactories,—some employing 2,000 operatives,—stores, hotels, dwelling houses, etc.

"(13) In consequence of the discharge of the contents of these sewers into the Naugatuck river, the waters of the river in the season of the year when the water was or is low were for a considerable period prior to the commencement of this suit, have been, and are inadequate to properly dilute the sewage, so that the pollution of the waters of the river from such sewage from said city of Waterbury had before the bringing of this suit passed, and ever since has passed, the limits of safe tolerance.

"(14) The accepted rule of safe tolerance is one part of sewage to twenty parts of pure river water. It is found that during the months of July, August, September, and October of the years 1894, 1895, 1896, and 1897 the average ratio of sewage in the waters of Naugatuck river a short distance below Platt's Mills to pure river water has been substantially one part of sewage to about eleven parts of pure river water; and during the months of August and September during said period the average ratio of sewage to pure river water in the waters of Naugatuck river at the same place below Platt's Mills has been on the basis of one part of sewage to about eight parts of river water.

"(15) The flow of water in the Naugatuck river in the dry season of the year varies greatly in different years. The rainfall at Waterbury for a period of years between 1887 and 1897, inclusive, is shown by a table kept by Nelson J. Welton, president of the board of water commissioners for the city of Waterbury for many years, and a civil engineer, which table was offered in evidence by the defendants. While the rainfall of a watershed may not be the most reliable means of ascertaining the volume of water in a river receiving the rainfall of such watershed, yet the varying amounts of the rainfall in different seasons do represent with approximate accuracy the comparative flow of the river, measuring one season with another; and the table of Mr. Welton shows how the flow of water in the Naugatuck river has varied between 1887 and 1897.

"(16) For a considerable period of time before the commencement of this suit, and to an increasing amount ever since, the sewage from said sewers of the city of Waterbury has been carried down the Naugatuck river, has settled in the waters of the pond made by the plaintiff's dam, and in the said

(e. g., by remaining undrained), unless his rights are invaded, is one which the court cannot take into consideration. Atty. Gen. v. Birmingham, 4 Kay & J. 528.

In Lillywhite v. Trimmer, 36 L. J. Ch. N. S. 530, the court denied an application for an injunction to restrain a local board of health from discharging sewage into a river, upon the ground that the plaintiff sustained no material injury; but the court said that it was well settled that, however desirable public improvements may be, if they cannot be effected without interfering with private rights, private rights must prevail, and those who desire public improvements must effect them as best they can without interfering with those private rights.

The disposition of the English courts, shown by the two preceding cases, to deny the statutory authority of municipal authorities to drain into streams so as to create a nuisance, is further illustrated by Atty. Gen. ex rel. Trustees of River Lee v. Metropolitan Bd. of Works, 11 Week. Rep. 820, 1 Hem. & M. 298, 9 L. T. N. S. 139; Atty. Gen. v. Leeds, L. R. 5 Ch. 583, 39 L. J. Ch. N. S. 711, 19 Week. Rep. 19; Atty. Gen. v. Hackney Local Board, L. R. 20 Eq. 626, 44 L. J. Ch. N. S. 545, 33 L. T. N. S. 244; 48 L. R. A.

Atty. Gen. v. Luton Local Bd. of Health, 2 Jur. N. S. 180; Atty. Gen. ex rel. Conservators of River Thames v. Kingston-on-Thames, 13 Week. Rep. 888, 34 L. J. Ch. N. S. 481, 11 Jur. N. S. 596, 12 L. T. N. S. 665; Goldsmid v. Tunbridge Wells Improv. Comrs. 12 Jur. N. S. 308, L. R. 1 Ch. 349, 35 L. J. Ch. N. S. 382, 14 L. T. N. S. 154, 14 Week. Rep. 562; Oldaker v. Hunt, 19 Beav. 485, Affirmed in 6 DeG. M. & G. 388, 1 Jur. N. S. 785; Atty. Gen. v. Cockermouth Local Board, L. R. 18 Eq. 172, 44 L. J. Ch. N. S. 118, 30 L. T. N. S. 590, 22 Week. Rep. 619.

Some of the decisions, while apparently upholding the right of the municipality to drain into waters, make it conditional upon protection of others from damages incident to its exercise. Thus, Bloomington v. Costello, 65 Ill. App. 407, holds that while it is within the power of a city to establish a system of sewerage discharging into a natural watercourse, it is liable, regardless of the question of negligence, for damages caused to a riparian owner, by reason of the pollution and overflow of the water due to the discharge of the sewage into the watercourse.

A city has the right to construct a sewer which discharges into a creek; but if the substances discharged are injurious to the rest-canal leading from the dam to the manufacturing establishments; and in the warm seasons of the years it has putrefied, causing large and numerous patches of foul and offensive stuff to come to the surface of the pond and canal, giving forth offensive odors, and fouling the water to such an extent as that the hands of the plaintiff's operatives, after being in the water for any purpose, would carry away an offensive smell. The deposits from such sewage during all said period both before and since the suit at the bottom of the pond and in the canal, have been deep, and have been a great annoyance to the plaintiff in repairing its dam, in clearing out its canal, especially at its head, and in repairing its wheel pit. The odors from this putrefying sewage in the warm and low-water seasons of the years, both before and since the institution of the suit, have been so strong and offensive as to compel the shutting of the windows of the plaintiff's manufactories, and to make some of the plaintiff's operatives sick with nausea and consequent vomiting, and all uncomfortable; and said odors are likely to cause serious and protracted sickness. Some of the plaintiff's operatives have been unwilling to work at Platt's Mills, because of conditions just described; and, by reason of said conditions, plaintiff has not been able to improve a very large portion of its water power at Platt's Mills, or to improve a large portion of a manufacturing building erected there since the suit, to take the place of one damaged by fire.

"(17) In the conduct of the plaintiff's business at Platt's Mills, a large quantity of pure water for dipping and cleansing its manufactured product is essential. Prior to the introduction of the sewerage system of the city of Waterbury, the plaintiff had been able to use the waters of the Naugatuck river for that purpose. Since said date, both before and after the institution of the suit, the waters of the river have become so foul that they cannot be used for the purpose; and the plaintiff is compelled to take this part of its manufactured product to a branch of its works in the city of Waterbury for the purpose of dipping and cleansing, and return the same to Platt's Mills for finishing.

"(18) The plaintiff has used two different devices for carrying off the accumulation upon the surface of the water: A log or beam was placed at the entrance of the canal, so inclined as to throw the floating substances away from the canal towards the dam. It also constructed in the canal, near the raceway, a box sunk in the water, with an outlet in the bottom. When the canal was full of water, it would flow over the sides of the box, and carry into the box the floating material, and this was conducted in an underground drain into the river. It did not appear from the evidence that any other means could reasonably be adopted, and preserve the full efficiency of the water power.

"(19) The noxious and offensive odors created by said sewage in the manner above stated, and the pollution of the waters of the river by said sewage, are likely to increase with the growth and development of business and population in the city of Waterbury; and, unless such conditions are restrained and prevented, the value of the plaintiff's said premises at Platt's Mills will be diminished, if not substantially destroyed.

"(20) In the year 1868, and from time to time down to the year 1895, by authority of its charter and amendments thereto, the city of Waterbury procured its water supplies from certain streams which are tributaries of the Naugatuck river. Some of these streams flow into the Naugatuck river within the limits of the city, and some without. Two other streams, known as 'Great Brook' and 'Little Brook,' flow through and near the center of the city into said river.

"(21) This water supply has been used by the inhabitants of said city in their residences, stores, offices, factories, hotels, res-dence of a citizen he has his remedy for such damages as he has sustained. Jacksonville v. Doan, 145 Ill. 23, 83 N. E. 878.

Franklin Wharf Co. v. Portland, 67 Me. 46, 24 Am. Rep. 1, held that a city which unreasonably neglected or refused to remove deposits coming from a sewer discharging into a public dock, after they had accumulated in such quantities as to obstruct navigation, was guilty of creating a public nuisance and liable to indictment, and was also liable to an action of tort at the suit of a wharf owner suffering special damages, notwithstanding that the city had a statutory right to construct its sewer so as to discharge into the public dock below low-water mark. This decision rests upon the ground that the statute did not contemplate or include the right to create a nuisance, public or private, which would interfere with the right of navigation, but that the purpose was to enable the city to collect and deposit refuse matter in the public dock, where it would ordinarily be so distributed and dissipated by the elements as not to create a nuisance.

A city authorized by statute to lay out common sewers "through any streets or private lands" may construct them so as to discharge into tide waters, but has no right to discharge mud and filth through the same in such quantities as to create a nuisance, and it may be restrained by injunction from continuing the nuisance, at the instance of the owner of a private dock, the use of which is interfered with thereby. Haskell v. New Bedford, 108 Mass. 208.

A village is liable to the owner of premises near a creek for injuries resulting from the pollution of air and water by the sewage discharged by it into the creek. The decision rests upon the ground that, assuming the lawfulness of the construction and the right to the use of the sewer, such use must not be to the injury of any lawful rights of another. Moody v. Saratoga Springs, 17 App. Div. 207, 45 N. Y. Supp. 365.

Mansfield v. Hunt, 19 Ohio C. C. 488, held, upon the theory that a city had the right to construct its system of sewers with an outlet into a stream or creek, and that there was no fault in the construction either as to plan or in the execution of the work, that it was liable in an action for damages for maintaining a nuisance, to a riparian owner, whose property was injured by the corruption and pollution of the water of the stream.

Where a municipality adopts a stream as an taurants, and for public buildings, and for flushing gutters and watering streets, and for all the various purposes for which city water is ordinarily used, and after so being used has been discharged mostly into the said sewers, and to a limited extent into the natural streams within the city, and thus has found its way into Naugatuck river. The quantity of water so used is about 4,000,000 gallons per day.

"(22) The sewers were constructed under the advice of a skilful and competent sanitary engineer, and of skilful and competent civil engineers. The sanitary engineer was Adolph Herring. He advised the city of Waterbury, in writing, through its board of sewer commissioners and through the court of common council, when the sewerage system of said city was first established, in 1883, that the time would come when the waters of the Naugatuck river would no longer be able to properly dilute the sewerage from the sewers, and that when such time should arrive it would be necessary for the city of Waterbury to take steps to remove the sewage out of the river or to take some other proper measure by which the waters of the river would not be polluted beyond the point of safe tolerance.

"(23) The plaintiff, so far as appears, took no part, one way or the other, concerning the institution of the sewerage system of the city of Waterbury. The officers and directors of the plaintiff company are residents of Waterbury. For more than twenty years it has also owned and occupied a factory located on Great brook, in the city of Waterbury, in which it now employs from 150 to 200 hands. Before the introduction of said sewerage system the refuse from such factory, including the water from water-closets and urinals therein, went into Great brook, directly or indirectly, and thence into the Naugatuck river. Within a year or two after said introduction of said sewerage system, and as soon as the sewer was built in the street on which was the city factory, the plaintiff, in compliance with the ordinances of the city, connected its city manufactory with the sewer, and thereafter no foul water of any kind left said factory except through said sewer.

"(24) Upon trial of the case the following question of evidence arose: Lewis A. Platt, the manager of the plaintiff, testified that, after the burning of a rolling mill at Platt's Mills, the plaintiff was obliged to have a rolling mill at once, and there was no place on the property in the city to put it; and he proceeded as follows: 'And afterwards we put up a building about 150 feet long by 50 feet wide, with the intention of moving various departments from the city mills to Platt's Mills. We did move one department there at first, with some difficulty. Q. What do you mean by 'some difficulty'? A. Well, I mean there was some objection on the part of the people who had charge of it,—the foreman. Q. That is, he worked in that department here in the city? A. Yes. Q. You say some objection. What objection? (Objected to as being hearsay statements.) Court: What he said, you don't care for. Q. There was some objection on their part. I want to know what the objection consisted of, not what they said,—whether it was because of the going out of the city, or what the objection was, or whether it was attributable to this nuisance. That is all. Mr. Harrison: What the gentleman seeks is, apparently, to avoid the rule against hearsay. Then he cannot tell what the party said, but he is going to ask him to tell your honor the substance of what they said. There isn't any difference in the principle. Mr. Alling: Sometimes the very hearsay is admissible. The objection a person gives to doing a certain thing is that he said so and so. If he said so, it doesn't prove that the thing exists, but it shows the objection. It isn't hearsay in the objectionable sense. It is the very thing we want,—what reason did he assign, if any, for not going? It isn't offered to prove that there was a stench open sewer, it is bound to keep open the channel and to remove accumulations of filth, ashes, or other material that obstruct the flow of the water, and throw it out of its banks upon the land of adjoining owners. Blizzard v. Danville, 175 Pa. 479, 34 Atl. 846.

Owens v. Lancaster, 182 Pa. 257, 37 Atl. 858, applied the doctrine of the preceding case to the injury inflicted by allowing offensive and injurious odors and smells to issue from the polluting substances discharged into a stream from city sewers.

Clark v. Peckham, 9 R. I. 455, held that a city had an implied power, arising from the duties imposed upon it in relation to its streets and highways, to construct drains or sewers beneath the surface for the purpose of carrying off the water coming on the streets, but also held that if a drain, either from its improper construction or improper use, creates a public nuisance, the city is liable for damages to one specially injured. In this case the injury to plaintiff was by filling up and pollution of the water of his dock by sewage.

The Lea Conservancy Board v. Hertford, 1 Cababe & El. 209, 48 J. P. 628, held that so long as a public body complied with the requirements of a statute permitting the discharge of sewage into a stream with reference to purification, it was not liable to an action for a nuisance at the instance of a conservancy board intrusted with the management of the river.

O'Brien v. St. Paul, 18 Minn. 176, Gil. 163, holds that a city which by discharging its sewer into a stream conducts to, and empties upon the property of a lower riparian proprietor a greater body of water than the natural flow, to the injury of such owner, is prima facie guilty of creating a nuisance, and if the circumstances exist which would rebut the prima facie character of the act, the city must allege and prove it as a justification in an action against it for damages.

It is not entirely clear whether the cases next cited proceed upon the theory that there was no legislative sanction for the act of the municipality, or upon the theory that the legislative sanction, if there were such, did not protect the municipality because the constitutional guaranty as to property rights had been infringed. Where the constitutional provision prohibits the damaging as well as the taking of private property for public use without compensation, or where the court, as in the principal case, takes the view that the infliction of the damages in question amounts to a taking down there, but it is offered to prove that the foreman wouldn't take charge because of the stench, and that he set up that as a reason. This evidence is in no sense evidence as to condition of the stench. It is evidence as to the reason,—the difficulties that he assigned, and the reasons which other people assigned, for not going to work; the difficulty of establishing a branch of industry where the stench is so severe that the men refuse to go there. Mr. Harrison: If it was a controversy between this company and the men themselves over some issue or other, and this was a material fact, then what the men said would be admissible, because they would be parties. These men are not parties to these proceedings. This evidence is introduced for the purpose of asking your honor to find damages for them in a large amount, and your honor is asked to find and hear what some men said about the stench there, as a reason. Mr. Terry: No, no. Mr. Harrison: The substance of what they said,—the objection they made to going there is necessarily the substance of what they said on the subject. The proper way to prove that is to call the men themselves, and see what they have to say about it, not what they said to this employer; non constat but what they said something else. Perhaps they were trying to push up their wages. Mr. O'Neill: There is another objection. This objection on the part of the man going down there was all after this controversy arose. These new mills were set up here within the last two or three years, and it would be very easy for a person to make out a case,—for a person to make evidence for himself. Mr. Alling: All that is simply to the weight of the testimony. If he can't get workmen to go there on account of the stench, he can't carry on his work, and that depreciates the value of his property. The Court: I am inclined to think you are entitled to the fact, if it is a fact, that you can't get workmen to go there on account of the stench. Mr. O'Neill: It doesn't give us any opportunity to cross-examine the man who made the statement. The Court: I think I will allow the witness to answer the question. Mr. Harrison: I think this fact ought to appear in the record, as to the time when this took place, so that it may appear whether it was after this suit was brought. Mr. Terry: Yes; it was after this suit was brought. But that don't affect the question whether it has injured our property, and prevented us from developing,—whether it has occurred before or after. (Exception by the defense.) Q. You say some objection. What objection? A. The foreman was afraid his health would be injured, and he anticipated difficulty in keeping his workmen together. Q. Well, for what reason? A. On account of the sewage in the river. Q. Whether or not, in fact, you have been prevented by that cause from increasing your plant down there by filling up the unoccupied portion, which you testified to yesterday, of this new factory which you have built? A. Yes; I have attempted to move three departments to that building, and I have met with the same objection. Q. So, if I understand you correctly, substantially half of this new building remains unused at the present time? A. Just about half. Afterwards the plaintiff introduced sundry operatives of the plaintiff in its city factory, who testified that they objected to go down to Platt's Mills to work on account of the offensive nuisance there.

"(25) Franklin G. Newbert was called as a witness by the plaintiff, and testified he was in the employ of Platt Bros. & Company, and had charge of the short-eyelet department. The following question was asked on the direct examination: 'Q. Whether or not Mr. Platt has been to you with reference to moving your department or works down to Platt's Mills? A. Yes; he did. Q. Whether you made any objection to going down, to Mr. Platt? A. I did object. Q. For what reason? A. Because of the smell down there,—in regard to my of property in the constitutional sense, it is not important to determine the question as to legislative sanction, since, even if there be such sanction, it is ineffectual, unless the constitutional provision has been complied with.

A riparian owner has the right to have the water of a stream flow over her land in its natural purity, and such a pollution of the stream by a municipal corporation as substantially impairs its value for the ordinary purposes of life, and renders it measurably unfit for domestic purposes, is an actionable nuisance. Peterson v. Santa Rosa, 119 Cal. 387, 51 Pac. 557.

Equity will enjoin the pollution of a stream by the discharge of city sewage therein, rendering the water unfit for domestic use or for the drink of domestic animals. Dwight v. Hayes, 150 Ill. 273, 37 N. E. 218.

A municipal corporation cannot empty its sewage into a stream of water where the result is the pollution of the stream, and a bill in equity to restrain the nuisance will lie on behalf of any person injured. Bobb v. LaGrange, 158 Ill. 21, 42 N. E. 77.

A city is liable for damages caused by the flooding of plaintiff's lot and the deposit of filth thereon, caused by the discharge of surface water and sewage by the city into a water-course which has not sufficient capacity to carry away the increased amount of water. Noonan v. Albany, 79 N. Y. 470, 35 Am. Rep. 540.

A city which by artificial drainage causes sewage to pollute a stream, rendering its water unfit for use, and covering its banks with filth and unwholesome sediment, creates a nuisance for which it is liable in damages to a riparian owner who is specially injured. Chapman v. Rochester, 110 N. Y. 273, 1 L. R. A. 296, 18 N. E. 88.

A city is liable in damages to the operator of a ferry where it causes a new sewer to be constructed by which it diverts an old water-course from its former channel, and discharges the same together with surface water and drainage just about a ferry slip, which the plaintiff is entitled to enter, whereby the same is filled up and obstructed by sand and dirt. Sleight v. Kingston, 11 Hun. 594.

Dolton v. New Rochelle, 84 Hun. 281, 32 N. Y. Supp. 442, upheld a decree enjoining a city from permitting the outflowing material of a city sewer to discharge into Long Island sound where it would become offensive or injurious to the health or property of, or in any manner health.' It appeared that this was since the bringing of this action, and that the witness had not left the Waterbury factory. The defendant objected to this evidence because it appeared that the witness had not made any objection to going to Platt's Mills until after this action was brought. To the ruling of the court admitting the question, the defendant excepted.

"(26) In March, 1877, the general assembly passed an act concerning the city of Waterbury (8 Spec. Laws, pp. 121-127). By § 11 of said act, it was to take effect when accepted by said city at a special meeting to be duly warned and held for that purpose. The defendant offered to show that, at a special meeting of the citizens of Waterbury held in pursuance of said act, the city voted not to accept the act. The court excluded the evidence, and the defendant duly excepted.

"(27) On the trial of the case the defendant offered to show, from the records of the board of sewer commissioners of the city of Waterbury, the warning of the first meeting of the board of sewer commissioners, for the purpose of organization, signed by the mayor of the city April 17, 1882, for the purpose of showing that the board was organized under the act of 1881, and proceeded to employ engineers, to adopt a plan, and to construct these sewers, acting independently, under authority of the act of 1881. Upon this offer the court said: 'Is it for the purpose of showing that they were compelled to build the sewer?' Mr. Burpee: Yes. The Court: It is ruled out. Mr. Burpee: There are a number of other records for that same purpose. I think this is sufficient for that point.' The defendant duly excepted to said ruling.

"(28) The court found the damages to the plaintiffs to the commencement of the suit to be $500, and rendered judgment for that amount and costs, together with an order and injunction.

"(29) On the trial of the case the plaintiff claimed that the defendant was bound to take its sewage out of the river, so as to prevent its becoming a nuisance to the plaintiff's property, or to assess and pay the plaintiff its damages under the said act of 1881.

"(30) The defendant offered testimony from which I find that the expense to the city of Waterbury in removing said sewage from the Naugatuck river, or of preventing the unreasonable pollution of its waters by reason of such sewage, will be very great, and that such work will take considerable time, and asked that, if an order of injunction was issued, that it be so drawn as not to take effect immediately, nor within a period of three years from date. It is found that a reasonable period for the defendant to remove said sewage from the river, or to otherwise prevent the waters of the river from being unreasonably polluted, would be the 1st of December, 1902.

"(31) The defendant now further objecting that the injunction order should not be so drawn as to prevent the use of the waters of said Naugatuck river for said sewage during the seasons of the year when the flow of the river is full and sufficient for the safe dilution of the said sewage, it is found upon the evidence that such use of said river at the present time is safe, and not injurious to the plaintiff, during the months of the year, except June, July, August, September, and October, and for those months it is unsafe and injurious to the plaintiff, as heretofore stated and described.

"(32) The plaintiff's attorney, to prove the allegations of the fifth paragraph of the complaint, offered to show that he had at one time given verbal notice to the sewer commissioners of the city of Waterbury that they should cease to pollute the waters of the Naugatuck river. The defendant objected on the ground that nothing in the charter of the defendant city authorized the board of sewer commissioners to stop sewer-ing into the Naugatuck river, or to do any-be a nuisance to, plaintiff, who was the owner of a lot bordering on the sound, it appearing that the sewage flowing from the sewer had been deposited upon the flats in front of his property, and that the odors arising therefrom were so offensive that his house became uninhabitable.

A city is not justified in discharging the contents of its sewer into a stream of water belonging to the class designated as "private watercourses," in which the general public have no interest, and the title to the bed of which, together with the use of the water, belongs to the riparian owners. Hooker v. Rochester, 37 Hun, 181.

A city has no right to destroy a natural watercourse by collecting impure drainage and casting the same into it. Butler v. Edgewater, 2 Silv. Sup. Ct. 3, 6 N. Y. Supp. 174.

A perpetual injunction, with at least nominal damages, is justified where a city by a permanent system of sewers collects sewage and empties it into a natural non-navigable stream, whereby the water of plaintiff's millpond is polluted and rendered unfit for use. Schriver v. Johnston, 71 Hun, 232, 24 N. Y. Supp. 1088.

The discharge of sewage into a pond by a city, resulting, not only in pollution of the water, but also in the depositing of offensive matter upon the plaintiff's premises, is a nuisance which will be enjoined. Ibid.
48 L. R. A.

An action may be maintained for damages for discharging the sewage of a city through creeks of adjacent towns to the detriment of lands along such creeks, and an injunction may be granted restraining such use. Hooker v. Rochester, 35 N. Y. S. R. 408, 12 N. Y. Supp. 671.

A city is liable in damages for the pollution of a stream by the drainage of sewage into it, whereby the water of the stream and of springs fed by it is rendered unfit for use, and deposits of filth are left on the banks of the stream at times of overflow. Good v. Altoona, 162 Pa. 493, 29 Atl. 741.

In Albertson v. Philadelphia, 12 W. N. C. 158, and in Martin v. Philadelphia, 26 W. N. C. 120, the court, without writing an opinion, granted injunctions at the instance of property owners restraining a city from draining sewage into streams flowing through their land.

III. Taking or damaging property.

It will be observed that the point of departure of the principal case (which held that a thing else with the sewage except to empty it into such river, and they were not the agents of the city to receive protests or notices, or for any other purpose, except to manage the sewer system of the city in the manner prescribed by the charter of the city. The court admitted the evidence, and the defendant duly excepted to the ruling.

"(33) The defendant claimed (a) that the construction of said sewers was a public, governmental work; (b) that the use of said sewers was a public, governmental use; (c) that the use of said sewers as above described was a reasonable use thereof; (d) that the defendant had the legal right to use its water supply for the purposes and in the manner above described; (e) that the use of said water supply in the manner and for the purposes above described was a reasonable use thereof; (f) that inasmuch as the plaintiff itself had been for a long time, and was still, contributing to the pollution of the Naugatuck river in the same manner as other inhabitants of the city, it was not entitled to either damages or relief by injunction; (g) that the plaintiff, by obstructing the free flow of the water in the Naugatuck river by its dam as above described, caused or contributed to its own injuries, and that it was not, therefore, entitled to any damages, or to injunctive relief; (h) that the injuries complained of and found to exist were and are not direct, but consequential merely; (i) that the charter of the defendant and its amendments do not provide for compensation for merely consequential injuries resulting from the construction or use of said sewers; (j) that the injuries to the plaintiff are not so great as to require the expenditure by the defendant of $1,000,000 or more for relief from plaintiff's present injuries; (k) that the plaintiff is not entitled to damages and to injunctive relief also; (l) that the defendant is not liable for consequential injuries resulting from the construction of its sewers, or the reasonable use thereof; (m) that the construction and maintenance of said sewers by the defendant were authorized by express legislative authority, and that therefore the plaintiff was not entitled to injunctive relief; (n) that, if the plaintiff was entitled to injunctive relief, it is entitled to have the defendant restrained only until the plaintiff's damages have been ascertained and paid; (o) that inasmuch as no evidence has shown that the water in the Naugatuck river was contaminated to a noxious or offensive degree at any time except during the months of July, August, and September in each year, the defendant ought not to be enjoined from the use of the river except during those months. The attention of the court was not called to the claim numbered 'o' until judgment had been rendered in the cause."

The appeal assigns for error the action of the court (1) in respect to certain preliminary motions and the demurrers; (2) in the rulings on the admission of testimony as stated in the finding; (3) in overruling the defendant's claims set forth in paragraph 33 of the finding; (4) in finding the fact stated in paragraph 16 of the finding,—that sewage from said sewers had settled in the waters of the pond made by the plaintiff's dam and the canal leading therefrom, because there is no allegation in the complaint to that effect, and no such issue of fact is raised by the pleadings.

Messrs. Lynde Harrison, John O'Neill, Lucien F. Burpee, and John P. Kellogg, for appellant:

Plaintiffs do not claim that any estate, right, etc., of theirs was taken for the construction of those sewers. They have been injured only by the subsequent use of them. Such injuries are indirect and consequential, and neither the special, nor any other law, makes this defendant responsible for such injuries, if the use of the sewers has been without negligence, unskillfulness, or malice.

Bradley v. New York & N. H. R. Co. 21 Conn. 294; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Lippin-

city was liable to a riparian owner for damages to his property by noxious and filthy substances deposited thereon in consequence of the pollution of the river by city sewers discharging into the same, and enjoined it from continuing the nuisance) from VALPARAISO v. HAGEN (which denied an injunction under similar circumstances) is where the question as to the constitutional provision against taking private property for public use without compensation is reached. The principal case, upon the assumption that the act of the municipality had legislative sanction, held that such sanction was ineffectual because the damages inflicted amounted to a taking of property in the constitutional sense, while VALPARAISO v. HAGEN held, with reference to substantially similar damages, that they did not amount to a taking of property, and, therefore, since the act of the municipality had legislative sanction it was within the protection of the rule exonerating municipal corporations from liability for consequential damages.

The latter decision has the support of a prior decision in the same state. Richmond v. Test, 18 Ind. App. 482, 48 N. E. 610, supra, which held that the destruction of the value of a riparian owner's manufacturing plant by the discharge of city sewage into a stream did not constitute a taking of property within the constitutional provision.

The court in Merrifield v. Worcester, 110 Mass. 216, 14 Am. Rep. 592, which denied the right of a riparian owner to recover from a city damages caused by the pollution of a stream by city sewage, rendering the water unfit for manufacturing purposes, so far as the pollution was attributable to the plan of sewerage adopted by the city, remarked that the right of which plaintiff alleged a violation was not that of acquired property in possession, and was not an absolute right, but a natural one qualified and limited by the existence of like rights in others, and was incident merely to his ownership of land through which the stream had its course. Again it remarked that the detriment consisted in the unfitness of the stream for certain uses in the plaintiff's works, whereby he was deprived of a capacity, incident to the ownership of his land, to make such use of its waters as they passed, and that there was no allegation of damage to his property otherwise than by such depredation; no allegation that a nuisance was created which injuriously affected his land or the occupation thereof. These remarks indicate that there may have cott, 116 Pa. 472, 9 Atl. 871; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Marchant, 119 Pa. 541, 13 Atl. 690.

This act was imposing upon a municipal corporation a great burden in order to protect the public health. Such corporations are created solely for the public good, and are the appropriate agencies to protect the public interests.

Central R. & Electric Co.'s Appeal, 67 Conn. 219, 35 Atl. 32.

By reason of the terms of the act this was a work of which it had no control, but which was in charge of the sewer commissioners, who were public officers, independent of the defendant, and not its servants or agents.

If a workman had been injured by the negligence of these commissioners in the performance of the work, the city would not have been liable.

Jewett v. New Haven, 38 Conn. 389, 9 Am. Rep. 382; Mead v. New Haven, 40 Conn. 74, 16 Am. Rep. 14; Mahoney v. Boston, 171 Mass. 427, 50 N. E. 939.

If evidence of refusal to accept the plan of the legislature had been admitted, the argument would have been very strong, after the passage of the act of 1881, that the legislature had determined to take the matter into its own hands and to force this system upon the city, with all its details. These facts would have put defendant within the reasoning of Jones v. New Haven, 34 Conn. 11.

The carrying power of running water, in streams large enough to be of public use, belongs to the public for all beneficial public purposes, and private ownership is subject to public rights or public use.

The public have a right or easement in such rivers, as common highways, for passing and repassing with vessels, boats, or any water craft.

2 Rolle, Abr. 107; Royal Fishery of the Banne, Davies' Rep. 56, 155, Dub. ed. 1762; Adams v. Pease, 2 Conn. 481; Com. v. Chapin, 5 Pick. 202, 16 Am. Dec. 386; Haskell v. New Bedford, 108 Mass. 214; Brown v. Chadbourne, 31 Me. 18, 50 Am. Dec. 641; Know

v. Chaloner, 42 Me. 150; Carter v. Thurston, 58 N. H. 106, 42 Am. Rep. 584; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Ramsey, 53 Ark. 314, 8 L. R. A. 559, 13 S. W. 931; Weise v. Smith, 3 Or. 445, 8 Am. Rep. 621; Felger v. Robinson, 3 Or. 455; Moore v. Sanborne, 2 Mich. 523, 59 Am. Dec. 209; Stuart v. Clark, 2 Swan, 16, 58 Am. Dec. 49; Lamprey v. State, 52 Minn. 181, 18 L. R. A. 670, 53 N. W. 1139; Barnard v. Sherley, 135 Ind. 547, 24 L. R. A. 568, 34 N. E. 600, 35 N. E. 117.

The Naugatuck river must be classed as a public stream, subject to public rights and public uses.

Public rights in a stream cannot be affected by the enlargement and assertion of private rights in running water.

Brooks v. Cedar Brook & S. C. River Improv. Co. 82 Me. 17, 7 L. R. A. 460, 19 Atl. 87; Hollister v. Union Co. 9 Conn. 443, 25 Am. Dec. 36.

If defendant itself constructed these sewers, it was performing a governmental work, imposed upon it for the public good.

For any damage caused by the performance of such work, or by the manner in which it is performed, there is no remedy unless it be given by statute.

Jones v. New Haven, 34 Conn. 13; Hewison v. New Haven, 37 Conn. 475, 9 Am. Rep. 342; Jewett v. New Haven, 38 Conn. 376, 9 Am. Rep. 382; Bronson v. Wallingford, 54 Conn. 513, 9 Atl. 393; Cone v. Hartford, 28 Conn. 372; Mead v. New Haven, 40 Conn. 72, 16 Am. Rep. 14; Diamond Match Co. v. New Haven, 55 Conn. 510, 13 Atl. 409; 1 Beach, Mun. Corp. § 259; Hooker v. New Haven & N. Co. 15 Conn. 312; Boulton v. Crowther, 2 Barn. & C. 711.

Defendant has made only a reasonable use of its sewers and the waters of the Naugatuck river. For the consequences of such use, the law is now well established that one riparian proprietor is not liable to another.

Merrifield v. Worcester, 110 Mass. 216, 14 Am. Rep. 592; Barnard v. Sherley, 135 Ind. 547, 24 L. R. A. 568, 34 N. E. 600, 35 N.

been in the mind of the court a distinction between a mere injury to the water right and an injury to the land. If the court intended to make such distinction, the decision, though it supports the decision in Richmond v. Test, 18 Ind. App. 482, 48 N. E. 610, supra, does not support VALPARAISO v. HAGEN.

Malone v. Philadelphia, 2 Pennyp. 370, denied the right of the owner of a wharf to recover damages from a city caused by the filling up of the dock at the side of the wharf by sewage from a sewer, which under the authority of statute a city had constructed to the low-water mark of the river. The decision rests upon the ground that a municipal corporation is not liable in an action for consequential damages to private property unless it be given by statute, where the act complained of is done under a valid act of the legislature, and there has been no want of reasonable care or reasonable skill in the execution of the power, although the same act if done without legislative sanction would be questionable.

Among the cases heretofore cited with reference to which it was said that it was not apparent whether the court proceeded upon the theory of a want of legislative sanction or upon the theory of a violation of the constitutional guaranty are several New York cases. The position of the New York courts, which obviated the necessity, in those cases, of choosing between the two alternatives, is well illustrated by Selfert v. Brooklyn, 101 N. Y. 139, 54 Am. Rep. 664, 4 N. E. 321, which held that a city was liable to a property owner whose land was inundated by the overflow from city sewers which were of insufficient capacity. The court said: "It is a principle of the fundamental law of the state that the property of individuals cannot be taken for public use except upon the condition that just compensation be made therefor, and any statute conferring power upon a municipal body, the exercise of which results in the appropriation, destruction, or physical injury of private property by such body, is inoperative and ineffectual to protect it from liability for the resultant damages, unless some adequate provision is contained in the statute for making such compensation. The immunity which extends to the consequences, following the exercise of judicial or discretionary power by a municipal body, . . . presupposes that such consequences are lawful in their character, and that the act performed might in some manner be lawfully authorized. When such power can be exercised so as not

E. 117; Hazeltine v. Case, 46 Wis. 394, 32 Am. Rep. 715, 1 N. W. 66; Middlesex Co. v. McCue, 149 Mass. 104, 21 N. E. 230; Wheeler v. Worcester, 10 Allen, 591; Bainard v. Newton, 154 Mass. 255, 27 N. E. 995; Beach v. Sterling Iron & Zinc Co. 54 N. J. Eq. 65, 33 Atl. 286; Keeney & W. Mfg. Co. v. Union Mfg. Co. 39 Conn. 576; West Cumberland Iron & Steel Co. v. Kenyon, L. R. 11 Ch. Div. 783; People ex rel. Ricks Water Co. v. Elk River Mill & Lumber Co. 107 Cal. 214, 40 Pac. 486; Richmond v. Test, 18 Ind. App. 482, 48 N. E. 610; Valparaiso v. Hagen (Ind.) post, 707, 54 N. E. 1062; Gilbert v. Showerman, 23 Mich. 448.

The plaintiffs are not entitled to an injunction, because they directly and indirectly cause the nuisance of which they complain.

Shepaug Voting Trust Cases, 60 Conn. 587, 24 Atl. 32; Enfield Toll Bridge Co. v. Connecticut River Co. 7 Conn. 49; Bigelow v. Hartford Bridge Co. 14 Conn. 565, 36 Am. Dec. 502; Norwich Gaslight Co. v. Norwich City Gas Co. 25 Conn. 19; Falls Village Water Power Co. v. Tibbatts, 31 Conn. 168; Hawley v. Beardsley, 47 Conn. 571; New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. v. Long, 72 Conn. 10, 43 Atl. 559; Irwin v. Dixon, 9 How. 29, 13 L. ed. 34; Curtis v. Winslow, 38 Vt. 692; Cassady v. Cavenor, 37 Iowa, 300.

No injunction should be decreed in this case while the state of Connecticut, in its sovereign capacity, acting through and by its general assembly, is taking affirmative action to regulate and control the disposal of sewage matter throughout the state.

The courts will recognize the public institutions of the country, and what they are doing.

Oxford Poor-Rate, 8 El. & Bl. 185; United States v. Williams, 6 Mont. 379, 12 Pac. 851.

If a nuisance has been alleged and proved to exist, it is a public nuisance, from which the plaintiff suffered no distinct damage.

O'Brien v. Norwich & W. R. Co. 17 Conn. 375; Seeley v. Bishop, 19 Conn. 135; Blood

v. Nashua & L. R. Corp. 2 Gray, 137, 61 Am. Dec. 444; Brayton v. Fall River, 113 Mass. 218, 18 Am. Rep. 470; Haskell v. New Bedford, 108 Mass. 208; Emery v. Lowell, 104 Mass. 13; Child v. Boston, 4 Allen, 41, 81 Am. Dec. 680; Richardson v. Boston, 19 How. 263, 15 L. ed. 639; Gerrish v. Brown, 51 Me. 256, 81 Am. Dec. 569; Atty. Gen. v. Birmingham, 4 Kay & J. 528; Lansing v. Smith, 8 Cow. 140; State ex rel. Board of Health v. Bergen County Chosen Freeholders, 46 N. J. Eq. 173, 18 Atl. 465.

The city has expended large sums of money for the construction of its system of sewers, which was done with the knowledge of the plaintiff, and with no protest on its part until the money was expended. It was therefore guilty of laches, and to enjoin the defendant would inflict great injuries upon it. Under such circumstances the plaintiffs should be left to their remedy at law.

Fisk v. Hartford, 70 Conn. 720, 40 Atl. 906; Barnard v. Sherley, 135 Ind. 547, 24 L. R. A. 568, 34 N. E. 600, 35 N. E. 117.

Messrs. John W. Alling and George E. Terry, for appellee:

Kellogg v. New Britain, 62 Conn. 232, 24 Atl. 996; Morgan v. Danbury, 67 Conn. 484, 35 Atl. 499; Fisk v. Hartford, 69 Conn. 375, 38 L. R. A. 474, 37 Atl. 983; Nolan v. New Britain, 69 Conn. 668, 38 Atl. 703; Fisk v. Hartford, 70 Conn. 720, 40 Atl. 906; and Watson v. New Milford Water Co. 71 Conn. 442, 42 Atl. 265,—are decisive of the right of the plaintiff to obtain a judgment for damages and a decree of injunction as awarded by the superior court.

See also Wood, Nuisances, chap. 13, §§ 427, 429, 434, 435, p. 500; Noonan v. Albany, 79 N. Y. 470, 35 Am. Rep. 540; Seifert v. Brooklyn, 101 N. Y. 136, 54 Am. Rep. 664, 4 N. E. 321; Cogswell v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 103 N. Y. 10, 57 Am. Rep. 701, 8 N. E. 537; Atty. Gen. v. Leeds, L. R. 5 Ch. 583.

The rights of riparian proprietors in a natural watercourse are not merely an "ease-to create a nuisance, and does not require the appropriation of private property to effectuate it, the power to make such an appropriation or create such nuisance will not be inferred from the grant. Where, however, the acts done are of such a nature as to constitute a positive invasion of the individual rights guaranteed by the Constitution, legislative sanction is ineffectual as a protection to the persons or corporation performing such acts from responsibility for their consequences."

Huffmire v. Brooklyn, 22 App. Div. 406, 48 N. Y. Supp. 132, which held a city liable for ruining oyster beds by the discharge of sewage into public waters under statutory authority, expressly held, upon the authority of Selfert v. Brooklyn, 101 N. Y. 136, 54 Am. Rep. 664, 4 N. E. 321, supra, that such damages amounted to a taking of property.

The fact that sewers are necessary to a city, and that a statute directs that they shall follow as nearly as practicable the natural drainage of the country, does not justify the city in discharging sewers into a stream to the damage of a landowner, without just compensation to him, as required by the constitutional provision against taking or damaging private property without just compensation. SMITH v. SEDALIA.

When the constitutional provision in terms includes the damaging, as well as the taking, of property, it is clear that legislative sanction affords no protection to a city against liability for discharging sewage into a stream to the damage of the property rights of others, unless provision is made for compensation, and it has been so held.

The discharge of city sewage into a creek decreasing the value of land through which the creek runs amounts to a damaging of property within the constitutional provision against taking or damaging private property for public use without compensation; and a statute authorizing the discharge of sewage into the stream affords no protection to the city, unless provision is made for compensation. Joplin Consol. Min. Co. v. Joplin, 124 Mo. 129, 27 S. W. 406.

Butchers' Ice & Coal Co. v. Philadelphia, 156 Pa. 54, 27 Atl. 376, makes a similar decision under a similar constitutional provision, distinguishing the case from Malone v. Philadelphia, 2 Pennyp. 370, upon the ground that in that case the sewer was constructed prior to the Constitution of 1874, which introduced ment or appurtenance, but are inseparably annexed to the soil as parcel of the land itself."

Wadsworth v. Tillotson, 15 Conn. 373, 39 Am. Dec. 391.

It is against all reason and principle to say that a substantial wrong can be done to the property of an individual, and the wrongdoer, no matter how rich and strong he may be, may be justified because it costs more to avoid wrongdoing, than the property of the sufferer is worth. Such a doctrine is abominable, and leads to the destruction of all notions of justice.

Williams v. New Haven, 68 Conn. 263, 36 Atl. 61; New Milford v. Litchfield County, 70 Conn. 435, 39 Atl. 796; Wood, Nuisances, § 435; Suffolk Gold Min. & Mill. Co. v. San Miguel Consol. Min. & Mill. Co. 9 Colo. App. 407, 48 Pac. 828.

Hamersley, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

There is no error in the disposition of the preliminary motions.

The demurrer to the special defense was properly sustained. Under the charter of the city of Waterbury, the board of sewer commissioners is established to execute certain powers vested in the city, and the municipal corporation is responsible for the acts of the commissioners within the scope of their authority. The action complained of in the complaint was the action of the city. West Hartford v. Hartford Water Comrs. 44 Conn. 360, 369.

Sustaining the demurrer to the three special defenses subsequently filed is not ground for a new trial. These defenses contained certain allegations of facts that may be admissible under the issues formed by the denials of the several paragraphs of the complaint. Possibly some of these allegations might have been retained in the answer as explaining the nature of the denials, but, if so, the defendant has not been injured. It has gone to trial on the denial of the facts the words "injured or destroyed" into the constitutional provision.

Tide waters.

SAYRE v. NEWARK, holds that the owner of a dock in a tidal river at a point where the tide ebbs and flows is not entitled to an injunction restraining a city from completing and using a public sewer in process of construction and designed to empty into the river below low-water mark, although such a use of the river will so pollute the water and air in the neighborhood of the dock as to impair its value.

This decision rests upon the ground that the state is the absolute owner of the bed of the stream within the limits of the ebb and flow of the tide, and that the damages to the dock are merely incidental. This case is not opposed to the doctrine of the principal case and other cases heretofore cited, which hold that the damages inflicted upon riparian property by the discharge of sewage into a stream constitute a taking of the property in a constitutional sense. In those cases the bed of the stream was owned by the riparian proprietors, and, thus, there was 48 L. R. A.

stated in the complaint, and it has had the benefit of all evidence that it could have introduced under the special defenses. All claims of law arising on these defenses are also fully presented in the record by the action of the court in overruling the claims of the defendant as to the legal effect of the facts found, and will be considered in disposing of those claims.

The court did not err in overruling the defendant's claims set forth in paragraph 33 of the finding. To understand the precise nature of the questions of law involved, it is convenient to briefly restate the material facts. The plaintiff owned an ancient water privilege on the Naugatuck river, below the defendant city, and also the land on the river, and large manufacturing establishments run by the water power. The river drains a section somewhat thickly populated, and largely used for manufacturing. By this use of the river, reaching back to the early settlement of the Naugatuck valley, its water prior to 1884 had become polluted to a considerable extent, rendering it unfit for the primary use of water. About 1894 the defendant constructed, under authority from the legislature, certain main and lateral sewers, by means of which filthy and noxious substances accumulated by inhabitants of the city were collected and discharged into the river in such quantities that the water was inadequate to dilute such sewage, and the same was carried to the premises of the plaintiff, producing the injuries complained of. Before the construction of the sewers the pollution of the river was not of such a nature as to produce such injuries.

The defendant claims that its use of the river is a reasonable use, and is justified by the fact that the water of the river has been for an indefinite period given up to secondary uses. This claim is substantially disposed of by the court as a question of fact. Whether or not the use of a river by a riparian proprietor is a reasonable use, in view a direct invasion of their property, and not a mere incidental injury when the stream was polluted by sewage, even when there was no noxious matter deposited upon the banks of the stream.

This distinction becomes apparent when the case of SAYRE v. NEWARK is compared with a later decision by the same court in GREY ex rel. SIMMONS v. PATTERSON. The latter case holds that the pollution of a tidal river by the discharge of city sewage therein pursuant to statutory authority, to the damage of riparian property above the limits of the ebb and flow of the tide, constitutes a taking of private property which the legislature cannot authorize except upon just compensation to the parties injured.

Attwood v. Bangor, 83 Me. 583, 22 Atl. 466, denied the right of the owner of a dock in a tidal river to recover damages from a city which discharged its sewage into the river below low-water mark. The decision rests upon the ground that the state had a right to extend its sewer into the river, and that the plaintiff had no remedy growing out of the location of the sewer. The opinion does not discuss the rights of the plaintiff under the constitutional provision, but the distinguish-of the rights of other riparian proprietors, depends largely on the circumstances of each case, and is essentially a question of fact. Keeney & W. Mfg. Co. v. Union Mfg. Co. 39 Conn. 576, 581. The inference of the trial court, from the special facts found, that the city's use of the river is an unreasonable one, is the only inference that can legally be drawn from those facts. The use of a stream for drainage may under some circumstances be reasonable, although the water is thereby rendered unfit for its primary use; but the concentration of the filth accumulated by one proprietor, whether an individual or a municipal corporation, and its discharge into the river in such quantities that it is necessarily carried to the premises of another, where it produces a nuisance dangerous to his health and destructive of the value of his property, must be unreasonable. Morgan v. Danbury, 67 Conn. 484, 493, 35 Atl. 499. If the defendant has, as claimed, a prescriptive right to pollute the river in the manner used prior to 1884, that right does not justify it in further polluting the river by an additional and different use; and the defendant cannot acquire by any prescription a right to maintain a nuisance like that described in the finding. Nolan v. New Britain, 69 Conn. 668, 683, 38 Atl. 703. Its defense therefore must rest wholly on legislative authority.

The main contention of the defendant may be stated in this way: The use of the sewers under authority of the legislature in the manner described is a public, governmental use. The injuries to the plaintiff result from this governmental use, and are not direct, but merely consequential. The victim of consequential injuries resulting from a governmental use is entitled to no remedy unless one is given by statute. The defendant's charter provides no remedy for consequential injuries resulting from the use of said sewers. Ergo the plaintiff has no remedy, and its damage is damnum absque injuria. The premises essential to this conclusion are untrue. A governmental use may include any act which the state may lawfully perform or authorize. There are, however, governmental acts to which certain immunities attach, and it is with this restricted meaning that the phrase is used by the defendant. In this sense a governmental act is one done in pursuance of some duty imposed by the state on a person, individual or corporate, which duty is one pertaining to the administration of government, and is imposed as an absolute obligation on a person who receives no profit or advantage peculiar to himself from its execution. It is the state exercising its governmental power through an agent, who in this matter is the agent of the state, and nothing more. It is to be distinguished from a large class of governmental acts which the state, by way of grant or special privilege, authorizes persons to perform in part for their personal benefit. The principal immunities belonging to a governmental act, in this restricted sense, are: (1) Freedom from personal responsibility for the consequences of the act done. So long as a lawful mandate of the state is faithfully executed, the agent acting within the scope of that authority enjoys the exemption from suit which belongs to the state. (2) Freedom from personal responsibility for the negligence of his servants. The rule of respondet superior does not apply because the agent of the state is not the superior. The real superior is the state itself. The defendant claims these immunities. It may be doubted whether the use of sewers under the charter of the defendant for the collection and disposition of refuse belonging to its citizens is a governmental act, within the definition given. The charter authorized the construction of sewers for that purpose, but no absolute duty was imposed upon the city. Action in pursuance of the authority was at its option, and could not have been enforced by any process of law without further legislation. While sewers or drains for the disposition of surface wa-ing element in SAYRE v. NEWARK, supra, vis., the absence of a direct invasion of, as distinguished from an incidental injury to, the plaintiff's property, also characterizes this case.

Haskell v. New Bedford, 108 Mass. 208, held that a city was liable to the owner of a private dock in tide waters for damages caused by the discharge of sewage into the river. The decision, however, does not rest upon the ground that there was a taking of property in the constitutional sense, but upon the ground that though the right conferred upon the city to lay out sewers "through any streets or private lands" authorized it to discharge sewage into tide waters, it did not authorize it to create a nuisance, public or private, upon the property of the commonwealth, or of an individual, within tide waters.

Bolton v. New Rochelle, 84 Hun. 281, 32 N. Y. Supp. 442, held that a municipal corporation should be enjoined from discharging sewage into tide water; but in this case sewage was deposited upon the plaintiff's property, and thus there was a direct invasion of his property.

Huffmire v. Brooklyn, 22 App. Div. 406, 48 N. Y. Supp. 132, supra, held that a city was liable for ruining oyster beds by the discharge of sewage into tide waters under statutory authority, but here, too, there was a direct invasion of the plaintiff's property.

Butchers' Ice & Coal Co. v. Philadelphia, 156 Pa. 54, 27 Atl. 378, supra, also held that a city was liable for damages to a wharf in tide water caused by deposits from a city sewer; but this decision was under a constitutional provision requiring municipal corporations to make just compensation for property "taken, injured, or destroyed" by the construction and enlargement of their works; and, as already shown, Malone v. Philadelphia, 2 Pennyp. 370, decided when the constitutional provision merely prohibited the taking of property without compensation, denied the right of the owner of a wharf to recover damages from a city caused by the filling up of the dock at the side of the wharf by sewage deposits from a city sewer discharging into the river at low-water mark.

Clark v. Peckham, 9 R. I. 455, supra, held that the owner of a dock could recover damages from a city for the pollution of his dock by sewage from a city sewer discharging into the tide water, but the ground of the decision in this case was the improper construction or improper use of the sewer.

ters collecting in highways may be considered as mere adjuncts of a highway, partaking of its nature as a governmental use (Cone v. Hartford, 28 Conn. 363, 372), it is different with sewers for the disposition of refuse and filth accumulated on private property. The disposition of such stuff is in part for the benefit of the property holder. The city represents in such respects the interests of its inhabitants, and is granted certain special powers, in part for the promotion of their interests. Bronson v. Wallingford, 54 Conn. 513, 519, 9 Atl. 393. It is well settled that there is a clear distinction between those governmental duties imposed upon a city as a mere agent of government, and those governmental powers granted as a privilege primarily for the personal benefit of its inhabitants. But the tests for the demarkation of the two classes of power are not so well settled. When the terms of the statute are clear, they furnish the most reliable test; and some weight, perhaps, may be given to the nature of the power as commonly regarded (Jewett v. New Haven, 38 Conn. 368, 377, 379, 387, 389, 9 Am. Rep. 382; Jones v. New Haven, 34 Conn. 1, 11, 13, 14), care being taken not to clothe an individual with the immunity of the state beyond the necessity of his agency. The distinction must always be in some cases a difficult one to draw. We think it evident that the mere granting authority to a city to construct, for the convenience and benefit of its inhabitants, sewers adapted to carry off their refuse matter to some neighboring stream, does not necessarily make such use of the sewers a governmental use, in the sense indicated. On the other hand, it is also evident that the legislature may impose the duty of constructing sewers in such manner as to make the performance of that duty strictly a governmental act. But if, for the purpose of this case, we concede the defendant's claim that the use is a governmental use, it is nevertheless liable to the plaintiffs. The injury described by the complaint is not a mere consequential damage, like that resulting wholly from the lawful use of one's own property or the lawful exercise of governmental power. It is a direct appropriation of well-recognized property rights within the guaranty of the Constitution. "The property of no person shall be taken for public use without just compensation therefor." Nolan v. New Britain, 69 Conn. 681, 38 Atl. 707. And so the defendant's claim that its charter does not authorize the condemnation of the plaintiffs' property rights is immaterial. Upon a careful examination of the charter as enacted in 1871 (7 Spec. Acts, p. 206), and amended in 1881 (9 Spec. Acts, pp. 233 et seq.), in 1883 (Id. p. 839), and in 1884 (Id. p. 954), and applying the rule which requires a law to be so construed, if reasonably possible, as to give it validity, we think the city is authorized to make compensation, by agreement, or after appraisal, for any private property taken for the purpose of the maintenance and use of the sewers authorized. But, if it were otherwise, the defendant would not be benefited. Its whole defense of acting under lawful state authority would then fail, and the mere finding of the facts alleged in the complaint would clearly support the judgment.

The defendant's brief presents its claim in a form somewhat different from that stated in the finding, and certainly novel in this state. It is substantially this: (1) A riparian city has a right to use the river for surface drainage, and such surface drainage necessarily pollutes the water to some extent, increasing with the growth of the city. (2) The use of these legitimate drains to carry off the noxious refuse accumulated by its inhabitants becomes in time an absolute necessity. (3) The right of surface drainage is thereby enlarged so as to include the right to discharge into the river, by means of these drains, such noxious refuse. Therefore the necessities of municipal growth give to the city a right to convey these noxious substances to the property of down-stream

IV. Miscellaneous.

A city which fails to pay the damages to a lower riparian proprietor from the discharge of sewage into a stream pursuant to a statute authorizing such use of the stream, but making the payment of such damages a condition precedent to the exercise of the right, is liable for any damage it may have caused as if the act had not been passed. Kellogg v. New Britain, 62 Conn. 232, 24 Atl. 998.

Washburn & M. Mfg. Co. v. Worcester, 116 Mass. 458, held that in the absence of any allegation of negligence on the part of the city, either in the mode of discharging the sewage or in omitting to take proper precautions to purify it, a bill for an injunction will not lie in favor of a riparian owner whose property is damaged by the discharge of city sewage into a stream, but that his remedy is under the provisions of the statute for the assessment of damages to parties whose estates are injured.

Cities and towns located upon the shores of lakes or banks of rivers are not absolutely prohibited from emptying their sewage into such lakes or rivers by Ill. Crim. Code, § 277, making it a public nuisance to throw or deposit any offal or other offensive matter into any watercourse or lake, or to corrupt or render unwholesome the water of any stream or lake to the injury or prejudice of others. The opinion, however, makes the right of a city under this section to discharge sewage dependent upon its being rendered innocuous. Walker v. Aurora, 140 Ill. 402, 29 N. E. 741.

A city has no right to discharge sewage into a private canal in such manner as to impede navigation or to create a nuisance, without acquiring the property. Boston Rolling Mills v. Cambridge, 117 Mass. 386.

Watson v. New Milford (Conn.) 45 Atl. 167, held that a town was liable to a riparian owner for the pollution of a stream by the discharge of sewage from school buildings into it creating a nuisance upon such owner's land by the deposit of sewage and sediment thereon.

The act of the municipality in this case is clearly referable to its private, as distinguished from its governmental, functions, and therefore does not come within the rule protecting municipal corporations from consequential damages, since that rule only applies to acts referable to the governmental functions of the municipalities. The principal case suggests a doubt whether the collection and disposition of sewage belonging to its citizens is a governproprietors, and so to appropriate that property for public use without compensation. It is unnecessary now to discuss the limitations to the right of surface drainage, for the second and third propositions are clearly wrong. The right to pour into the river surface drainage does not include the right to mix with that drainage noxious substances in such quantities that the river cannot dilute them, nor safely carry them off without injury to the property of others. The latter act is in effect an appropriation of the bed of the river as an open sewer, and the proposition that it may become lawful by reason of necessity is inconsistent with undoubted axioms of jurisprudence. The appropriation of the river to carry such substances to the property of another is an invasion of his right of property. When done for a private purpose, it is an unjustifiable wrong. When done for a public purpose, it may become justifiable, but only upon payment of compensation for the property thus taken. Public necessity may justify the taking, but cannot justify the taking without compensation. It may be necessary for a city to thus mix with its drainage such substances, but it is not necessary to pour such mixture into the river without purification. Indeed, the purification is coming to be recognized as a necessity. But, however great the necessity may be, it can have no effect on the right to compensation for property taken. The mandate of the Constitution is intended to express a universally accepted principle of justice, and should receive a construction in accordance with that principle, broad enough to enable the court to protect every person in the rights of property thus secured by fundamental law. There are certain apparent, but not real, exceptions to this protection. Emergencies may be such as to justify the taking of property without waiting to provide for compensation. Property may be destroyed without compensation in certain cases, when used unlawfully, or when it has become a thing of danger. But this is not a case of war or conflagration. The plaintiff has not so used its property as to subject it to the harsh police power of confiscation. The plaintiff has certain rights as riparian landowner. These rights are property, within the meaning of our constitutional guaranty, and an invasion of these rights such as the defendant has made is a taking of that property. The legislature has no power to authorize such taking, except for public use, and then only upon providing for just compensation. Kellogg v. New Britain, 62 Conn. 232, 239, 24 Atl. 996; Wadsworth v. Tillotson, 15 Conn. 366, 373, 39 Am. Dec. 391; Harding v. Stamford Water Co. 41 Conn. 87, 93; Nolan v. New Britain, 69 Conn. 668, 681, 38 Atl. 703; Fisk v. Hartford, 70 Conn. 720, 731, 40 Atl. 906; Seifert v. Brooklyn, 101 N. Y. 130, 54 Am. Rep. 664, 4 N. E. 321; Chapman v. Rochester, 110 N. Y. 273, 277, 1 L. R. A. 296, 18 N. E. 88. In England the protection of property from appropriation for public use without compensation does not depend on any fundamental law, but upon inherent justice, and the principle is carefully recognized in all legislation authorizing an infringement of private rights. So the legislative authority for emptying the sewage of cities into watercourses and rivers is coupled with the provision that no nuisance is thereby authorized. Such legislation protects private rights in a manner similar to our constitutional legislation. The city of Leeds, having obtained an act of Parliament for emptying its sewage into the river Aire, claimed that the usual protection was not included in the act, and therefore the city was not responsible for nuisances maintained under an act of Parliament, urging the same plea of necessity pressed in this case. James, V. C., held that the act would not bear the construction claimed, and said he would be bound to put any construction on the act "which would prevent such a monstrous injustice." This decision was affirmed by the mental act, but there are no cases holding municipal corporations liable upon that ground.

Prescriptive rights; license.

The right of a village to pollute the waters of a creek by discharging sewage therein is in the nature of an easement which can be created only by grant or prescription, and a mere oral consent to such pollution vests in the village no right which it is not within the power of the landowner at any time to recall. Dwight v. Hayes, 150 Ill. 273, 37 N. E. 218.

A prescriptive right to discharge sewers into a stream will not arise from the mere fact that they are so discharged for more than the statutory period of prescription, "without objection or hindrance," unless it is shown that the user was under claim of right and exercised adversely, and not with permission. SMITH v. SEDALIA.

The maintenance of private sewers discharging into a stream, causing some pollution, will not be sufficient to create an easement by prescription for the discharge into the stream of a substituted public sewer system which causes much greater pollution of the stream, and thereby creates a nuisance. SMITH v. SEDALIA.

In Bloomington v. Costello, 65 Ill. App. 407, 48 L. R. A.

it was urged that a city had acquired a prescriptive right to maintain the nuisance caused by the discharge of its sewage into a natural watercourse, thereby injuring the plaintiff's property, but the court held that no prescriptive right to maintain a nuisance of a public nature could be acquired.

In Atty. Gen. v. Leeds, L. R. 5 Ch. 583, 89 L. J. Ch. N. S. 711, 19 Week. Rep. 19, the court granted an injunction at the suit of landowners restraining the corporation of Leeds from polluting the river Aire by pouring into it the sewage of her town in an unpurified and undeodorized state, although the sewer had been completed and in operation for sixteen years before the application was made.

There can be no prescriptive right to pollute a stream by the discharge of sewage in such a manner and to such an extent as to be injurious to public health. Even assuming that a prescriptive right to foul a stream with sewage can be acquired, such right must be restricted to the limits of it when the period of prescription commenced; and if the pollution be substantially increased, whether gradually or suddenly, the court will interfere by injunction to prevent the wrongful excess; and if it be impossible to separate the illegal excess from the appellate court, Giffard, L. J., saying: "In construing the act one must always consider that, if it had a different meaning, it would be against common sense." Atty. Gen. v. Leeds, L. R. 5 Ch. 583, 588, 596. The theory of the defendant that the necessities of a city may not only justify the taking of riparian rights, but the taking without compensation, seems to find support in some Indiana cases. Richmond v. Test, 18 Ind. App. 482, 48 N. E. 610; Barnard v. Sherley, 135 Ind. 547, 24 L. R. A. 568, 34 N. E. 600, and 35 N. E. 117; Valparaiso v. Hagen (Ind.) post, 707, 54 N. E. 1062. We do not find other cases that take this extreme ground. The right to compensation cannot be questioned in this state.

The defendant claims that the plaintiff is not entitled to equitable relief, because it contributed to its own injury: (1) By not arranging its dam and canal so as to effectually prevent the accumulation of noxious substances brought down by the river; (2) by using the sewers in the same manner as other inhabitants of the city. The court finds that devices were used by the plaintiff to mitigate the evil, and that "it did not appear from the evidence that any other means could reasonably be adopted, and preserve the full efficiency of the water power," and also finds that the plaintiff owned property in Waterbury which prior to 1884 drained into the Naugatuck river, and that after that date, in compliance with the city ordinances, the plaintiff connected this property with the sewer. These facts fall far short of proving that the nuisance complained of was due in part to the fault of the plaintiff, so that it does not come into court with clean hands.

It appears that some steps have been taken by the legislature looking towards the adoption of a plan of sewerage for the whole Naugatuck valley. The present rights of the plaintiff are not contingent on the future action of the legislature, and there is no public policy which forbids the issue of an injunction to protect its rights because of such possible legislative action. It was plainly unnecessary to incorporate in the order of injunction a provision that it is made subject to the authority of future legislation, or that it should become inoperative if the defendant should hereafter acquire the plaintiff's premises by condemnation.

The claim is made that the court abused its discretion in granting an injunction, under all the circumstances of the case. "The granting or refusal of an injunction rests . . . in the sound discretion of the court, exercised according to the recognized principles of equity." Fisk v. Hartford, 70 Conn. 732, 40 Atl. 910. We think the trial court has acted within the limits of this discretion. The plaintiff cannot initiate proceedings of condemnation, and it is difficult to see how it can obtain adequate remedy except by injunction. We fail to see how any great public mischief will be produced by compelling the city, within the time limited, either to make compensation for the property taken, or to provide proper means for the disposition of its sewage. Under the practice act, the plaintiff was entitled to claim damages for the injury already done, and an injunction against its continuance.

There is no error in the rulings upon evidence. The testimony of Mr. Platt (stated in paragraph 24 of the finding) that his foreman refused to take charge of the premises because of the stench, was not admissible to prove the fact of the stench, but was admissible to prove the fact that the foreman refused to act on that ground. It was offered for no other purpose. Moreover, the fact of the stench was fully established by direct and proper testimony. The testimony of Franklin G. Newbert, that he had refused to work on the plaintiff's premises for a similar reason was not inadmissible because the refusal was made after the action was brought, although that fact might affect its weight. The court properly refused to admit the evidence referred to in paralegal user, the wrongdoer must bear the consequences of any restrictions necessary to prevent the excess, even if it unavoidably extends to a total prohibition of the user. Blackburne v. Somers, L. R. Ir. 5 Eq. 1.

Liability when others contribute to injury.

A city has no right to discharge sewage into a stream when in flowing down the stream it may be brought in contact with other substances, for the presence of which the city is not responsible, in such a way as to work a nuisance, although the sewage before being deposited in the stream was rendered innocuous. Morgan v. Danbury, 67 Conn. 484, 35 Atl. 499.

Manfield v. Hunt, 19 Ohio C. C. 488, held that it was no defense to an action against a city for a nuisance resulting from the pollution of the water of a stream by the discharge of sewage into it, that other persons also contributed to the injury in the same way as the city.

A landowner is not deprived of his right of action against a city for the pollution of a stream by sewage discharged into it by the city because of the existence of obstructions for which neither he nor the city is responsible, 48 L. R. A.

preventing the escape of the objectionable matter. Jacksonville v. Doan, 145 Ill. 23, 33 N. E. 878.

Atty. Gen. v. Leeds, L. R. 5 Ch. 583, 39 L. J. Ch. N. S. 711, 19 Week. Rep. 19, held that riparian owners were entitled to restrain the further pollution of a stream by the discharge of city sewage into it, although it was polluted before it received the drainage from the city.

Negligence

If the damages are not the necessary result of the act which the municipality is authorized to perform, but are attributable to its negligence, the rule that would otherwise protect it against consequential damages does not apply.

Thus, Peck v. Michigan City, 149 Ind. 670, 49 N. E. 800, while recognizing the immunity of the municipality from liability for consequential damages from the construction of sewers in the absence of negligence, upheld a paragraph of a complaint in an action by a dock owner against a city for damages from sewage discharged into the harbor, which proceeded upon the theory that the damages were caused by the negligence of the city.

graph 26. It was offered for the purpose of proving the construction of the act of 1881, and for that purpose was an irrelevant fact. For similar reasons, the evidence referred to in paragraph 27 was properly excluded. The defendant was not injured by the admission of evidence of a verbal notice given to the sewer commissioners (paragraph 32) as notice to the city was duly proved. The complaint charged that the noxious substances committed to the river by the defendant produced certain deleterious effects upon the premises of the plaintiff. It was competent for the plaintiff, certainly in the absence of all objection, to show that this effect was accomplished by the current of the river depositing these substances in the plaintiff's pond and the canal leading to its manufacturing establishment, and the court did not err in finding that fact.

There is no error in the judgment of the Superior Court.

The other Judges concur.

INDIANA SUPREME COURT.

City of VALPARAISO, Appt.,
v.
Herman HAGEN et al.
(.....Ind.....)

1. A city cannot be enjoined from discharging sewage into a stream, when it acts skillfully and in conformity to statute, and the stream constitutes the only natural and reasonably possible line of drainage.
2. Damages resulting to the property of riparian owners by the discharge of city sewage into a stream in a skillful manner, and in conformity to statute, are merely consequential, and give them no right to compensation.
3. The lessening of the value of an estate by destruction of the grass and the creation of some personal discomfort to the owner by the discharge of sewage therein is not such a taking of his property as entitles him to compensation, where the damage results from the discharge of sewage into a stream by a city in a skillful manner and in conformity to statute, since the damage is merely consequential.
4. What the law grants cannot constitute a nuisance per se, either public or private, and, if the law is obeyed, no actionable wrong can result.

(October 25, 1899.)

In Morse v. Worcester, 139 Mass. 389, 2 N. E. 694, the court upheld a bill by a millowner to abate a nuisance caused by the discharge of city sewage into a stream. The decision rests upon the averment of the bill that a city "carelessly, negligently, and unnecessarily so constructed said sewers and drains, and carelessly, negligently, and unnecessarily so discharged the waters therefrom, and so negligently omitted to take reasonable and proper precautions and methods in the construction of said sewers and drains and purification of said waters" that the nuisance complained of was created.

Bidder v. Croydon Local Bd. of Health, 6 L. T. N. S. 778, held that a riparian owner on a river was entitled to an injunction restraining a local board of health from causing or permitting to pass any sewage into the stream to the plaintiff's injury. The decision rests upon the ground that a case of negligence had been established against the board, it appearing that they had failed to deodorize sewage discharged into the river and which polluted the stream, killing fish therein and otherwise causing a nuisance; it further appearing that if

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Porter County in favor of plaintiffs in an action brought to recover damages for the alleged wrongful pollution of a stream of water flowing through plaintiff's premises. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. A. D. Bartholomew, for appellant:

It does not appear from the complaint or the evidence that the appellant failed to construct its sewer system with due skill or care, or that the sewers were negligently operated and maintained, or that there was any malice on part of the appellant in constructing and operating the sewers.

If any damage or inconvenience has resulted, or may result, from the construction and operation of the sewers or the proposed extension, it is only such as is consequential, and must necessarily result from the construction and maintenance of a system to get rid of the sewage of a city.

The law has authorized cities to construct sewers and sewer outlets; the work then is lawful.

For consequential injuries resulting from the construction, maintenance, or operation of sewers, streets, or other public works, in the absence of negligence or of want of due care were taken in the combined preparation and filtration of the sewage matter no damage would be occasioned to the river.

When injunction justified; contempt.

To justify an injunction restraining drainage by a city of its sewage into a stream, evidence that a nuisance is created must be clear and satisfactory, where the nuisance has not been judicially established. Robb v. La Grange, 158 Ill. 21, 42 N. E. 77.

Hutchinson v. Delano, 46 Kan. 345, 26 Pac. 740, merely holds that the apprehended fouling or pollution of a stream in the future by the sewage of a part of a city from sewers which have been legally, scientifically, and properly constructed, but which has not yet taken place, and of which there is no immediate or imminent danger, and which depends upon a contingency that may not happen, does not present a case for an injunction.

Newark Aqueduct Board v. Passaic, 46 N. J. Eq. 552, 20 Atl. 54, 22 Atl. 55, held that a preliminary injunction to restrain a city from constructing public sewers discharging into a care and skill a municipal corporation is not liable.

Richmond v. Test, 18 Ind. App. 482, 48 N. E. 610.

In cities and towns with their numerous inhabitants and diversified business, it would be impossible that the pure streams that flow in from the farm sides should remain uncontaminated; and those that live upon the lower banks of such streams must, for the general good, abide the necessary results of such causes.

Barnard v. Sherley, 135 Ind. 559, 24 L. R. A. 568, 34 N. E. 600, 35 N. E. 117.

The city can only be amenable to the law in case of carelessness, negligence, or malice in the manner of the construction and operation of its outlet, and the court will not indulge the presumption that the city is or will be so guilty.

Elkhart v. Wickwire, 121 Ind. 331, 22 N. E. 342.

There is a presumption in favor of all persons that they will exercise care in the performance of their duties.

Whittaker's Smith, Neg. p. 419; Pennsylvania Co. v. Marion, 104 Ind. 241, 3 N. E. 874.

The case at bar is not to be treated strictly as an action for an abatable nuisance. More accurately, it is an action against the defendant for the construction of a public work under its charter in such a manner as to cause unnecessary damage by the want of reasonable care and skill in its construction. For such an injury the remedy is at common law.

North Vernon v. Voegler, 103 Ind. 325, 2 N. E. 821.

The good of the community forbids that one who occupies such a position as the appellant does should be permitted to arrest the work.

Kincaid v. Indianapolis Natural Gas Co. 124 Ind. 582, 8 L. R. A. 602, 24 N. E. 1066; Peck v. Michigan City, 149 Ind. 670, 49 N. E. 800; Merrifield v. Worcester, 110 Mass.

river, upon the ground that the water supply of another city would be polluted, was properly refused upon the ground that the apprehended pollution had not yet taken place, and was not immediately threatened, and it was doubtful under the proofs whether pollution would be caused in any degree deleterious to the latter city.

In Atty. Gen. v. Gee, L. R. 10 Eq. 131, 23 L. T. N. S. 299, a bill and information filed to restrain a local board of health from discharging sewage into a river was dismissed on the ground that the injury proved was trifling.

In Atty. Gen. v. Halifax, 39 L. J. Ch. N. S. 129, the court granted an immediate injunction restraining a city from increasing the discharge of sewage into a brook, and an injunction to take effect after the expiration of a year restraining the existing discharge unless the sewage should be purified and deodorized. It appearing that the nuisance from the discharge was gradually increasing.

Atty. Gen. v. Richmond, L. R. 2 Eq. 306, 12 Jur. N. S. 544, 35 L. J. Ch. N. S. 597, 14 Week. Rep. 686, 14 L. T. N. S. 398, held that the court would restrain local authorities from allowing any fresh communications to be made with a sewer constructed by their predecessors 48 L. R. A.

216, 14 Am. Rep. 592; Washburn & M. Mfg. Co. v. Worcester, 116 Mass. 458; Stein v. Lafayette, 6 Ind. App. 414, 33 N. E. 912; Hoag v. Vanderburgh County Comrs. 60 Ind. 511, 28 Am. Rep. 654.

Messrs. Agnew & Kelly, for appellees:

If the complaint states that an act is done, which in itself is unlawful, wrongful, or negligent, then it need not be characterized by the word "negligence."

Weis v. Madison, 75 Ind. 241, 39 Am. Rep. 135; Knox County Comrs. v. Montgomery, 109 Ind. 69, 9 N. E. 590.

The city has no right to cast even surface water upon the servient lands in materially increased quantities by collecting it and carrying it in a sewer or channel, unless it provides an adequate outlet.

Evansville v. Decker, 84 Ind. 326, 43 Am. Rep. 86; Indianapolis v. Lawyer, 38 Ind. 348.

The same thing is true of sewage conducted through sewers constructed by the city and deposited at a point where it is cast into the waters of the creek, if thereby it creates a nuisance.

The act of the city in collecting its sewage, and depositing it at a point where it invades the rights of riparian proprietors below, so that not only their property in the waters of the creek are destroyed, but by reason of the nuisance their adjoining property, to wit, their lands and their homes, are injured or destroyed, amounts to such a taking of property as the city must condemn and compensate for in damages before it can cast its sewage into the waters of the stream.

Wood, Nuisances, 2d ed. § 782.

The city has no more right to commit a wrong than an individual. A public necessity would not allow a municipal corporation to take private property without compensation, nor to do an act which a private individual might not do.

Patoka Twp. v. Hopkins, 131 Ind. 142, 30 N. E. 890.

in office which occasion a nuisance to the inhabitants of the adjoining parish by draining into a stream flowing from such parish, although from the limited nature of their powers no order could be made against them which would have the effect of compelling them to abate the nuisance altogether by stopping up the sewer and ceasing to drain into the stream.

Spokes v. Banbury Bd. of Health, L. R. 1 Eq. 42, held that a local board of health was guilty of a gross contempt in failing to stop the discharge of sewage from a large municipality into a stream, it appearing that that was the only means of compliance with an injunction restraining the board from causing or permitting sewage or water polluted with sewage to pass from the drains under their control into the river in such a manner as to render the water of the river at or near plaintiff's mill unfit for use by the plaintiffs or otherwise injurious to the health of the persons resident at the mill. The defendants claim that compliance with the injunction was practically impossible without stopping the drainage of the town, and that that would cause great public inconvenience, but the court held that it could not regard such circumstances.

G. H. P.

Hadley, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Valparaiso is a city of 8,000 inhabitants. Salt creek is a natural watercourse flowing from south to north through the western part of the city, and thence west and north to its confluence with the Calumet river. Its fall is 15 feet per mile, and its minimum volume 227 cubic feet of water per minute. Within the city limits on the southwest is a low-lying marsh that naturally drains into Salt creek. The natural and only practicable drainage for all the territory within the city limits is Salt creek. Prior to 1896 the city had constructed, according to law, a general and complete system of sewerage for the city, at a cost of $50,000, and 200 closets and 500 kitchens had been connected therewith; and the outfall from the entire system was into the marsh at the southwest, at a point about 64 rods from Salt creek. About 47,000 gallons of sewage are being daily discharged into the marsh. The marsh is heavily overgrown with grass and other vegetation, but sewage in some form finds its way into Salt creek, and pollutes its waters. Above the point of sewage contact there are three slaughter houses that drain directly into Salt creek, and one rendering establishment and one gas works drain into near-by tributaries. Nine-tenths of 1 per cent of the water in Salt creek below the sewer discharge in time of low water is sewage coming from the city, and slaughter houses, and other polluting agencies above. Appellant is threatening and has arranged for an extension of the outlet directly through the marsh to Salt creek. The plaintiffs, nineteen in number, are the owners and occupants of lower lands abutting on Salt creek at distances from 2 to 10 miles from and below Valparaiso. The action is for an injunction precluding the city from discharging sewage into Salt creek. The complaint sets forth the several interests of the plaintiffs in the subject-matter: That Salt creek, before the grievances mentioned, was a natural watercourse and a perpetually running stream of pure water flowing by and through the lands of the plaintiffs, and was used by them for domestic, agricultural, and dairy purposes; that defendant city has 8,000 inhabitants, and is situate upon Salt creek at a point higher and up stream from the lands of the plaintiffs; that the city had theretofore constructed and put into use a large and complicated system of sewers, and had permitted 500 houses and closets to be connected therewith; that the sewers were so constructed that they emptied all the sewage of the city into the marsh on the southwest, a short distance from Salt creek, and that the sewage, being discharged in great quantities into the marsh, overflowed and ran into Salt creek, whereby the waters of the creek became polluted, filthy, and unwholesome, and the banks of the creek became lined and overflowed with sewage, slops, excremental filth, and garbage, and the lands of the plaintiffs contiguous thereto, and which were used for pasture, have been and are being overflowed by said substances, and the grass so befouled that the plaintiffs' stock would not eat it, nor drink the water in the stream; that noxious odors arise from the stream and permeate the air for half a mile, and injuriously affect the health and happiness of the plaintiffs and their families; that the city is threatening to and will accomplish an extension of the sewer through the marsh to Salt creek, and there and thereby empty all the sewage of the city directly into Salt creek above the plaintiffs' lands, and there and thereby greatly increase the pollution of the water, and render it unfit for any purpose, to the irreparable damage of the plaintiffs. Prayer, "that the city be enjoined forever from constructing said sewer outlet, or emptying the sewage of the city in the said stream, or upon the said land at the place where it is now emptying, and from depositing the same into said creek at any point." A demurrer to the complaint was overruled and sustained to the second paragraph of answer. A trial was had upon the general issue, and finding and judgment perpetually enjoining the appellant from polluting or increasing the pollution of the waters of the creek by permitting its sewage to run into the waters of the stream.

Error is assigned upon the action of the court upon the demurrers and upon the overruling of appellant's motion to modify the finding and for a new trial. But, as suggested by the appellant, each assignment raises but a single and the same question, and they will therefore be considered together. That question is: May a municipality, acting in conformity to the statutes, skilfully and without negligence or malice, pursuing the only natural and reasonably possible line of drainage, be enjoined from discharging its sewage into a natural watercourse, thereby polluting its waters, to the injury of the lower riparian proprietors? It is a familiar principle that injunctive relief will not be granted if there exists a complete remedy at law, and, if the case falls within the class of damnum absque injuria, the denial is equally imperative. It is equally well established that every owner of land through which a stream of water flows is entitled to the reasonable use and enjoyment of the stream. His right to do so is not an acquired property right, but a natural right appurtenant to his freehold, and is in common and equal with all others owning land upon the stream. He may dam it and divert it for mechanical purposes and fish ponds, if he will return it to its channel before leaving his premises; he may use it for purposes of agriculture; his animals may take water from it at will; he may clear away the forests, plant crops, fertilize his field, feed his animals in lots, and permit the storm water from his fields and feed yards to flow by natural ways into the stream; or he may collect the surface water upon his premises, if all upon the water shed, into ditches, covered or uncovered, and, clean or unclean, may direct them into the stream, even though such drainage corrupts the waters of the stream and sends them on to the owners of the servient estates less pure than he received them. His enjoyment is, according to his position, superior to those below him and inferior to those above him. The right to improve and beautify property, and to employ all the reasonable methods afforded by the estate and its appurtenances, to protect the health and promote the comfort and happiness of self and family, is inseparably connected with the right to own and control property; and, though its exercise may sometimes injuriously affect others, the law affords no remedy. In acquiring estates and in erecting homes along watercourses, notice must be taken of the conformation of the territory, the natural lines of drainage that farms, cities, and villages may gather along its banks, and that the impurities incident to the trades, to agriculture and population, that fall upon the surface, will find their way into the stream, and that the enjoyment of the stream is liable to be modified and abridged, if not altogether suspended, in many uses to which it might originally have been fitted, by those above, in the exercise of their own equal rights. A municipality, in a large sense, is a riparian proprietor. Its officers stand for the corporation. They are empowered by the state to provide and enforce sanitary measures for the preservation of the health and welfare of the public. The corporation has the same right to exist as an aggregation, and to enjoy its possessions as a natural person. It may, under the law, establish public halls, libraries, and market places, and it may lay out parks and embellish them with flowers and fountains for the comfort and happiness of the corporate body. It may open and improve streets, construct gutters, sluices, and waterways; and if storm water carries into these latter the multifarious filth and garbage incident to populous places, and bears the same away by natural channels to the general watercourse of the basin, the right of the municipality to permit it will not be doubted, even though the waters of the stream are thereby so polluted as to render them unfit for ordinary uses. And wherein have the dwellers below ground of complaint? They have suffered only that which they should have reasonably expected and estimated in acquiring their property. The question is rooted in the natural law of self-preservation. And, if cities are permitted to adulterate streams by allowing all accumulating surface impurities to flow into them by natural channels, we do not perceive why the underlying principle will not allow them to deepen these natural storm channels and transform them into covered, sewers, nor why the right to protect the health and welfare of the public against one class of noxious matter should not be extended to all classes of equal virulence. And, while action must be taken with a cautious regard for the rights of those below, it has come to be a scientific fact generally accepted that the minimum of mischief resulting from closet contents may be attained by an early despatch through the medium of flowing water, wherein solids are dissolved and chemical action for purification speedily takes place. But, however this may be, there is back of the question sovereign power, resting upon reasons satisfactory to the legislature, conferred upon cities to construct sewers and outlets, and, by necessary implication, authority to discharge the sewage into the usual and naturally adapted conduits. The grant of such powers imposes the duty to exercise them in all needful cases. This record shows that appellant is a city of 8,000 inhabitants; that between the years 1891 and 1896 the proper authority projected and constructed a complete system of sewers at a cost of more than $40,000, adopting for the outlet of the system the line of natural drainage for the district. It further appears that all parts of the city were ultimately drained into Salt creek within the city limits. And there is no pretense that there is any other possible outlet or practical means of disposing of sewage, or that the sewer was unskillfully or negligently constructed. Hence, then, to forbid a discharge of sewage into Salt creek is to deny to the city the right to discharge it anywhere, and thus leave it without the ordinary means of sanitation. Surely it is not the law that a salutary statute, essential to the health and welfare of the public, may be thus nullified by exhibiting a damage to private right. The sewage must be despatched or the city abandoned. The place adopted for the outpour is that provided by nature, and cannot be had elsewhere. The facts present a case wherein the principle of the greatest good to the greatest number must be permitted to operate, and private interest yield to the public good; and if the erection has been skilfully performed, and without negligence, as is shown to be the fact by the record, and in a way to do the least mischief, it must be held to be a lawful exercise of power that equity will not restrain. Barnard v. Sherley, 135 Ind. 547, 24 L. R. A. 568, 34 N. E. 600, 35 N. E. 117; Richmond v. Test, 18 Ind. App. 482, 501, 48 N. E. 610; McCrifield v. Worcester, 110 Mass. 216, 14 Am. Rep. 592.

That cities are not liable for consequential damages to private property, resulting from the construction of streets, sewers, and other public improvements, when the work is skilfully executed and free from negligence, is no longer an open question in this state. Terre Haute v. Hudnut, 112 Ind. 542, 13 N. E. 686, and cases there cited; Vincennes v. Richards, 23 Ind. 381. But appellees' counsel argues on behalf of one of the appellees that the waters of the stream in flood time carry the sewer filth out upon his pasture, whereby the grass is rendered worthless, and noxious odors are emitted, to the annoyance and harm of appellee and his family, and that this is a consequential damage, not to his natural rights in the stream, but to his acquired property rights; and that it is a taking of his private property for public use without compensation first being rendered. The lessening of the value of an estate by a destruction of the grass and the creation of some personal discomfort has only the same protection of the law that is accorded to other forms of injury to property by municipal improvements, and it has been uniformly held in this state that such consequential damage is not such a taking of private property as must be preceded by just compensation. Cummins v. Seymour, 79 Ind. 491, 41 Am. Rep. 618; Macy v. Indianapolis, 17 Ind. 267; Lafayette v. Spencer, 14 Ind. 399; Weis v. Madison, 75 Ind. 241, 39 Am. Rep. 135; Lafayette v. Bush, 19 Ind. 326. See also Com. v. Alger, 7 Cush. 53, 85. It will not do to say that the stream and appellees lands lying along the margins of Salt creek should have been condemned by the city to the right to despatch sewage along the stream before proceeding to do so. According to the statement of appellant's counsel, the premises of appellees alleged to be affected are situate from 2 to 10 miles by the stream from the corporate limits of the city; and, if the city is required to go so far to recompense sewage effect, where may it stop short of the sea? Appellant had lawful authority to exercise the right of eminent domain in securing an outlet for its sewage, but no such authority exists as will permit it to seize upon the stream and its margins to relieve consequential damages. Richmond v. Test, 18 Ind. App. 482, 500, 48 N. E. 610, and authorities cited. Furthermore, the construction of sewers and outlets is sanctioned by the law, and what the law grants will not constitute a nuisance per se, public or private. And, if the law is obeyed, no actionable wrong will result. In any instance, however, an action may arise from want of due care in construction or repairs. But it must be presumed that all ministerial officers will perform their official duty, and cause no offense in their execution of the law. Elkhart v. Wickwire, 121 Ind. 331, 337, 22 N. E. 342. Hence injunction will not lie to restrain the exercise of a power lawfully conferred until the power has been abused to the injury of public or private right.

By the judgment appealed from appellant is "permitted to extend its sewer system from its present outlet to Salt creek, but is perpetually enjoined and restrained from polluting or increasing the pollution of the waters of the creek." The judgment is anomalous in that it expressly authorizes appellant to construct the proposed extension through the marsh to Salt creek, but forbids forever the pollution of the waters of the stream. Ordinarily the right to extend the active, operating sewer to Salt creek would carry with it the right to discharge the sewage usually and necessarily carried by it into the stream, which implies pollution of its waters; but the express prohibition must be held to preclude the emptying of any corrupting substances into the creek. Whether the judgment is intended to operate against the situation as it now exists, and against the voiding of sewage into the marsh, whence it escapes into Salt creek, or to conditions that may exist if and after appellant extends the sewer to the creek, is not clear; but if it relates to future conditions, as we have seen, injunction will not lie, and if to present conditions, the facts averred in the complaint and established by the evidence do not warrant it.

The complaint fails to aver the absence of skill or the want of due care, or that some other outlet could more reasonably be had, or that some other reasonable method of disposing of the city sewage is available; and, for reasons stated, it is insufficient to entitle appellees to the relief prayed. The demurrer to the complaint should therefore have been sustained.

Judgment reversed, with instructions to sustain the demurrer to the complaint.

MISSOURI SUPREME COURT (Division 1).

D. H. SMITH, Respt.,
v.
City of SEDALIA, Appt.
(152 Mo. 283.)

1. The failure to specify in the order of record granting a new trial the ground on which it was granted, as required by Rev. Stat. 1899, § 2241, is not reversible error.
2. A prescriptive right to discharge sewers into a stream will not arise from the mere fact that they are so discharged for more than the statutory period of prescription, "without objection or hindrance," unless it is shown that the user was under claim of right, and exercised adversely and not with permission.
3. The maintenance of private sewers discharged into a stream, causing some pollution, will not be sufficient to create an easement by prescription for the discharge into the stream of a substituted public sewer system which causes much greater pollution of the stream, and thereby creates a nuisance.

4. The rule that the right of action for trespass to real estate accrues to the one owning the property at the time the trespass is committed, does not apply to the emptying of a sewer system into a stream to the injury of a riparian owner, where the extent of the injury cannot then be for all time estimated, while subsequent change of the outlet and enlargement of the system materially increase the injury after the change in the ownership of the riparian property.
5. It is erroneous to instruct the jury as to what their verdict shall be if they find certain facts, when there is no evidence on which those facts can be found.
6. A nuisance caused by the pollution of a stream to the damage of riparian owners whose injuries are similar in kind, though different in degree, is not a public, but is a private, nuisance, such that a single landowner may maintain a private action for damages.

See note to Platt Brothers & Co. v. Waterbury, ante, 691.

48 L. R. A.

7. The facts that sewers are necessary to a city, and that a statute directs that they shall follow as near as practicable the natural drainage of the country, does not justify the city in discharging sewers into a stream to the damage of a landowner, without just compensation to him, as required by a constitutional provision against taking or damaging private property without just compensation.

(November 14, 1899.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Pettis County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for the alleged wrongful pollution of a stream flowing through plaintiff's property. Affirmed.

Statement by Valliant, J.:

This is a suit for damages against the city of Sedalia for the alleged wrongful pollution of the water of a natural stream which flows through the plaintiff's farm. The petition alleges that the plaintiff owns a farm adjoining the city, through which flows Cedar creek, a stream affording an abundant supply of water for stock and other farm purposes, which, until the injury complained of, was fresh, pure, and wholesome, and greatly enhanced the value of the land and the enjoyment of its use and occupancy; but that the defendant city had constructed a system of sewers, which collected and carried the sewage of the city, and discharged it into the creek a short distance from where it enters plaintiff's land, and by that means so polluted the water of the stream, as it came down on plaintiff's land, that it was foul, unwholesome, and unfit for use by man or beast, and in its turn polluted the atmosphere, so that it was rendered offensive and injurious to the health of the occupants of the farm. Damages are sought for the depreciation of the value of the farm and of its rental value. The answer pleads the several acts of the general assembly under which the defendant was incorporated, and its charter from time to time amended, beginning with the act of 1861, down to the act of 1873, and the final organization as a city of the third class under the General Statutes, in 1886; that during the period of its existence it had so grown that at the date of the suit it was a city of 20,000 inhabitants; that Cedar creek was the natural drain for the water falling on a large part of the area of the city, and the sewers, as constructed, do not carry into Cedar creek sewage or water from any territory other than that which naturally drains into the creek; that for more than twenty years prior to the institution of this suit there were sewers constructed in the city by its authority and consent, such as are complained of in the petition, which gathered the sewage and surface water, and discharged the same into the creek, and down on and across the land now owned by plaintiff, and from time to time those sewers and sewer systems were enlarged and extended, and new sewers were constructed and added to the others, until the present system now in use was brought into existence. So defendant says it has, by long usage, acquired the right to use Cedar creek for the purpose of carrying its sewage, and the plaintiff's right is barred by the statute of limitations of ten years, and that, if a right of action to anyone ever accrued, it was to the person who owned the land when the city began to so use the creek, and not to the plaintiff. The answer denies that the water is polluted, or that plaintiff's property is injured. The petition concludes, not only with a prayer for judgment for damages, but also for an injunction to restrain defendant from further committing the alleged nuisance complained of. But the petition contains but one count, and that is shaped as an action at law for damages, and the cause was tried as such. An injunction issues out of a suit in equity, and, if plaintiff had really intended to ask equitable relief, he should have framed a count substantially as a bill in equity. We will treat the case as the parties and the trial court treated it; that is, as an action at law only.

The evidence on the part of plaintiff tended to prove: That he bought the land mentioned in the petition in 1889. That it is a highly-improved and valuable farm, of about 400 acres, to the north of and adjoining the city of Sedalia, a small part of the southern end being within the city limits. That Cedar creek runs through the farm for a distance, following its meanderings, of about a mile, affording a sufficient supply of water for a stock farm, to which use it was principally devoted, and for other farm purposes. The residence is about 200 yards from the creek. That in 1887 the city passed an ordinance establishing a general sewer system, under which the main sewer now complained of was constructed, which then emptied at the Missouri Pacific Railway track, about a mile south of its present terminus, and that was the situation when the plaintiff bought, in 1889. At that time the water was clear, and there was no odor from the creek, but it could be detected that some foreign element was in the water. In 1888 the main sewer was enlarged, and in 1891 extended in the direction of plaintiff's farm, and again in 1893, until it reached the main channel of Cedar creek about 200 yards from plaintiff's land. That beginning in 1889, and continuing to 1895, the city constructed district sewers, eleven in number, emptying into the main sewer above mentioned. That until 1891, when the first extension of the main sewer in the direction of plaintiff's farm was made, much of the offensive character of the sewage was dissipated in the open air before it reached the plaintiff's land, although even then an examination of the water in the creek showed contamination; but that after the extension of 1891, and the second extension of 1893, with the addition of the several district sewers above mentioned, the water became entirely unfit for use, and dangerous, not only to the cattle, but also the health and comfort of the tenants of the farm. That in 1893 plaintiff made oral complaint, and in 1894 written complaint, to the city officers, of the same, but without avail. There was also testimony for the plaintiff tending to show the depreciation of the rentals and value of the land within the periods complained of. This suit was begun in 1895.

It was admitted that Cedar creek was the natural drain for all that district in the city which now drains and empties its sewage into it through the sewerage complained of. On the part of the defendant, the testimony tended to prove that as early as 1873 the city built a sewer for surface drainage which emptied about a mile from plaintiff's land, but the output of which, following natural courses, reached Cedar creek; and the city, in 1874, authorized private persons to build private sewers for surface drainage, emptying into that sewer. In 1877 the city authorized certain persons to build a sewer for drainage from Laminee street to Montau avenue, with which persons so desiring were allowed to make connection for their private drains upon payment of a stipulated amount. In 1882 a similar authority was granted another person to construct a sewer on Broadway. In 1886 the gas company built a sewer which emptied on the open ground near its works. In 1875 and 1876 there was a soap factory in the city just north of the railroad tracks, whose offensive offcast washed, in the course of natural drainage, into Cedar creek, but the city interfered, and put a stop to this, in a year or two. There were also, about this time, several slaughter houses in the city limits, on a branch of Cedar creek, about a mile from the land now owned by plaintiff, but these were all closed in 1884 by injunctions from the circuit court, at the suit of citizens. The testimony of defendant also tended to prove that the water on the plaintiff's farm was not polluted to the offensive or dangerous degree that plaintiff's testimony tended to show it to be.

The theory of the instructions given by the court at the request of the plaintiff was that by the construction of private sewers by permission of the city, which emptied into natural drains that carried the output into Cedar creek, the city did not acquire the right to construct its system of sewers to discharge their offensive contents into the creek, to the plaintiff's injury; nor did the fact that plaintiff bought the land after the city had adopted the sewer system, and constructed it in part, preclude the plaintiff from recovery for damages he has sustained after his purchase; and that the fact that the sewer system may have been in operation, with offensive consequences, for five years before the bringing of this suit, did not preclude recovery, within the scope of other instructions; nor did the fact that a system of sewers was necessary to the city, and that there was no other natural or convenient channel than the one in question, and that it would be troublesome or expensive to dispose of the sewage without creating a nuisance, justify the collecting and emptying of the sewage on or near the plaintiff's premises. The instructions placed the plaintiff's measure of damages at the depreciation of rental value within five years before the commencement of the suit and permanent injury to the value of the farm.

At the request of the defendant, the court gave the following instructions:

"(A) If the stream in question was used for more than ten years before the bringing of this action, continuously, by the defendant city, for the purpose of drainage or carrying off the sewage from the part of said city which naturally drained into the same without objection or hindrance from those owning the farm now owned by the plaintiff, then the city, and the inhabitants of the same, have acquired a right to the use of said stream for carrying off the drainage and sewage from said part of defendant city, and the verdict will be for the defendant, unless the jury find that defendant has, within ten years before the bringing of this suit, caused the sewage and drainage from other territory than that naturally drained into said stream to be carried into the same, and this to the damage of the plaintiff.

"(B) Although the jury may believe from the evidence that the use of the watercourse in question, as it has been and is being used, was a nuisance when first begun, yet, if said use has continued uninterrupted [by the city of Sedalia] for more than ten years next before the bringing of this action, the plaintiff cannot now complain of the same, and the verdict will be for the defendant." This was asked without the words in brackets, 'by the city of Sedalia,' but the court inserted said words, and gave it of his own motion, to which change defendant excepted at the time.

"(C) Although the jury may believe from the evidence that the use of the watercourse in question was or is injurious to the land now owned by plaintiff or to the owner thereof, yet if the jury further believed from the evidence that, before the plaintiff became the owner of said land, said use had become permanent,—that is, so fixed that without human labor it would continue,—and that there was then no present intention of changing or abandoning said use, so as to avoid further injury to said land and its owner, then said injury is to be regarded as permanent and an injury to the land itself, and only to be compensated for once, and that compensation was due to the one who owned the land before the plaintiff, and not to the plaintiff, and the plaintiff cannot recover therefor.

"(D) If the jury believe from the evidence that the sewage discharged into the watercourse in question comes only from the part of the city of Sedalia which naturally drains into said stream, and if the jury further believe from the evidence that, without the construction of sewers by the defendant city, the natural drainage into said stream would constitute a nuisance to the extent proved to exist at the time of bringing this suit, then the plaintiff cannot recover, and the verdict will be for the defendant.

"(E) Although the jury may believe that the discharge of sewage into the stream in question amounts to a nuisance, yet the plaintiff cannot recover unless the jury further find that the damage, if any, suffered by plaintiff, is peculiar to him; being such as is different in kind, and not simply in degree, from that sustained by other persons owning land in the same general locality."

And of its own motion the court gave the following:

"(F) The court instructs the jury that if they find from the evidence that the natural drainage into the watercourse in question, together with the drainage from the sewers built or constructed by individuals, prior to the construction of the sewer by the city, constitute a nuisance in kind and extent with that existing at the time of bringing this suit by plaintiff, then your verdict should be for the defendant; and, if you find from the evidence that this drainage did not constitute such nuisance, then, in estimating the damages plaintiff has sustained, if you find he has sustained any, you must take into consideration the natural drainage, and the drainage from the sewers built as aforesaid by individuals prior to the building of the sewer by the city, and give him only such damages as is in excess of the damages already sustained by reason of said natural drainage and drainage from said individual sewers."

Exceptions were preserved on both sides. There was a verdict for defendant and a motion for a new trial by plaintiff, which was sustained by the court, and from that order defendant appeals.

Mr. John Cashman for appellant.

Messrs. Montgomery & Montgomery, for respondent:

It is not the extent of the claim of the right, but the extent of its actual exercise, which controls; a claim of right to do more than that which has been done affects nothing on the question of prescription.

16 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 999; Wood, Nuisances, 1st ed. §§ 705, 706; Wood, Limitations of Actions, § 182; Holsman v. Boiling Spring Bleaching Co. 14 N. J. Eq. 345; Postlethwaite v. Payne, 8 Ind. 104; Janssen v. Lammers, 29 Wis. 89; Russell v. Scott, 9 Cow. 279; Roundtree v. Brantley, 34 Ala. 544, 73 Am. Dec. 470; Wright v. Moore, 33 Ala. 593, 82 Am. Dec. 731; Odiorne v. Lyford, 9 N. H. 502, 32 Am. Dec. 387; Baldwin v. Calkins, 10 Wend. 169; Carlisle v. Cooper, 21 N. J. Eq. 576.

No right became vested in defendant by the mere silent acquiescence of the owner of the premises in permitting, at the first, the drainage to be carried on to the premises, and afterwards the continuance of the nuisance. At best it was only a license revocable at the pleasure of the owner of the land.

Pitzman v. Boyce, 111 Mo. 387, 19 S. W. 1104; Bunten v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 50 Mo. App. 426; House v. Montgomery, 19 Mo. App. 170; Cobb v. Smith, 38 Wis. 21. 48 L. R. A.

The drainage provided by the city, as it existed prior to plaintiff's purchase, was not injurious, or very slightly so; but after plaintiff's purchase the sewer system was put in force, and the use extended, enlarged, and changed every year.

The structure or work causing the injury must be a completed and finished work, and the damage occasioned thereby such as that the plaintiff could have sued for and recovered entire damages, or damages in the future from the ordinary use of such a structure; otherwise plaintiff would not be precluded from recovering for such damages.

Wood, Limitations of Actions, §§ 180-182, and note; Wood, Nuisances, §§ 705, 706; James v. Kansas, 83 Mo. 570; Holsman v. Boiling Spring Bleaching Co. 14 N. J. Eq. 345; Rogers v. Stoeve, 24 Pa. 186; Paddock v. Somes, 102 Mo. 238, 10 L. R. A. 254, 14 S. W. 746; Dwight v. Hayes, 150 Ill. 273, 37 N. E. 218.

The instruction that plaintiff cannot recover except for such injury as is peculiar to him, "being such as is different in kind, and not simply in degree, from that sustained by other persons owning lands in the same general locality," is not the law since the adoption of our present Constitution.

Joplin Consol. Min. Co. v. Joplin, 124 Mo. 137, 27 S. W. 406; Van De Vere v. Kansas City, 107 Mo. 91, 17 S. W. 695; Paddock v. Somes, 102 Mo. 238, 10 L. R. A. 254, 14 S. W. 746; Seifert v. Brooklyn, 101 N. Y. 139, 54 Am. Rep. 664, 4 N. E. 321; Baltimore & P. R. Co. v. Fifth Baptist Church, 108 U. S. 317, 27 L. ed. 739, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 719.

If it is a public nuisance the defendant could never gain prescriptive immunity, and the other instructions for defendant are up on the right acquired by limitation.

16 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 995; Wood, Nuisances, 1st ed. § 724; Cooley, Torts, 2d ed. p. 731.

People owning land in the same general locality are entirely different from the community at large, which is the legal expression applicable to such cases.

Funk v. St. Louis, 122 Mo. 139, 26 S. W. 1034; Givens v. Van Studdiford, 86 Mo. 158, 56 Am. Rep. 421; Wood, Nuisances, 2d ed. §§ 736, 737; Glaesner v. Anheuser-Busch Breicing Asso. 100 Mo. 516, 13 S. W. 707; Edmondson v. Moberly, 98 Mo. 526, 11 S. W. 990.

These damages are those actually sustained by plaintiff, including any diminution of rentals down to the time of the institution of this suit.

Carson v. Springfield, 53 Mo. App. 297; Pinney v. Berry, 61 Mo. 360; Brown v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 80 Mo. 457.

Valliant, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

1. The order of record granting the new trial fails to specify the ground on which it was granted, as required by § 2241, Rev. Stat. 1889, and that is the first assignment of error upon which appellant asks a reversal of the judgment. The specifying in the record of the ground on which a new trial is granted was first required by the act of 1887 (Laws 1887, p. 230), amending § 3705, Rev. Stat. 1879, which in other respects is the same as § 2241, Rev. Stat. 1889. The original purpose of that section was to limit the power of the court in granting new trials for errors in a matter of fact. But, unless the record shows upon what ground a first new trial is granted, the ground for the action of the trial court in granting a new trial a second or third time would be difficult, if not impossible, to ascertain, when the propriety of the action is questioned in an appellate court. It was doubtless to overcome this difficulty that the amendment of 1887 was enacted. This is not the first case that has come before this court since the adoption of the amendment in which its requirement has been disregarded; that is, in which a new trial has been granted without specifying the ground for the same. Hewitt v. Steele, 118 Mo. 463, 24 S. W. 440; First Nat. Bank v. Wood, 124 Mo. 72, 27 S. W. 554. But we have never treated a failure to observe this direction as reversible error. The omission is liable to arise through the carelessness of the clerk and oversight of the judge, and of the attorneys in the case on both sides. The statute itself does not render the order granting the new trial invalid for failure to observe this requirement, and we cannot so adjudge it.

2. The propriety of the action of the trial court in granting a new trial is the only subject for our consideration on the review of this record. The instructions given on the request of the plaintiff, as briefly summarized in the foregoing statement, present, in the main, the correct theory of the law, but the instructions given at the request of the defendant afford ground for affirming the action of the circuit court in granting a new trial. The theory of the defense, advanced both in the answer and instructions, is that the city has acquired, by long use, a prescriptive right to empty its sewage into Cedar creek. That a prescriptive right to maintain a nuisance of the kind complained of by the plaintiff in this case may be acquired, is a well-established principle of law. The period requisite to establish such right is that which, under the statute of limitations, bars a right of entry, which in this state is ten years. James v. Kansas, 83 Mo. 567; Howard County v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 130 Mo. 652, 32 S. W. 651. The user, however, upon which the prescriptive right is founded, must be adverse in its character; mere permissive user cannot create such a right. The burden is upon him who asserts the right to show, not only the user, but that it was exercised adversely and under a claim of right. Pitzman v. Boyce, 111 Mo. 393, 19 S. W. 1104. And the user relied upon must not only be of the same general character, but must have been exercised substantially in as offensive a degree and to as great an extent as at the time the suit is brought. Wood, Limitations of Actions, § 182; Wright v. Moore, 38 Ala. 593, 82 Am. Dec. 731; Carlisle v. Cooper, 21 N. J. Eq. 576. Neither the answer which attempts to set up this prescriptive right, nor the instructions given at the request of the defendant bearing upon it, comprehend all the essentials or such a right. The answer avers that Cedar creek is the natural drain for the water falling on a large district in the city, and that, from the beginning of the incorporation, the surface water, drainage, and sewage of that district have drained into the creek; and that for more than twenty years there were sewers in the city, by its permission, which gathered surface water and sewage, and sent it down the creek; and that from time to time those sewers have been enlarged and extended, until the present sewer system was brought into existence. There is no averment in the answer that the sewers complained of in the petition had existed twenty years, or ten years before the commencement of the suit, and the evidence shows that there would have been no justification for such an averment. The instruction marked "A," given at the instance of the defendant, is to the effect that if for more than ten years prior to the suit the creek had been used by the city for drainage or carrying off the sewage from the district which it naturally drained, without objection from the owners of the land, the verdict must be for the defendant, unless it appeared that defendant, by its present system, was draining sewage from other territory into it. That is to say, if there were sewers in the city which collected offensive matter, without regard to the degree or quantity, and sent it down a natural course, which carried it into the creek, and this condition existed for ten years without complaint, then the city had a right to construct its present system of sewers, enlarge and extend the same, from 1887 to 1893, with continued additional district sewers, down to 1895, and empty the whole sewage from that area, which compasses the chief part of a city now grown to 20,000 inhabitants, into the creek within 200 yards of plaintiff's land, and render the water unfit for use, and the atmosphere offensive and unwholesome to the occupants of the farm. We cannot give that proposition our approval. The instruction literally goes even further, and confirms the city's prescriptive right if only the drainage of that district was wont to go that way; but that is so palpable an error that it was doubtless an inadvertence. The term, "without objection or hindrance," used in the instruction, does not sufficiently express the adverse character that is necessary to give a prescriptive right. "Without objection or hindrance" is not inconsistent with permission. A prescriptive right cannot be acquired by user under permission, howsoever long it may continue. It must be under claim of right, and adversely exercised. This instruction, also, in the light of the evidence, would confer on the city the prescriptive right to pollute the watercourse with its sewage, because individuals and private concerns had, for the period of ten years, committed nuisances which produced more or less pollution in the stream. But one man cannot build his edifice on another's foundation. The period of user by one cannot establish a prescriptive right in another, unless he is successor to the rights of the other by privity of estate. Evidence that the gas company and the owners of the slaughter houses had for years cast offensive matter into a natural tributary of this stream had nothing to do with this case, except as bearing on the question of damages, as their drains were no part of the city's sewers, now complained of. If we have rightly comprehended the evidence in this case, this instruction marked "A" should have been refused, even if it had correctly set forth the essentials of a prescriptive right, upon the ground that there was no evidence on which to base it. With no knowledge of the situation except that afforded by descriptions in the evidence in the record, we get the impression that the only sewers built by the city prior to those built under the ordinances of 1887 were for surface drainage, and that all the other sewers before that date were private, and some, if not all, of them were limited to surface drainage, and that the sewer system inaugurated in 1887 was not a mere enlargement of those formerly existing, but a new and different creation. If that is the case, then there was no foundation in the evidence for an hypothesis on which to base a finding that the present system had existed for ten years before this suit was brought. But we recognize the fact that the court and jury which tried the case, and the counsel too, being familiar with the locality, were better able to comprehend the situation and apply the evidence than a mere reader of the record. Therefore we do not now say that the defendant was not entitled to an instruction properly presenting the law on the subject of a prescriptive right; but, in view of the fact that the case is to be retried, we call the trial court's attention to that feature of the evidence, for its enlightened consideration on the retrial, and we only now hold that the instruction marked "A" should not have been given because it failed to present the essentials of the law of prescriptive right in the particulars above discussed. And for the same reasons the instruction marked "B" should also have been refused.

3. The instruction marked "C" undertakes to apply to the facts of this case the proposition of law that where the trespass committed is in itself permanent, and the injury complete, the right of action accrues then, and to him who was then injured, not to a subsequent purchaser. But that is not applicable to a case of this kind. That principle is illustrated in the facts in James v. Kansas, 83 Mo. 567. The injury there complained of was the structure—the sewer itself—which the city had thirteen years before built on plaintiff's land, and which, when plaintiff, after that lapse of time, came to build a house, was found to interfere with the economical building of the foundation. It was held that that injury was a permanent one, manifest from the beginning, and susceptible of being measured in damages once for all, and suit on it was barred in five years. But the nature of this injury is very different. True, it was manifest in 1887 that the natural result of the sewerage then being constructed would be to cast sewage into a drain that would bring it to the land now owned by plaintiff, and, when plaintiff bought the land in 1889, that result had to some degree been accomplished, but the extent of the injury, even with the sewers as then constructed, could not have been for all time estimated. Besides, the sewage was then discharged at a very much greater distance from the plaintiff's land, and was exposed in its flow to the open air before it entered the plaintiff's premises. And, in addition to this, the main sewer was enlarged in 1888, extended in 1891, and again in 1893, and from July, 1889, to August, 1895, eleven district sewers were constructed and turned into the main sewer. That instruction should not have been given.

4. It was error to have given the instruction marked "D," because there was no evidence on which to base it. There was no evidence upon which the jury could have based a finding that, if there had been no sewers, the natural drainage into the creek would have been a nuisance to the extent shown by the evidence to exist at the time of bringing this suit.

5. The instruction marked "E" was inapplicable to this case. The principle intended to be expressed there, to wit, that plaintiff could recover only for damage peculiar to himself, differing in kind, not simply in degree, from that suffered by others, is applicable where complaint is made of a public nuisance, as, for instance, when a public street is obstructed. If the plaintiff, in such case, is inconvenienced only in the same way that other citizens suffer, though perhaps to a greater degree than some others, he cannot recover. Examples of this doctrine are shown in Rude v. St. Louis, 93 Mo. 408, 6 S. W. 257; Edmonson v. Moberly, 98 Mo. 523, 11 S. W. 990; and other cases cited by the learned counsel for the city. But even in such cases, if the plaintiff has an interest in the matter that the public in general has not,—for example, if the obstruction hinders his access to his lot abutting the street,—he may recover for that injury. But it is a misconception to treat the case made in the petition as one of a public nuisance. Though there be several landowners through whose possessions the polluted stream may flow, and all suffer damage of the same character, but each of different degree, that does not convert the injurious act into a public nuisance, for it is only those individuals, and not the public in general, who suffer; and therefore each may recover the damage he suffers, though it differ only in degree from that that others in the same class suffer. Indeed, if we should find the injury of which the plaintiff here complains to be a public nuisance, the whole foundation must fall out of the defense, because no one can acquire a prescriptive right to maintain a public nuisance. Cooley, Torts, 2d ed. pp. 730, 731; Wood, Nuisances, 3d ed. § 711.

6. The only criticism that the instruction given by the court of its own motion, marked

"E," suggests, is that in its first clause it presents an hypothesis for which there is no justification in the evidence. If there was any evidence on which to base a finding that the natural drainage and the private sewers created a nuisance in extent equal to that existing at the time of bringing this suit, it has escaped our notice. At all events, if there was a scintilla of such evidence, it was so overborne that the trial court would have been justified in granting a new trial on that account.

7. The facts that sewers are necessary to a city, and that the statute directs that they shall follow as near as practicable the natural drainage of the country, afford no justification to the action of a city in emptying its sewers on the land of an individual, to his damage. Our Constitution declares that private property shall not be taken or damaged without payment of just compensation. The legislature, therefore, could not, if it so intended, confer authority on a city to injure private property for the public good, without first paying the damage. But, subject to this qualification, private interest must yield to the public good. If it is a public necessity that the plaintiff's land be taken or damaged in order to dispose of the sewage of the defendant city, it may be so condemned according to law, but the city must first pay him the just compensation. Such condemnation can only be made in conformity to a proceeding prescribed by statute. The issues in this case do not call for an examination of the statute to ascertain whether or not provision has already been made for the condemnation of land outside the city limits for such purpose, but it is sufficient to say that until such provision is made, if it has not been, and until condemnation has been adjudged in accordance with such provision, or the city has, by contract or prescription, acquired the right to do so, it is liable for the damage caused by emptying its sewers into a natural stream flowing through private property. Cooley, Torts, 2d ed. 693; Joplin Consol. Min. Co. v. Joplin, 124 Mo. 129, 27 S. W. 406.

For the reasons above given, the judgment of the Circuit Court in sustaining the motion for a new trial is affirmed.

All concur.

NEW JERSEY COURT OF ERRORS AND APPEALS.

Samuel H. GREY, Attorney General, ex rel.
Henry P. SIMMONS et al., Respts.,
v.

Mayor, etc., of PATERSON, Appts.

(.....N. J.....)

- *1. The city of Paterson had legislative authority to construct its system of sewers, discharging their contents into the Passaic river, and is not, therefore, subject to the charge of maintaining a public nuisance.
2. The title of riparian owners along the Passaic river, where the tide ebbs and flows, extends only to high-water mark. The state is the absolute owner of the bed of the stream. Such riparian owners, having no title to the bed of the stream, are not entitled to an injunction against the city on account of the pollution of the stream.
3. The title of riparian owners above the ebb and flow of tide extends to the middle of the stream, subject only to a servitude to the public for purposes of navigation. The pollution of the river by sewage constituted the taking of the property of such owners, which the legislature cannot authorize except upon just compensation.
4. Jersey City has no rights in the waters of the Passaic river distinct from the rights of the general public, either by reason of the location of its waterworks, or in virtue of act 1852, p. 419.
5. By reason of the great injury which would fall upon the city by restraining the continuous use of its sewerage system, and the acquiescence of these riparian owners above where the tide flows, their injury being comparatively small, it would be inequitable to grant them an injunction.

6. They may obtain redress by amending their bill, or by filing a new bill, praying for an injunction, unless the city of Paterson will consent to make such compensation to them as shall be ascertained to be just, or they may, if they elect, sue at law for their damages.

(March 5, 1900.)

A PPEAL by defendants from an order of the Chancery Court granting an injunction to restrain defendants from depositing sewage in the Passaic River. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Thomas C. Simonton, Jr., and Eugene Stevenson for appellants.

Messrs. George McEwan, James B. Vredenburg, and John P. Stockton, for respondents:

A court of equity has jurisdiction to restrain existing or threatened public nuisances by injunction at the suit of the attorney general.

Atty. Gen. v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 35 Wis. 532; Delaware & R. Canal Co. v. Camden & A. R. Co. 16 N. J. Eq. 321, 18 N. J. Eq. 546; Bonaparte v. Camden & A. R. Co. Baldwin 227, Fed. Cas. No. 1,617; Newark Pl. Road & Ferry Co. v. Elmer ex rel. Van Wagenen, 9 N. J. Eq. 754; Thompson v. Paterson & H. River R. Co. 9 N. J. Eq. 527.

As to the sea, in which all his subjects have the right of navigation and of fishing, the King can make no modern grants in derogation of the rights of his subjects.

Blundell v. Catterall, 5 Barn. & Ald. 268; Browne v. Kennedy, 5 Harr. & J. 203, 9 Am. Dec. 503.

*Headnotes by VAN SYCKEL, J.

See note to Platt Brothers & Co. v. Watterbury, ante, 691.

48 L. R. A.

The corruption of a stream of water utilized as a source for the supply of water to a town, for the ordinary domestic use of its inhabitants and for drinking, constitutes a public nuisance affecting the health and comfort of an entire community, and calls for the interposition of the attorney general in a suit to enjoin the wrongful act.

Com. ex rel. McCormick v. Russell, 172 Pa. 506, 33 Atl. 709; Westcott v. Middleton, 43 N. J. Eq. 478, 11 Atl. 490.

It would be a public nuisance to render the water of a stream so impure that it could not be used for domestic purposes or for the watering of cattle, and so that it gave off noxious and unhealthy odors.

Chapman v. Rochester, 110 N. Y. 273, 1 L. R. A. 296, 18 N. E. 88; Townsend v. Bell, 62 Hun, 306, 17 N. Y. Supp. 210; Chipman v. Palmer, 77 N. Y. 56, 33 Am. Rep. 506; Bullard v. Saratoga Victory Mfg. Co. 77 N. Y. 525; Prentice v. Geiger, 9 Hun, 350, Affirmed in 74 N. Y. 341; Buccleugh v. Cowan, 5 Macph. 214; Crossley v. Lightowler, L. R. 3 Eq. 279; Pennington v. Brinsop Hall Coal Co. L. R. 5 Ch. Div. 769; Bickett v. Morris, L. R. 1 H. L. Sc. App. Cas. 47; Clinton v. Myers, 46 N. Y. 520, 7 Am. Rep. 373; Crooker v. Bragg, 10 Wend. 280, 25 Am. Dec. 555; Harrop v. Hirst, L. R. 4 Exch. 43; Busch v. New York, L. & W. R. Co. 34 N. Y. S. R. 7, 12 N. Y. Supp. 85; Smith v. Rochester, 38 Hun, 612, Affirmed in 104 N. Y. 674; Webb v. Portland Mfg. Co. 3 Sumn. 189, Fed. Cas. No. 17,322; Allaire v. Whitney, 1 Hill, 484; Honsee v. Hammond, 39 Barb. 95; Merrifield v. Worcester, 110 Mass. 219, 14 Am. Rep. 592; Corning v. Troy Iron & Nail Factory, 40 N. Y. 220; Drake v. Hudson River R. Co. 7 Barb. 508; MacLaury v. Hart, 121 N. Y. 636, 24 N. E. 1013; Morgan v. Binghamton, 102 N. Y. 500, 7 N. E. 424; Purdy v. Manhattan Elev. R. Co. 36 N. Y. S. R. 43, 13 N. Y. Supp. 295; Wright v. Howard, 1 Sim. & Stu. 202.

Public navigable rivers are held by the state in trust for the public; the water is subject to diversion for public purposes, either by the state directly, or by delegated authority.

Rundle v. Delaware & R. Canal Co. 14 How. 80, 14 L. ed. 335; St. Anthony Falls Water-Power Co. v. St. Paul Water Comrs. 56 Minn. 485, 58 N. W. 33.

The corruption of the water of a public river is a wrongful act, when persons are injured thereby, and calls for the interference of the courts by injunction.

Hargreaves' Law Tracts, p. 12, Hale, De Jure Maris; Atty. Gen. v. Kingston-on-Thames, 34 L. J. Ch. N. S. 481; Acquaackanonk Water Co. v. Watson, 29 N. J. Eq. 370; Keeney & W. Mfg. Co. v. Union Mfg. Co. 39 Conn. 581.

The common-law rights, appurtenant to the ownership of the bank, are property as much entitled to protection as the rights of the owner of the bed of the river to the use of the water which flows over it.

Lyon v. Fishmongers' Co. L. R. 1 App. Cas. 662.

Rights of a riparian owner are in the nature of a real property.

ture of easements attached to the upland, and extend over the soil in the bed of the stream to the navigable portion thereof, which may not be taken or interfered with to his injury by the public authorities without compensation, and any injury thereto by private persons is restrainable in equity or to be compensated for in damages.

Buccleugh v. Metropolitan Bd. of Works, L. R. 5 H. L. 418; Metropolitan Bd. of Works v. M'Carthy, L. R. 7 H. L. 243; Lyon v. Fishmongers' Co. L. R. 1 App. Cas. 662; Atty. Gen. v. Wemyss, L. R. 13 App. Cas. 192; North Shore R. Co. v. Pion, L. R. 14 App. Cas. 612; Miner v. Gilmour, 12 Moore P. C. C. 131; Rose v. Groves, 5 Mann. & G. 613; Lord v. Sydney Comrs. 12 Moore, P. C. C. 473; Eastern Counties R. Co. v. Doring, 5 C. B. N. S. 821; Kearns v. Cordwainers' Co. 6 C. B. N. S. 388; Yates v. Milwaukee, 10 Wall. 497, 19 L. ed. 984; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Illinois, 146 U. S. 387, 36 L. ed. 1018, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 110; Rumsey v. New York & N. E. R. Co. 133 N. Y. 79, 15 L. R. A. 618, 30 N. E. 654; Von Dolsen v. New York, 21 Blatchf. 454, 17 Fed. Rep. 817; New York C. & H. R. R. Co. v. Aldridge, 135 N. Y. 83, 17 L. R. A. 516, 32 N. E. 50; Saunder v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 144 N. Y. 75, 26 L. R. A. 378, 38 N. E. 992; Hedges v. West Shore R. Co. 150 N. Y. 150, 44 N. E. 691; Sage v. New York, 10 App. Div. 294, 41 N. Y. Supp. 938; Gould, Waters, §§ 149, 206, 208.

A riparian proprietor on a natural stream has a right to the flow of the stream through or by his land in its natural state as an incident of the land through or by which it flows, and if the water be polluted so as to occasion damage in law, though not in fact, it gives him a good cause of action.

Coulson & Forbes, Waters, p. 150.

There can be no prescription for the right to commit a public nuisance, nor for the confiscation of private property; prescription being founded on the presumption of a grant.

Atty. Gen. v. Daugars, 33 Beav. 621; State ex rel. Watson v. Standard Oil Co. 49 Ohio St. 137, 15 L. R. A. 145, 30 N. E. 291; Sooy v. State, 39 N. J. L. 149; Weber v. State Harbor, 18 Wall. 70, 21 L. ed. 803.

Any person through whose land runs a watercourse, which is perceptibly polluted by the sewage of a town, and is thereby rendered unfit for drinking or domestic use, is entitled to equitable relief.

Goldsmid v. Tunbridge Wells Improv. Comrs. L. R. 1 Eq. 161; on appeal L. R. 1 Ch. 349.

Use of the stream for the discharge of sewage to the material injury of other riparian owners, without compensation (in the absence of grant or prescription), is illegal, notwithstanding the sewers have been built under authority of law for a public purpose.

Kellogg v. New Britain, 62 Conn. 239, 24 Atl. 996; Inman v. Tripp, 11 R. I. 520, 23 Am. Rep. 520; New York C. & H. R. R. Co. v. Rochester, 127 N. Y. 591, 28 N. E. 416; Seifert v. Brooklyn, 101 N. Y. 136, 54 Am.

Rep. 664, 4 N. E. 321; Morse v. Worcester, 139 Mass. 389, 2 N. E. 694; Dwight v. Hayes, 150 Ill. 273, 37 N. E. 218; Carmichael v. Tzarakana, 94 Fed. Rep. 561.

The plea that the injury done by the encroachment upon private rights would be small in comparison with the advantage to the public, and that therefore some little sacrifice ought to be made by private individuals, is erroneous; no one can be deprived of his property without his consent and without compensation.

Goldsmid v. Tunbridge Wells Improv. Comrs. L. R. 1 Eq. 161; Indianapolis Water Co. v. American Strawboard Co. 57 Fed. Rep. 1003; Gardner v. Newburgh Trustees, 2 Johns. Ch. 162, 7 Am. Dec. 526; Nolan v. New Britain, 69 Conn. 668, 38 Atl. 707; Wadsworth v. Tillotson, 15 Conn. 366; East Jersey Water Co. v. Bigelow, 60 N. J. L. 201, 38 Atl. 633.

The rights of the individual proprietor are protected by law, however much it may be to the advantage of the community to invade them.

Atty. Gen. v. Colney Hatch Lunatic Asylum, L. R. 4 Ch. 154; Atty. Gen. v. Leeds, L. R. 5 Ch. 589; Wood, Nuisances, § 434.

It is no justification for creating and maintaining a nuisance that others, however many, are committing similar acts, as by draining filth and refuse matter into a river.

Newark Aqueduct Board v. Passaic, 45 N. J. Eq. 393, 18 Atl. 106; Indianapolis Water Co. v. American Strawboard Co. 57 Fed. Rep. 1003; Baltimore v. Warren Mfg. Co. 59 Md. 105; Morgan v. Danbury, 67 Conn. 484, 35 Atl. 499.

Van Syckel, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The information and bill of complaint in this case was filed by the attorney general on behalf of the state, at the relation of owners and possessors of lands along the banks of the Passaic river, to restrain the city of Paterson from depositing or discharging its sewage through its drains or sewers into the Passaic river, and from constructing new sewers to discharge into said river, and from enlarging or increasing its present sewage system with outlets into said river. Thereupon a rule to show cause was granted why an injunction should not issue as prayed for in said information and bill. Upon the hearing of this rule, affidavits were presented by the defendants. To the information and bill the city interposed a demurrer. Upon the 28th day of March, 1899, the chancellor overruled the demurrer, and ordered an injunction, in which order it is recited that upon reading the information and bill of complaint and the affidavits annexed thereto, and upon reading the demurrer of the defendants to the said information and bill, and the affidavits presented by the defendants upon said order to show cause, the chancellor being of opinion that the defendants' acts in discharging sewage into the Passaic river in the manner set forth in said information and affidavits constituted a public nuisance, it is ordered that an injunction do issue enjoining and restraining the mayor and aldermen of the city of Paterson, until the further order of said court, from discharging sewage, or permitting sewage to be discharged, directly or indirectly, into the Passaic river, above tide water, through any public sewer or sewers of said defendant, constructed or to be constructed, which do not now discharge directly or indirectly into said river. From the order overruling the demurrer, and also from the order for injunction, an appeal was taken to this court. The affidavits therefore, which were considered by the chancellor in making the order for injunction, are part of the case, as presented by the appeal to this court.

In 1867, the legislature passed a supplement to the charter of the city of Paterson, by the 17th section of which it is provided "that the mayor and aldermen of the city of Paterson are hereby authorized to cause such surveys, maps, and returns to be made, as may be necessary to enable them to prescribe and adopt, either for the whole or any part of said city, the location of streets and sewers or either, and the width thereof, hereafter to be opened or constructed therein, and when such location, width, and grade shall be adopted, the surveys, maps, and returns, prescribing and defining the same, shall be recorded in the clerk's office of the county of Passaic, and thereupon no street or sewer shall thereafter within the district comprised in any such survey, map, or return be opened or constructed, except in conformity therewith as to location, width, and grade, and, fully to accomplish the purposes contemplated by this section, the said mayor and aldermen may employ such engineers, surveyors, and other persons, and provide for their compensation, and pass such ordinances as they may deem to be proper, and may enter upon any land for making surveys and examinations." Pub. Laws 1867, p. 653, § 17. It appears by the affidavits that in January, 1868, Gen. Viele presented a map and report of the city for a general system of sewerage. The map and report were referred to a joint committee of streets and finance, to ascertain what legislation would be necessary to enable the city to proceed with the work. Thereupon, under the direction of the public authorities, an act was drafted to enable the city to construct its sewers. On the 26th of February, 1868, an act of the legislature was passed, entitled "An Act to Authorize the Construction of Sewers and Drains in the City of Paterson." The second section of this act provides "that all such sewers and drains shall be constructed in conformity with the plans thereof adopted, or which shall be adopted, by said mayor and aldermen, pursuant to the 17th section of the act approved April 4, 1867, entitled 'A Further Supplement to the Act Entitled 'An Act Amending and Revising the Act to Incorporate the City of Paterson.''" By the said act the city was authorized to enter upon any lands for the purpose of making surveys and examinations, and to use the ground and soil under any street, highway, railroad, land, alley, or court within the city for the purpose of constructing the works contemplated by the said act. By the last section of the said act, it was declared that it should take effect immediately, and be deemed to be a public act. Laws 1868, p. 126. Under the sanction of this legislation, a number of sewers which are now part of the sewer system of the city were constructed. By an act passed in 1871 (Pub. Laws 1871, p. 808), the city charter was revised, and therein the power to construct sewers was continued. By the said affidavits it appears that all the sewers constructed under this legislation discharged into the Passaic river, and that at least up to the year 1872 the only system of constructing sewers which had been adopted in this country was by building them underground, with the outlet into the natural watercourse on the banks of which the city was built.

From this recital, I think it sufficiently appears that the city of Paterson had legislative authority to construct the system of sewers the use of which the complainants seek by their information and bill to restrain. Full power was conferred by this legislation upon the city of Paterson to adopt and execute its own plan of sewerage, so far as the rights of the state were concerned. If the power inhered in the legislature to bestow such authority upon the city, it is the settled law of this state that the municipal corporation is not responsible for those incidental damages that result from the proper exercise of its functions, and such exercise will not subject it to the charge of maintaining a public nuisance. Beseman v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 50 N. J. L. 235, 13 Atl. 164, Affirmed in 52 N. J. L. 221, 20 Atl. 169. So far as the authority of the state can avail for that purpose, the legislative consent furnishes ample protection to the city for the appropriate exercise of granted power.

Since the decision of Stevens v. Paterson & N. R. Co. in this court, reported in 34 N. J. L. 532, 3 Am. Rep. 269, it has been the conceded law that the title of the riparian owner on the navigable waters of the state, where the tide ebbs and flows, extends only to high-water mark, and that the state is the absolute owner of the bed of the waters beyond high-water mark. This adjudication leaves the riparian owners of lands on the Passaic river where the tide ebbs and flows without the right to relief. This question is discussed and settled in the opinion of this court in the case of Sayre v. Newark (N. J.) post, 722, 45 Atl. 985, and it is therefore unnecessary to refer to other authorities. But in that case the alleged injury affected only owners on tide water. The rights of those above the flow of the tide are in no wise involved in the decision of the Sayre Case. In Cobb v. Davenport, in our supreme court (32 N. J. L. 369), Mr. Justice Depue says "that by the common law all waters are divided into public waters and private waters. In the former, the proprietorship is in the sovereign; in the latter, in the individual proprietor. . . . The title of the individual, being personal in him, is exclusive,—subject only to servitude to the public for purposes of navigation, if the waters are navigable in fact. The test by which to determine whether waters are public or private is the ebb and flow of the tide. Waters in which the tide ebbs and flows, so far only as the sea flows and reflows, are public waters, and those in which there is no ebb and flow of the tide are private waters." In the case of Atty. Gen. v. Delaware & B. B. R. Co. 27 N. J. Eq. 631, the case of Cobb v. Davenport is cited with approbation. In pronouncing the opinion of this court, Mr. Justice Dixon said that the bed of the Delaware river above tide water is private property, subject to the paramount public right to use the river as a common highway, in which is included the right to preserve and improve the navigability of the water. No other qualification or restriction of the private ownership was intimated. The English cases sustaining the right to sewer into fresh-water streams under license from Parliament are not authority here. Our legislature has not like unlimited power to legalize a grant which is hostile to the interest of the riparian owner without providing compensation, as enjoined by our state Constitution. There is no such limitation upon the power of the British Parliament. The learned justice who delivered the opinion in the case of Atty. Gen. v. Delaware & B. B. R. Co. 27 N. J. Eq. 631, is too accurate in his statement of legal principles to have omitted to mention the right of a city above tide water to make the river an outlet for its sewers, if such a right in his judgment existed. It would be a barren title, if the owner could not invoke the aid of the law to preserve it from destruction.

It must therefore be concluded that the riparian owners of the Passaic river, above the point where the tide ebbs and flows, have title to the bed of the stream to the middle thereof, subject only to the right of the state to regulate navigation, so far as the water may be navigable. The relators, in the information of the attorney general, who are riparian owners above the flow of the tide, have a right of property in the river, and in that respect the legal rule applicable to them differs essentially from that which pertains to those below them, where the tide ebbs and flows. In Merrifield v. Worcester, 110 Mass. 216, 14 Am. Rep. 592, and in the more recent case of Valparaiso v. Hagen (Ind.) ante, 707, 54 N. E. 1062, in an opinion of much force, it is held that, where sewers emptying into fresh-water streams are constructed under legislative authority, the riparian proprietor cannot recover for the pollution of the stream, so far as it is attributable to the authorized plan of sewerage adopted by the city, but only in case the injury resulted from improper construction or unreasonable use of sewers, or negligence of the city in the case of them. Assent cannot be given to the correctness of these decisions, as they are not in harmony with the adjudications of our own legal tribunals. In Beach v. Sterling Iron & Zinc

Co. 54 N. J. Eq. 65, 33 Atl. 286, Vice Chancellor Pitney, in his able review of the authorities, criticised the case of Merrifield v. Worcester, and said that, so far as the expressions there used favor the notion that a city or town may collect and discharge sewage matter into a fresh-water stream to the injury of a riparian owner and without liability to action, they are contrary to the law as held in England for centuries. The decree in that case recognizing the right of the riparian owner was unanimously affirmed in this court, upon the opinion of the vice chancellor, in 55 N. J. Eq. 824, 41 Atl. 1117. Riparian owners above tide own ad medium filum aquæ, and have a property right in the water flowing along and over their land. This property right cannot be impaired, except by the lawful use of the waters by riparian owners higher up the stream. Lower owners must submit to such pollution as results from the natural or reasonable use of the owners above, produced by the surface drainage or by the percolation of offensive matter through the soil. But the higher owners cannot lawfully combine, and by construction of artificial conduits collect foul matter, and pour it in mass into the stream. Such a scheme, when put into operation, constitutes the taking of private property, which the legislature cannot authorize, except upon just compensation to the party injured. The rights of such riparian owners are clearly stated in the opinion of Mr. Justice Lippincott in this court in the case of East Jersey Water Co. v. Bigelow, 60 N. J. L. 201, 38 Atl. 631.

By reason of the location of the Jersey City waterworks upon the tidal stream, the mayor and common council of Jersey City, complainants in this suit, have no rights in the waters of the stream distinct from the rights of the general public therein, nor are they endowed with superior rights by the legislation of 1852. Pub. Laws 1852, p. 419. That legislation did not guarantee or assure to Jersey City the purity of the water, nor did it vest in Jersey City any part of the state's title in the tidal waters, upon which its present claim can be established and enforced. It was simply the consent of the state that Jersey City might withdraw such quantity of water from the Passaic as might be required to furnish a supply of pure and wholesome water. This provision was intended to qualify and limit the extent of the grant, so that the implication could not arise that Jersey City might, without further legislation, divert the water for other purposes than a water supply for domestic and other like purposes. At the time of the legislative grants to the city of Paterson, in 1867, 1868, and 1871, it would have been competent for the legislature to pass a law prohibiting the further use of the Passaic water in Jersey City, and compelling the city to procure its water elsewhere. Therefore the grant to Paterson must be regarded as a repeal by implication of the previous grant to Jersey City, if it was an impairment of that grant, which cannot be conceded. Jersey City v. Jersey City & B. R.

Co. 20 N. J. Eq. 366; Newark Aqueduct Board v. Passaic, 45 N. J. Eq. 393, 18 Atl. 106. Jersey City is without a standing to invoke the injunction power in this case.

Ordinarily, where the riparian owner is injured by an unlawful diminution of the quantity of water, or by its excessive pollution, when his legal right is established he is entitled to the exercise of the injunction power of a court of equity. Whether in this case the restraining order of the court should be interposed for the protection of the riparian owners above tide water is the remaining question to be considered. That question must be solved by determining whether, in the situation of the parties here, there is the presence of such circumstances and such equities as may justify this court in withholding its restraining arm. On the one hand, the riparian owner is entitled to redress in respect of the deprivation of his property. On the other hand, the city of Paterson, at an enormous expense, has put into operation under legislative authority, and for a long series of years has used and enjoyed, a system of sewerage which accommodates a population of over 100,000 people. By the restraint prayed for, this sewerage system will be suddenly destroyed, and the homes of this multitude of people will be rendered perilous to health and life, and unfit for occupancy. While the city cannot, upon this continued acquiescence of these riparian owners, predicate the right to deprive them of their property in the stream, yet in view of such acquiescence, and the magnitude of the injury which would fall upon the public by prohibiting the use of the sewers, it would be inequitable to enjoin, if relief can otherwise be afforded. The relators are here asking equity, and they must do equity. A substituted remedy, by giving them adequate compensation for their injury, would be a just disposition of the controversy. The granting or refusing of an injunction is a matter resting in the sound discretion of the court. Where it would cause great injury to the defendants, and might be of serious detriment to the public, without corresponding advantage to the complainant, it will not be granted. The authorities are collected in Stewart, N. J. Dig. p. 620, §§ 7-10. In Morris & E. R. Co. v. Prudden, 20 N. J. Eq. 531, Mr. Justice Depue, in delivering the opinion of this court, said "that an injunction ought not to be granted where the benefit secured by it to one party is but of little importance, while it will operate oppressively and to the great annoyance and injury of the other party, unless the wrong complained of is so wanton and unprovoked in its character as properly to deprive the wrongdoer of the benefit of any consideration as to its injurious consequences," and he recognized the fact of acquiescence as a consideration of importance in determining whether the defendants should be restrained. In the case before us, the injury to the defendants would be so great that an injunction should not be granted to these complainants, whose injury is incidental and comparatively small.

If these complainants amend their bill, or file a new bill asking for an injunction, unless the city will consent to make such compensation for the diminution in the value of their lands as shall be ascertained to be just, such equitable relief can be given to them.

A court of equity will, to effectuate justice, settle unliquidated damages. Coster v. Monroe Mfg. Co. 2 N. J. Eq. 487; Ingersoll v. Newton (N. J.) 45 Atl. 596. These riparian owners above the flow of the tide have the right, if they so elect, to pursue their remedy at law by instituting suits for damages. In that event the city would be driven to file its bill to restrain the suits, offering to make just compensation. That procedure was taken in Paterson, N. & N. Y. R. Co. v. Kamiah, 42 N. J. Eq. 93, 6 Atl. 444, and approved in this court, the decree being unanimously affirmed. Id. 47 N. J. Eq. 331, 21 Atl. 954.

The injunction should be vacated, and the record remitted to the court of chancery, and the case proceeded with in accordance with the views herein expressed.

Marcus SAYRE et al., Respts.,
v.
Mayor etc., of NEWARK et al., Appts.

(.....N. J.....)

- *1. The legislature of this state has constitutional power to confer on municipalities the right to use the tidal streams within our borders as outlets for public sewers carrying off surplus water and the sewage from buildings.
2. The charter of the city of Newark grants to the municipal authorities of the city the right to use the Passaic river as such an outlet.
3. The fact that such a use of the Passaic river pollutes the water and air in the neighborhood of a dock on the river owned by private persons, and thus lessens the value of the private property, will not justify an injunction to restrain the city from constructing and operating a sewer which the municipal authorities have, within the limits of their legal discretion, determined to be necessary for sewerage purposes.

(Lippincott, J., dissents.)

(April 2, 1900.)

APPPEAL by defendants from a decree of the Chancery Court enjoining defendants from depositing sewage in the Passaic river. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Joseph Coult, for appellants:

There is a distinction between injuries which affect the air merely by way of noises and disagreeable gases, resulting in personal discomfort, and those which injuriously affect the land itself or the structures upon it. As to the former, each person living in society must submit to a degree of discomfort depending in some measure upon the circumstances of his residence.

Hennessey v. Carmony, 50 N. J. Eq. 616, 25 Atl. 374.

The mere apprehension of a public nuisance from pollution of a stream by the sewage of a city does not present a case for an injunction.

Wood, Nuisances, §§ 788, 789; Wolcott v. Melick, 11 N. J. Eq. 204, 66 Am. Dec. 790; Duncan v. Hayes, 22 N. J. Eq. 25; Hutchinson v. Delano, 46 Kan. 345, 26 Pac. 740; Robb v. La Grange, 158 Ill. 21, 42 N. E. 77.

A court of equity exercises its restraining powers in cases of nuisance with very great caution.

Hagerty v. Lee, 45 N. J. Eq. 255, 17 Atl. 826; Atty. Gen. v. Delaware & B. B. R. Co. 27 N. J. Eq. 25; McNeal v. Assiscunk Creek Meadow Co. 37 N. J. Eq. 204; Stoudinger v. Newark, 28 N. J. Eq. 187; Washburn & M. Mfg. Co. v. Worcester, 116 Mass. 458.

The courts of equity will not sit in review of the proceedings of subordinate political municipal tribunals, and where matters are left to the discretion of such bodies, the exercise of that discretion in good faith is conclusive, and will not, in the absence of fraud, be disturbed.

High, Inj. 1st ed. § 765; Soden v. Emporia, 7 Kan. App. 583, 52 Pac. 461; Hines v. Lockport, 50 N. Y. 236; Wicks v. De Witt, 54 Iowa, 130, 6 N. W. 176; Brewster v. Davenport, 51 Iowa, 427, 1 N. W. 737; North Vernon v. Voegler, 103 Ind. 325, 2 N. E. 821; Sullivan v. Phillips, 110 Ind. 320, 11 N. E. 300; Avery v. Job, 25 Or. 512, 36 Pac. 293; Titus v. Boston, 161 Mass. 209, 36 N. E. 793; Detroit v. Hosmer, 79 Mich. 384, 44 N. W. 622.

Public work authorized by law, undertaken for the public benefit, will be deemed to be beneficial and not harmful, and such a work prosecuted by the public authorities will be presumed to have been properly constructed.

Michener v. Philadelphia, 118 Pa. 535, 12 Atl. 174; Allen v. Woods, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 59, 45 S. W. 106.

In cases where the nuisance is not created by a public body in the performance of a public duty, and where the remedy may be by suit, equity will interfere at the instance of a private individual only where the complainant suffers some private, direct, and material damage beyond that which is suffered by the public at large, and which without such interference will be an irreparable injury to him.

Higbee v. Camden & A. R. Co. 19 N. J. Eq. 276; Van Wagenen v. Cooney, 45 N. J. Eq. 24, 16 Atl. 689; Allen v. Monmouth County Freeholders, 13 N. J. Eq. 68; Hinchman v. Paterson Horse R. Co. 17 N. J. Eq. 75, 86 Am. Dec. 252; Bigelow v. Hartford Bridge Co. 14 Conn. 565, 36 Am. Dec. 502; O'Brien v. Norwich & W. R. Co. 17 Conn. 372; Irwin v. Division, 9 How. 28, 13 L. ed.

*Headnotes by DIXON, J.

See note to Platt Brothers & Co. v. Waterbury, ante, 691.
48 L. R. A.

33; Smith v. Boston, 7 Cush. 254; 10 Enc. Pl. & Pr. p. 897.

Mere diminution in the value of his property without irreparable injury will not furnish the foundation for equitable relief.

Morris & E. R. Co. v. Prudden, 20 N. J. Eq. 530; Zabriskie v. Jersey City & B. R. Co. 13 N. J. Eq. 314; Raritan Twp. v. Port Reading R. Co. 49 N. J. Eq. 11, 23 Atl. 127.

The Passaic river is a tidal stream. The complainant has no right in the waters of this river, by virtue of its riparian proprietorship.

Stevens v. Paterson & N. R. Co. 34 N. J. L. 532, 3 Am. Rep. 269; Gould v. Hudson River R. Co. 6 N. Y. 522; Wood, Nuisances, § 502; Brookline v. Mackintosh, 133 Mass. 215.

The primary uses of tidal rivers are navigation and drainage.

Having no rights as a riparian owner in tidal waters, a shore owner cannot complain of injury to the water caused by the discharge therein of polluting matter, unless a nuisance is created thereby by which he is specially injured, as, for instance, by a deposit of matter in front of his dock, interfering with its use.

Haskell v. New Bedford, 108 Mass. 209; Lilly White v. Trimmer, 36 L. J. Ch. N. S. 525; Atty. Gen. v. Gee, L. R. 10 Eq. 131.

Mr. Thomas N. McCarter, Jr., for respondents:

The fact that this sewer is to serve a public need cannot avail against the private injury to the complainant, especially when, as shown in the case, it is perfectly possible to bring about the desired result by the mere repairing of an intercepting sewer already constructed, but allowed to fall in disrepair.

Higgins v. Flemington Water Co. 36 N. J. Eq. 538; Hennessy v. Carmony, 50 N. J. Eq. 616, 25 Atl. 374; Susquehanna Fertilizer Co. v. Malone, 9 L. R. A. 737, 73 Md. 268, 20 Atl. 900; Atty. Gen. v. Birmingham, 4 Kay & J. 528; Atty. Gen. v. Colney Hatch Lunatic Asylum, L. R. 4 Ch. 146.

The right of an individual to sue to enjoin a private nuisance of this character is unquestioned.

McDonald v. Newark, 42 N. J. Eq. 136, 7 Atl. 855; Miller v. Morristown, 47 N. J. Eq. 62, 20 Atl. 61, 48 N. J. Eq. 645, 25 Atl. 20; Hart v. Union County Freeholders, 59 N. J. L. 90, 29 Atl. 490.

Permission to build sewers does not give authority to create a nuisance.

Atty. Gen. v. Leeds, L. R. 5 Ch. 583; Atty. Gen. v. Birmingham, 4 Kay & J. 528; Atty. Gen. v. Hackney Local Board, L. R. 20 Eq. 626; Goldsmid v. Tunbridge Wells Improv. Comrs. L. R. 1 Eq. 161; Atty. Gen. v. Colney Hatch Lunatic Asso. L. R. 4 Ch. 146; Atty. Gen. v. Aton Local Board, L. R. 22 Ch. Div. 221; Morse v. Worcester, 139 Mass. 389, 2 N. E. 694; Chapman v. Rochester, 110 N. Y. 273, 1 L. R. A. 296, 18 N. E. 88; State v. Portland, 74 Me. 268, 43 Am. Rep. 586; Dwight v. Hayes, 150 Ill. 273, 37 N. E. 218; Grey v. Paterson (N. J.) ante, 717, 42 Atl. 749.

The building of such a sewer as this, under the evidence in this cause, must, from the nature of things, create a nuisance, and therefore will be enjoined on final hearing.

Rea v. White, 1 Burr. 337; Davidson v. Isham, 9 N. J. Eq. 186; Holsman v. Boiling Spring Bleaching Co. 14 N. J. Eq. 335; Ross v. Butler, 19 N. J. Eq. 294, 97 Am. Dec. 654; Cleveland v. Citizens' Gaslight Co. 20 N. J. Eq. 201; Wolcott v. Melick, 11 N. J. Eq. 204, 66 Am. Dec. 790; Duncan v. Hayes, 22 N. J. Eq. 25; Hennessy v. Carmony, 50 N. J. Eq. 616, 25 Atl. 374; Atty. Gen. v. Steward, 20 N. J. Eq. 415; Meigs v. Lister, 23 N. J. Eq. 199; Babcock v. New Jersey Stock Yard Co. 20 N. J. Eq. 296; Higgins v. Flemington Water Co. 9 Stew. 36 N. J. Eq. 538; State ex rel. Board of Health v. Hutchinson, 39 N. J. Eq. 218; Butterfoss v. State ex rel. Board of Health, 40 N. J. Eq. 325; Perrine v. Taylor, 43 N. J. Eq. 128, 12 Atl. 769; Beach v. Sterling Iron & Zinc Co. 54 N. J. Eq. 65, 33 Atl. 286; 55 N. J. Eq. 824, 41 Atl. 1117; State ex rel. State Bd. of Health v. Jersey City, 55 N. J. Eq. 116, 35 Atl. 835; State ex rel. Board of Health v. Lederer, 52 N. J. Eq. 675, 29 Atl. 444; Atty. Gen. v. Luton Local Bd. of Health, 2 Jur. N. S. 180; Atty. Gen. v. Kingston-on-Thames, 11 Jur. N. S. 597; Atty. Gen. v. Nichol, 16 Ves. Jr. 342; Dwight v. Hayes, 150 Ill. 273, 37 N. E. 218; Robb v. La Grange, 158 Ill. 21, 42 N. E. 77; Cutlin v. Valentine, 9 Paige, 575, 38 Am. Dec. 567; Woodruff v. North Bloomfield Gravel Min. Co. 9 Sawy. 441, 18 Fed. Rep. 753.

The doctrine that because it is municipal work it will be presumed to be proper, and the court will not interfere, has no authority in law.

Haskell v. New Bedford, 108 Mass. 209.

Mr. Robert H. McCarter also for respondents.

Dixon, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The complainant Marcus Sayre is the owner, and the Marcus Sayre Company is the lessee, of land having a frontage of about 200 feet on the west side of the Passaic river, in the city of Newark, where they carry on the business of buying and selling masons' materials. At that point, and for several miles above the city, the tide ebbs and flows in the river, and the river is navigable for vessels of considerable size. Consequently the state was the owner of the bed of the river below ordinary high-water mark, but in pursuance of an implied license from the state, growing out of the local common law of New Jersey, as declared in Bell v. Gough, 23 N. J. L. 624, and Stevens v. Paterson & N. R. Co. 34 N. J. L. 532, 3 Am. Rep. 269, the complainant, owning the upland, had built a dock in front thereof, and thus had acquired title to so much of the shore as was occupied by the dock. The object of the bill of complainant is to restrain the city of Newark from completing and using a public sewer now in process of construction, and designed to empty its contents into the Passaic river below low-water mark, about 56 feet north of the complainant's property.

The ground of objection is that the sewage discharged from the sewer will be carried by the tide to the complainant's property, and will so infect the water and air in the neighborhood as to impair the comfort and health of persons engaged on the premises, and thus lessen the value of the property. The sewer in question is designed to be an auxiliary in the city's plan of sewerage. Experience has shown that in times of heavy rain the existing sewers are inadequate to carry off the water and sewage that seek passage through them, and hence the filthy material is backed up into the streets and the cellars of connected buildings. The object of the new sewer is mainly to receive this surplus and conduct it to the river, and the evidence in the cause shows that the city authorities have exercised their discretion in planning the sewer, and are constructing it with care, for the accomplishment of that purpose. We are thus brought to the controlling questions in the case: (1) Whether the legislature has intended to authorize the city to construct and use such a sewer; (2) whether the legislature has constitutional power to grant such authority; and (3) whether the complainants, as private owners of property likely to sustain some incidental damage from the operation of the sewer, are entitled to have the city restrained from exercising the authority conferred.

As to the first question: By the original charter of Newark as a city, passed February 29, 1836 (Pub. Laws 1836, p. 185), the common council were empowered to pass all such ordinances as they should deem proper for regulating the streets, and causing common sewers and drains to be made in any part of the city. By a supplement to the charter passed February 28, 1838 (Pub. Laws 1838, p. 218), "the mayor and common council of the city, to enable them more fully, effectually, and completely to exercise the powers already conferred on them of passing all such ordinances as they shall think proper and of raising and borrowing money for causing common sewers and drains to be made in any part of the city," were authorized and empowered to take and appropriate to the use of the city all such lands, waters, and streams within and adjacent to the said city as might be suitable or necessary to drain and carry off the water from the streets, lanes, alleys, and grounds in the city. This act makes provision for compensation to the owners of property taken. By another supplement, approved February 28, 1849 (Pub. Laws 1849, p. 203), the city was empowered to cause the expense of building sewers to be assessed, in whole or in part, on the owners of property benefited. This plainly contemplates the construction of common sewers for the benefit of private property. By an act to revise and amend the charter of the city, approved March 11, 1857 (Pub. Laws 1857, p. 116), these provisions were re-enacted so far as they relate to the regulation of streets, the construction of sewers, and the assessment of the expense thereof on property benefited, and nothing therein contained was to impair or take away any right acquired or given by any former act. This statute also expressly empowered the council to provide for the protection and maintenance of the health of the city. By a supplement to this act approved March 19, 1857 (Pub. Laws 1857, p. 301), the authority of the city to construct the sewer in the first and second wards of the city, commonly known as the "North Sewer," is distinctly asserted by the legislature. This sewer was built to drain private property as well as streets, and empties into the Passaic river. A further supplement, approved March 26, 1872 (Pub. Laws 1872, p. 828), expressly recognizes the authority of the city to construct sewers in the public streets for the draining of private property lying along the streets. The evidence in this case shows that at least as early as 1854 the municipality constructed common sewers through the streets, having their final outlet in the Passaic river, to carry off, not only the water and refuse in the streets, but also the sewage from private property, and from that time to the present this power has been continually exercised. In Stoudinger v. Newark, 28 N. J. Eq. 187 (A. D. 1877), a bill was filed to prevent the city from constructing what is known as the "Millbrook Sewer," which ran from High street, through various streets, to the Passaic river, and was intended to conduct into the river the foul waters of the Millbrook, and the sewage of the streets and houses along its course. But Vice Chancellor Van Fleet decided that the city had power to build the sewer, and held that the location of sewers, their size and capacity, and the materials of which they should be constructed, were matters which by the charter were committed to the judgment of the municipal authorities, and so long as they kept within their power, and did not abuse it, their acts were not subject to judicial revision. The order of the court of chancery denying an injunction was affirmed by this court (28 N. J. Eq. 446), with a declaration that it was not only the right, but the duty, of the municipal authorities to erect and maintain all necessary sewers. In view of this course of public conduct on the part of the city, of this series of legislative enactments, and of these judicial utterances, we are impelled to the conclusion that the legislature has intended to confer upon the city of Newark the right to use the Passaic river as an outlet for such sewers as the municipal authorities deem necessary for removing the surplus water and sewage of the river and its inhabitants.

The next question is whether the legislature has the constitutional power to confer such a right. In Stevens v. Paterson & N. R. Co. 34 N. J. L. 532, 3 Am. Rep. 269, Chief Justice Beasley, expressing the opinion of this court that the legislature had the power to grant lands in a navigable river below high-water mark, without regard to the owner of the adjacent upland, declared "that all navigable waters within the territorial limits of the state, and the soil under such waters, belong in actual propriety to the public; that the riparian owner, by the common law, has no peculiar rights in the public domain, as incidents of his estate; . . . that, as a general rule, the public domain is subject altogether to the control of the legislature; . . . that, unless in certain particulars protected by the Federal Constitution, the public rights in navigable rivers can, to any extent, be modified or absolutely destroyed by statute. . . . But the dominion of the legislature over the jura publica appears to be unlimited. By this power they can be regulated, abridged, or vacated." These explicit declarations of the judgment of this court seem to place beyond question the power of the legislature to authorize the municipalities of the state to use the tidal navigable streams within our borders for sewerage purposes. The Federal Constitution interposes no obstacle to the exercise of such a power, provided the availability of the stream for interstate and foreign commerce be not impaired; and, as no private property exists in such waters, there remain only the jura publica, over which, in the words of the chief justice, the dominion of the legislature appears to be unlimited. Indeed, the history of sewers shows that from time immemorial the right to connect them with navigable streams has been regarded as part of the jus publicum. Although in England, until modern times, sewers were used chiefly to drain lowlands liable to be submerged by tide and rain, and the streets of towns, yet in other countries for centuries past, and more recently in England and the United States, they have been constructed to carry off the sewage of dwellings; and, whenever tidal streams could conveniently be reached, they have been employed as the medium of discharge to the sea. Such a use of public waters must necessarily entail some defilement. The degree of pollution to be permitted is a matter over which the legislature has full power and control. It therefore seems clear that in New Jersey the legislature may constitutionally confer on the municipalities of the state the right to use tidal streams for sewerage purposes, and that in the proposed construction and operation of the sewer now in question the city of Newark is within the limits of its delegated authority.

The last point for consideration is whether the complainants may restrain the exercise of this authority because of the incidental damage which it will cause to them and their property. The principle laid down by the supreme court in Beseman v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 50 N. J. L. 235, 13 Atl. 164, and approved by this court in 52 N. J. L. 221, 20 Atl. 169, disposes of this phase of the controversy. That principle is that if a corporation, though private, in the reasonable exercise of a franchise lawfully granted to it for a public purpose, causes an incidental damage to private property, such damage is damnum absque injuria. The principle thus enunciated is applicable a fortiori to a public corporation. The same doctrine was declared with reference to tidal streams in Stevens v. Paterson & N. R. Co. 34 N. J. L. 48 L. R. A.

532, 3 Am. Rep. 269, where the chief justice said that, "as a general rule, the public domain is subject altogether to the control of the legislature, and that incidental damage resulting to individuals from the exercise of such control gives no legal claim to compensation." We have, therefore, the city of Newark, a public corporation, executing, within the bounds of its discretion and with care, a franchise lawfully granted to it by the legislature for a public purpose, but thereby producing consequential damage to the complainants. Such damage is a loss for which there is no remedy. It is a burden to which the sufferers must submit, as members of the community from which they receive compensatory benefits. There are decisions in the courts of this state to the effect that even negligence on the part of a public corporation in the performance of a public function, whether quasi judicial or ministerial, will not justify an action for damages against the corporation on behalf of a person who has sustained special damages by reason of such neglect. The exact purport of these decisions, and whether, consistently with them, the aggrieved party might not seek relief by injunction or mandamus, under circumstances otherwise appropriate to those means of redress, we need not now consider; for there is neither allegation nor proof of such negligence in the present case.

Our conclusion is that the intended action of the city is lawful, and therefore the injunction issued out of chancery should be dissolved, and the bill dismissed.

Depue, J., concurring:

The Passaic river, at Newark, is a tidal stream. The ebb and flow of the ordinary tide at the Centre Street bridge, near which the mouth of the proposed sewer is located, is 4 feet and 9 inches. The river empties into Newark bay, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles below the bridge. The tides extend above the city to the Dundee dam, about 8 miles above the bridge, and 6 miles above the city line. As far up the river as Newark the river is navigable with steamboats and vessels engaged in the sea-going trade with almost every port in the United States on the Atlantic coast. Above the city the river is navigable with steamboats and vessels of considerable size as far as the Dundee dam. Between the city and the Dundee dam the Federal government has at times expended considerable sums of money in removing reefs and obstructions, and otherwise improving that part of the river for navigation. Besides the city of Newark, with its population of 250,000 inhabitants, Paterson, with its population of 100,000,—cities with large manufacturing establishments, discharging waste into the sewers, and sometimes directly into the stream,—the sewage of Passaic, Rutherford, Montclair, Orange, East Orange, Belleville, Arlington, Kearney, East Newark, and Harrison is carried into the river. With such a mass of sewage cast into the river, the waters of the stream have become polluted and foul. But this is not a suit by the attorney general, eo officio, for the purpose of vindicating or protecting any public right. The complainants are the owners of a lot of land in the city, having a frontage on the river of 250 feet, on which there have been erected a wharf and dock. The premises are used for the brick, lime, cement, and masons' materials business. A large part of the materials used in the business is brought there by boats and scows, and there are employed daily upon the premises from thirteen to twenty-five men, engaged in the business of the company. The outlet of the proposed sewer in the stream is just above the Centre Street Bridge, 55 feet north of the northerly line of the complainants' property. The suit is for the prevention of a private injury to private property anticipated by the construction of the proposed sewer. It presents at the threshold a consideration of the rights of the state, and of a riparian owner who has improved his connection with tide water.

The title to a tidal stream below ordinary high tide is in the state, as absolute owner. The decision of this court in Stevens v. Patterson & N. R. Co. 34 N. J. L. 532, 3 Am. Rep. 269, placed the law of this subject on a firm foundation as a finality. In that case Chief Justice Beasley, in delivering the opinion of the court, said: "As a general rule, the public domain is subject altogether to the control of the legislature, and that incidental damage resulting to individuals from the exercise of such control gives no legal claim to compensation. The principle seems universally conceded that, unless in certain particulars protected by the Federal Constitution, the public rights in navigable rivers can, to any extent, be modified or absolutely destroyed by statute. . . . The dominion of the legislature over the jura publica appears to be unlimited." This decision was made in a case where the riparian owner had neither wharfed out, nor otherwise improved, his connection with the tidal stream, and consequently had no property rights to be affected by the execution of the public grant then in question. How far the doctrine contained in this extract from the chief justice's opinion in its universality will be modified by the fact that in the present case the complainants have constructed a dock on the property in question, will hereafter be discussed. In fresh-water streams the property in the bed of the stream is in private ownership, with a usufruct as private property, subject to certain public rights. From an early period in England the right of drainage and sewerage was regarded as a public right, and was regulated by statute as early as Henry VI. 5 Chit. Burn., Just. 993; 5 Comyns, Dig. Sewers, 453, 465. In England and in this country power to construct and utilize sewers in private streams has frequently been granted by act of Parliament or act of the legislature. The right to devote a private stream to purposes which are to a certain extent public uses is founded on the common-law right of the upper proprietors. In streams of this class the right of upper proprietors is limited to the reasonable use of 48 L. R. A.

the common property. Higgins v. Flamington Water Co. 36 N. J. Eq. 538, 543. "In tidal streams, although the King has the property, the people have likewise the use necessary. Rea habet proprietum, sed populus habet usum ibidem necessarium." Callis, Sewers, 13; Hall, Rights of the Crown, 14. A right conferred by the state to use its property for sewer purposes is without limitations and qualifications that attach to the use of private property for those purposes.

By the charter of the city of Newark, and the supplements thereto, the legislature empowered the city to construct sewers so as to discharge into the Passaic. By the act of 1891 the power of the common council in this respect was transferred to the board of street and water commissioners. The location of the proposed sewer, and its connection with the river for the purpose of discharging sewage therein, were lawful acts, under competent municipal authority, and a legitimate exercise by the city of a right conferred by the legislature. The decision of this case must rest, therefore, on the legal rules established for determining the liability for damages to a riparian owner arising from the exercise of legislative authority for such use of a tidal stream, and the conditions under which the exercise of that right will afford redress to a riparian owner, who has improved his connection with tidal waters, for an injury to his property. Cases cited by the vice chancellor, such as Atty. Gen. v. Leeds, L. R. 5 Ch. 583, and Atty. Gen. v. Birmingham, 4 Kay & J. 528, are instances where the sewerage of a town was into small brooks, and the pollution was inevitable, and the property affected was private property. It will also be observed that in such cases the right of sewerage was under statutes which, as will appear by the Leeds Case, conferred the right to use the stream on condition that no nuisance was created. The cases cited from the courts of our own country, of which Chapman v. Rochester, 110 N. Y. 273, 1 L. R. A. 296, 18 N. E. 88; Nolan v. New Britain, 69 Conn. 668, 38 Atl. 703, 707, 708, and Dwight v. Hayes, 150 Ill. 273, 37 N. E. 218, are types, are also cases of drainage into small streams. In these cases the waters affected were private waters, and the appropriation of them for public sewerage far exceeded the reasonable use, such as determines the rights of upper and lower proprietors on private streams, and the injury was such as amounted to a palpable invasion of private property, and justifiable only under the right of eminent domain, on just compensation. Trenton Water Power Co. v. Raff, 36 N. J. L. 335; Nolan v. New Britain, 69 Conn. 668, 38 Atl. 703, 707, 708. Seifert v. Brooklyn, 101 N. Y. 136, 54 Am. Rep. 661, 4 N. E. 321, was an action for damages caused by the insufficiency of the sewerage system to carry off the sewage, whereby it was forced through a manhole, and inundated the plaintiff's premises. Cases coming under the above classifications are inapplicable to this litigation. These are the decisions on which the vice chancellor rests his judgment. They cannot rule this case, for the reason that the right of sewerage into private waters rests upon principles different from those which prevail where the sewerage is into public waters.

By the law of this state, a riparian owner has no property in the land by reason of his adjacency to tidal waters, while it remains under water. The inchoate right which the owner of the upland has to acquire an exclusive right to the property by wharfing out or otherwise improving the same gives him no property in the land while it remains under water. State, Roberts, Prosecutor, v. Jersey City, 25 N. J. L. 525; Stewart v. Fitch, 31 N. J. L. 18. Such was the title under discussion in Stevens v. Paterson & N. E. Co. 37 N. J. L. 532, 3 Am. Rep. 269, to which the expression of the chief justice, that incidental damages resulting to individuals from the exercise of legislative control gives no legal claim to compensation, was applied. At common law the right of the owner of lands along the shore of tidal waters extended only to ordinary high water; but in this state such owner may extend his improvements by wharves and other improvements to the low water. Such was declared to be the law in this state before the adoption of any of the statutes regulating riparian rights, and is attributed to what has been called "local usage" or "local common law." But by the common law of England and the local common law of this state the owner of riparian lands acquires a property in his reclamations by wharfing out or otherwise improving, and the state cannot appropriate the shore so recovered to public use, without adequate compensation. Consequently, for any invasion of his property, or use of it without lawful authority, such owner is entitled to the same remedies as the owner of property is entitled to under the general law of the state. Among the rights of a riparian owner who has made his improvements between high and low water mark is the right to the use of his wharf, and of access to the navigable waters. In Lyon v. Fishmongers' Co. decided in the House of Lords, and considered, not only in England, but in this country, as the leading authority on the subject of the right at common law of a riparian owner who has improved and wharfed out on the bank of the stream, Lord Cairns used this language: "Unquestionably the owner of a wharf on the river bank has, like every other subject of the realm, the right of navigating the river as one of the public. This, however, is not a right coming to him qua owner or occupier of any lands on the bank, nor is it a right which per se he enjoys in a manner different from any other member of the public. But, when this right of navigation is connected with an exclusive access to and from a particular wharf, it assumes a very different character. It ceases to be a right held in common with the rest of the public, for other members of the public have no access to or from the river at the particular place; and it becomes a form of enjoyment of the land, and of the river in connection with the land, the disturbance of which may be vindicated in damages by an action, or restrained by an injunction." L. R. 1 App. Cas. 602, 671. This doctrine of the common law in this respect has been affirmed as the law of this state. In Gough v. Bell, which established the law of this state as a finality, the action was in trespass quare cluuseum fregit. The defendant pleaded liberum tenementum. The plaintiff made title under a deed from the heirs of Coles for the upland adjoining Harsimus cove, above high water. Coles acquired title in 1804, and was the undisputed owner of the soil bounded by the river. The defendant made title under a survey by the proprietors of East Jersey to Boudinot, dated May 21, 1802, for 53½ acres of land then lying entirely below ordinary high water in Harsimus bay. Boudinot, January 2, 1804, conveyed to Budd, in fee, the same lands. November 8, 1836, an act of the legislature was passed vesting in Budd all the right and title of the state of New Jersey to the lands which had been surveyed to Boudinot, and conveyed to him by Boudinot. Pub. Laws 1836, p. 13. The grant of the state to Budd was for lands entirely under water, and the right of the state to make such a grant, independently of considerations hereafter mentioned, was undisputed. The question was whether the title so granted was valid as against the Coles title. It appeared in the case that as early as 1814 or 1815 Coles commenced the erection of a wharf extending from his own land towards the channel of the river, a distance of over 1,000 feet, which was completed before the passage of the act of 1836. He also reclaimed a part of the mud flats in front of his land, lying between high and low water, by filling in with earth, and raising them above the level of the tide. At the time of the passage of the act the place where the trespass was committed was not subject to the flow and reflow of the tide. It was admitted, as was stated by Chief Justice Green, that, within the boundaries of the grant, the legislature had power to make it, and the question for decision was whether the title to the locus in quo was in the state at the time of the passage of the act. After an exhaustive examination of prior decisions in this state, the chief justice expressed his conclusions that "the title of the state extends, as at common law, to high-water mark, but it is to high-water mark as it actually exists. Where the waters have receded by alluvion, or by the labor of the adjoining proprietor, the title of the state does not extend beyond the actual high-water line. That any encroachment upon the shore or other part of the public domain may at all times be restricted and controlled by legislation is admitted. That any erection prejudicial to the common rights of navigation or fishery may be abated is not denied. But, in the absence of such legislative restriction, where no nuisance is created, the riparian proprietor may appropriate the shore between high and low water mark to his own use." He adds: "The custom of making such appropriation, long enjoyed and universally acquiesced in, constitutes a local common law, which this court will recognize, and which it would be alike unsafe and unwise to disregard." The chief justice then expressed his opinion (which was concurred in by the court) that the act of 1836 did and could convey to Budd no title to the soil from which the flow and reflow of the tide had been excluded by the improvements of the riparian owners at the time of the passage of the act, and judgment was given for the plaintiff. The judgment of the supreme court was affirmed in the court of errors and appeals, and by these decisions the law was settled in this state that, if the owner of land bounded by the shore upon tide water make improvements upon or reclaim the shore adjoining his lands, the part of the shore so improved or reclaimed belongs to him, and cannot be granted by the state. 22 N. J. L. 441, 23 N. J. L. 624. In a subsequent case Chief Justice Green, in referring to the decision of Gough v. Bell, used this language: "By the common law of this state, wharves erected by the shore owner below tide, and within the limits of the jus publicum, vest in the shore owner. It was so held by all the court in Gough v. Bell. The judges, it is true, differed as to the foundation and nature of the right of the shore owner; but all agreed that, when the land was reclaimed or the wharf erected by the tacit or express consent of the legislature, it became private property, and divested of its public character. And the owner has the same absolute dominion over it—the same exclusive right of enjoyment in it—that he has in and over other private property." O'Neill v. Annett, 27 N. J. L. 290, 293, 72 Am. Dec. 364. In Keyport & M. P. S. B. Co. v. Farmers' Transp. Co., Chief Justice Beasley, delivering the opinion of this court, used this language: "It has already been conclusively settled by judicial decisions in this state that after such landowner has reclaimed from the dominion of the water the land along his front, even beyond low-water mark, his title to such portion thus reclaimed becomes vested and indefeasible, except so far as it, in common with all other property, is subject to the state's eminent domain." 18 N. J. Eq. 511, 516. And in the Stevens Case Chief Justice Beasley, referring to Gough v. Bell, remarked that the final decision in that case was a concurrence in the views expressed by Chief Justice Green in his opinion delivered in the supreme court, and he declared that the existence and legality of the usage which conferred on the riparian owner the right to extend his lands by artificial means below the line of high water was res judicata in this state. 34 N. J. L. 545, 3 Am. Rep. 269. Property in a wharf or dock on a navigable stream consists in the ability of the owner to use the structure in connection with the navigable water.

The problem for solution, then, is the consideration of the scope of the legislative authority granted to the city to connect its sewers with the Passaic, in respect to the 48 L. R. A.

rights of a riparian owner who has improved and acquired a property in his improvements by reclaiming and wharfing out. I am unwilling to assent, even sub silentio, to the proposition that under our law the city of Newark may vent its sewage into the river ad libitum, to the destruction of wharves and docks on the Passaic of great value and of incalculable public benefit, without the owners of such property being entitled to a remedy by action or otherwise. Such, in my judgment, is not the law of this state. The evidence in this case shows that the complainants have sustained a serious injury by the discharge of earth and sewage into the streams from the city sewer at Ballantine's dock, which was carried by the water to and in front of the complainants' dock—that the complainants' dock has thereby been filled up from year to year by the refuse coming down from the sewer, so that occasionally the dock had to be dredged out. The gravamen of the complaint in this bill is the apprehension of the same or greater injury in that respect by the opening of the proposed sewer nearer to their property. The injury complained of and apprehended is purely an injury to private property, in which the public is in no sense concerned. For such an injury, done without legislative sanction, an action will lie. The city justifies under the power conferred on it by the legislature. The issue in this case presents the construction and effect of the powers granted by the legislature to the city for the use of the Passaic for sewerage, with respect to injuries sustained by the owners of improved riparian property, for which, without competent legislative authority, an action or injunction might be maintained. The legal rules that control where an injury to private property is occasioned in the course of the exercise of legislative authority were adjudged in Beaman v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 50 N. J. L. 235, 13 Atl. 164. Affirmed in this court in 52 N. J. L. 221, 20 Atl. 169. The suit was brought by an owner of property adjacent to the tracks of the company's railroad, alleging an injury from the use of the company's track for the passage of locomotives and cars in the transportation of cattle, sheep, swine, manure, and other freight, so as to render his dwelling houses unfit for habitation, and wrongfully allowing its cars loaded with such freight, both in the daytime and at all hours of the night, to stand upon said track, emitting noisome odors, etc., and shifting and distributing its cars, and blowing the whistles of its locomotives, and causing great and unusual noises, etc., and jarring the doors and walls of said dwelling houses, etc., whereby, etc. To the declaration the defendant pleaded its chartered right to build a railroad, and that it used the same in the prosecution of its business as a common carrier of passengers and freight, as it lawfully might do, and did thereby necessarily create some smells and some noises, and did necessarily shift and distribute its cars, and did necessarily transport thereon cattle, sheep, swine, manure, and other freight, as it lawfully might do.

without that, etc. This plea was demurred to, and the chief justice, in sustaining the plea, placed his opinion on the stable ground that the franchises granted to the defendant legalized the running of trains and the transportation of freight by the company, and, the acts complained of being themselves lawful, those incidental injuries which necessarily and unavoidably resulted from the exercise of legislative authority, if prosecuted in all respects with care and skill, were damnum absque injuria. It will be observed that the chief justice in the decision of this case qualified the doctrine on which the Stevens Case was decided, and limited the immunity of such public body from liability for damages resulting to individuals from the exercise of legislative control to those incidental injuries which necessarily and unavoidably result from the exercise of legislative authority, and added a condition that the franchises granted should be exercised with due care and skill. The difference in this respect between the decisions in the two cases was eminently proper. In the first case the chief justice was dealing with the right of a riparian owner who had acquired no property by improving his connection with the tidal stream, and in the other case the injury was to an owner of adjacent lands whose property was affected in the exercise of public franchises under legislative authority.

The doctrine adjudged in the Beseman Case accords with the decisions of the English courts. Vaughan v. Taff Vale R. Co. 5 Hurlst. & N. 679; Hammersmith & C. R. Co. v. Brand, L. R. 4 H. L. 171; London, B. & S. C. R. Co. v. Truman, L. R. 11 App. Cas. 45. In these cases the injuries, the subject of suit, were such as resulted from the operation of railways under legislative authority, and it was held that an action would not lie for damage necessarily resulting from the exercise of the powers of an act of Parliament: that a cause of action could arise only from negligence in the execution of the statutory powers. These decisions were made upon statutory powers granted to private corporations in the exercise of public franchises for their own emolument. The legal rule thus established has greater support in reason and in public policy with respect to municipal bodies upon which devolve the duty of providing sewers for the health and comfort of the inhabitants. It was applied to the construction and operation of a sewer built and managed by a public body under statutory authority, and held that it was a public body acting in the discharge of a public duty, and, as that which happened was only the inevitable result of what Parliament had authorized them to do, they were not liable. Dixon v. Metropolitan Bd. of Works, L. R. 7 Q. B. Div. 418. In Geddis v. Proprietors of Bann Reservoir, the defendants were incorporated by statute to make and maintain by means of a reservoir a constant water supply for owners of mills situate on the river Bann. To do this they had power to collect waters into a reservoir, from which water was from time to time to be sent down to the river through a channel in a stream called "Muddock," and they had power to maintain, widen, deepen, and cleanse proper channels and watercourses, etc. The plaintiff's property was injured by flooding, as the result of the defendant's permitting to pour down through the channel of the Muddock more water than it would hold. In the House of Lords it was held that the plaintiff was entitled to recover in an action for damages, on the ground that the defendants, having power to widen and deepen the channel of the Muddock sufficiently to contain the water, were bound to do so before sending the water down. Lord Blackburn, in his opinion, states the principle in these words: "It is now thoroughly well established that no action will lie for doing that which the legislature has authorized, if it be done without negligence, although it does occasion damage to anyone, but an action does lie for doing that which the legislature has authorized, if it be done negligently. And I think that if by a reasonable exercise of the powers either given by statute to the promoters, or which they have at common law, the damage could be prevented, it is, within this rule, 'negligence' not to make such reasonable exercise of their powers." L. R. 3 App. Cas. 430, 455.

The principle adjudged in the Beseman Case was applied by the Supreme Court of the United States under circumstances identical with those in this case. Boston v. Leocran, 17 How. 426, 437, 15 L. ed. 118, 123; Richardson v. Boston, 19 How. 263, 270, 15 L. ed. 639, 642. These two decisions were upon the same facts, and in relation to the same property. The city had power by statute to construct its sewers into tide water, and the owner had erected a wharf on adjoining property. The first case was by the tenant in possession; the other, by the owner. In the first case it was held that an injury to the wharf arising from the construction of the owner into tide water was damnum absque injuria; but in the second case it was held that if the drain constructed by the city was not carried out sufficiently to discharge its contents so as to be swept off by the tides, but caused an accumulation of matter at the outer end of the plaintiff's wharves, in so much that vessels could not approach with the same depth of water as formerly, that was an injury to the plaintiff for which he was entitled to recover. The use of the Passaic river by the city as an outlet for its sewers being lawful, such incidental injuries as necessarily and unavoidably result from the exercise of such legislative authority are damnum absque injuria; but for injuries arising from negligence the city, being without the protection of legislative authority, is responsible therefore to the owners of improved riparian property. For it will be observed that the legal rule which exempts public bodies from liability to pay damages for injuries to private property applies only to those incidental injuries which necessarily and unavoidably result from the exercise of the legislative authority. The city justifies under the power contained in its charter. In its answer it describes the construction and use of the proposed sewer as the best plan that could be devised, by ventilation and otherwise, to prevent the venting of fermented and foul sewage into the river, the location and use of the sewer, etc., with great particularity. The answer of the city to the bill of complaint, as a justification, conforms in principle to the plea in the Beesman Case. These averments present an issue for decision in this case,—in fact, the real issue on which this litigation should be disposed of. An answer justifying under the city charter, which authorized the city to connect its sewers with the Passaic, without such averments as are contained in this answer, with respect to the location, construction, and use of this sewer, would have been imperfect, and would be struck out. And, on the testimony taken, prominence was given to evidence explanatory of the location, mode of construction, and adaptability of the proposed sewer to lessen the injury to private property that might be affected by the sewerage. By the evidence it appears that the sewer proposed to be constructed by the city is 4,347 feet in length, with an opening into the Passaic 6 feet in diameter, and extending below low-water mark. It extends into sewer districts Nos. 5 and 6 of the city. District No. 5 embraces an area of 225 acres, and the sewer now in that district is discharged into the Passaic at Ballantine's dock, 254 feet north of the complainants' property. District No. 6 embraces 562 acres, and the sewer now in that district is discharged through Market street into the Passaic at the city dock, 2,000 feet south of the complainants' property. Into the proposed sewer will drain 295 acres in a thickly populated portion of the city, having a population estimated at 20,000. The necessity for this sewer arises from the fact that the sewerage in these two districts has become inadequate, because of the increase of storm water, and a nuisance was created by the overflow of the sewers in times of heavy rains, lifting off the covers of the manholes, and discharging sewage into the streets and flooding the cellars. The proposed sewer was designed as a means of relief. Upon the construction of this sewer, it is not proposed to dispense with the sewers that are now in existence in these districts. The sewer begins in Arlington street, near the Market street sewer, crosses sewers that are connected with the sewer system emptying into the Passaic at the city dock and at Ballantine's dock, and is adapted to carry off storm water, which would accumulate at the time of severe rains. Necessarily it would take up some part of the house sewage. Otherwise than relieving that portion of the city that was flooded at times of severe rains from the overflow of water, the proposed sewer did not increase the sewage carried into the river by the sewers already in existence. The separation of the fluids in sewage from the solid matter appears to be a step in the right direction. The plan for construction provides for ventilated manholes every 200 feet, for the purpose of relieving the sewer from the evolved gases, and the delivery of the sewage at the mouth of the sewer, as far as possible, in an unfermented state. This method of constructing sewers is of recent adoption. The testimony of the witnesses who are experts on the subject makes it clear that a sewer constructed with such ventilation as the sewage proceeds from the intake to the outlet will relieve the outlet, in a great measure, from the foul gases usually discharged. Mr. Schaeffer, a witness called by the complainants, says that perforated covers placed over the manholes would prevent decomposition, by admitting fresh air and causing the interior of the sewer to be kept cooler, and less liable to be in a condition for decomposition to take place. Therefore the sewage would be deposited at the outlet more freely in its natural state. Dr. Disbrow testifies: "There is no danger from sewerage poison if the sewage is active. As long as it flows with plenty of ventilation, there is no danger whatever. If the ventilation were every 200 feet, enough oxygen would be supplied to dilute the gas sufficiently for its complete oxidation or burning up, and would be the only scientific way to construct a sewer. If it were so constructed, there could not be at the point of discharge any obnoxious odors or gases that would be injurious or affect anyone." Dr. Wallace says: "The sewer is to be constructed with perforated manholes. With these, any gases which might arise through decomposition would be liberated. There would not be much smell at point of discharge. Gas would not be liberated if the discharge was below the surface of the river, as it would if it dropped down into the river." Ernest Adams says: "The perforated tops in sewers help to create a current of air, and are considered to be the only method, or one of the best methods, to ventilate sewers." It is a fair deduction from the evidence with respect to ventilation in the course of the sewer that the emission of foul gases in the other sewers, such as that at Ballantine's dock and the city dock sewer, was probably due to the fact that the sewage was not subjected to the ventilating process in its passage to the river.

For the purpose of determining what acts of a city in the construction and use of its sewers are or are not actionable, the distinction is between the duties of a municipality which are judicial or quasi judicial, and those which are ministerial. With respect to the former no action is maintainable, and a remedy by action is given only for negligence in performing such duties as are ministerial. In Attwood v. Bangor, 83 Me. 582, 22 Atl. 466, the action was to recover damages for the unlawful location, construction, and maintenance of a sewer below low-water mark in the Penobscot river, whereby the plaintiff's dock was rendered less valuable, by reason of the liability of vessels to ground on the end of the sewer, and on the sediment flowing out of it. It was held by the court that the city had a right to extend its sewer across the flats of the river to a point below low-water mark; that, in the performance of its duty to the public in locating sewers for the drainage of the city, the city council acted judicially, and for that judicial act the city was under no common-law liability, but, if the construction was improperly and unskillfully made it was a ministerial act, for which the city might be made liable to any party injured thereby. The same distinction between the duties of municipal authorities with respect to acts that are of a quasi judicial nature, involving the exercise of judgment and discretion, and depending upon considerations affecting the public health and general convenience throughout an extensive territory, and ministerial duties, such as the construction and repair of sewers, was adopted in the Supreme Court of the United States in Johnston v. District of Columbia, 118 U. S. 19, 30 L. ed. 75, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 923. To the same effect are Morse v. Worcester, 139 Mass. 389, 2 N. E. 694; Child v. Boston, 4 Allen, 41, 81 Am. Dec. 680; Franklin Wharf Co. v. Portland, 67 Me. 46, 24 Am. Rep. 1; Lynch v. New York, 76 N. Y. 60, 32 Am. Rep. 271; and Clark v. Peckham, 10 R. I. 35, 14 Am. Rep. 654.

The complainants have no cause of complaint that the outlet of this sewer is nearer their property than the sewers already in the river. The location of the outlet of a public sewer is necessarily committed to the discretion of the public authorities. The proper place for such location is determined by public necessity and convenience, and the decision of the municipal authorities on this subject is conclusive, because it is the exercise of a discretion reposed in them by law, and not reviewable by the courts. Attwood v. Bangor, 83 Me. 582, 22 Atl. 466; Morse v. Worcester, 139 Mass. 389, 2 N. E. 694; Lynch v. New York, 76 N. Y. 60, 32 Am. Rep. 271; Stouder v. Newark, 28 N. J. Eq. 187. This whole subject is considered and decided by the supreme court of Massachusetts in Merrifield v. Worcester, 110 Mass. 216, 14 Am. Rep. 592. In that case the plaintiff was the owner of land abutting on a natural stream running through the city. He sued the city for the violation of his rights as riparian owner, in polluting its waters so as to render them unfit for mechanical and other purposes. The drains and sewers were constructed by the city under authority conferred upon the common council by the city charter. The ground of liability was that dirt, filth, and other materials were carried into the stream by means of these drains and sewers. It was held that the plaintiff could not recover against the city for the pollution so far as it was attributable to the plan of sewerage adopted by the city, but that a recovery might be had so far as it was attributable to the improper construction or unreasonable use of the sewers, or to the negligence or other fault of the city in the care or management of them; that for the incidental disadvantage, loss, or inconvenience necessarily resulting to individuals in their rights of property from the maintenance and use of the drains in a proper and reasonable manner, without negligence in their care and management, no action could be maintained, but in the construction of works so laid out the town or city is responsible that it will be done in a proper manner, and with a reasonable degree of skill and care, and if, for want thereof, any unnecessary injury is caused to the property or rights of individuals, the town or city may be charged therewith. This case has been discredited as applied to private waters, where reasonable use is the measure of the right of the upper proprietor; but the doctrine of the case is abundantly supported upon principle and authority as to tidal streams, where the right of the public has been derived from the state to use its property, and maladministration of the powers conferred is the condition of responsibility. It must be assumed that the city, in the exercise of its rights, will make all reasonable efforts to avoid injury either to riparian owners, or to the health and comfort of its inhabitants. If by the use of the river for sewers by the city, or by other places along the river, its condition has become such that such use should be prohibited or regulated, the subject devolves upon the legislature to prohibit or regulate as in its judgment may seem fit. In England statutes regulating sewers and the use of streams for that purpose have been passed, some of which are referred to in 16 English Ruling Cases, 413-427, 619-628. From an early period in England a body known as "Commissioners of Sewers" has been in existence, with extensive powers and control over the subject. 5 Comyns, Dig. title Sewers, pp. 453 et seq.; 5 Chit. Burn, Just. 593. Under the law of the state the city has the right to construct this sewer, with an outlet into the Passaic river at such a point as the duly-constituted authorities of the city in their judgment should adopt. If, by reason of fault in the construction or management of the sewer, injury to private property is sustained, redress may be had therefor by an action for damages, but the evidence makes no case for an injunction quia timet. For the reasons above given, I concur in the decision of this court reversing the decree of the court of chancery, and dismissing the complainants' bill.

Lippincott, J., dissents.

OHIO SUPREME COURT.

CINCINNATI VOLKSBLATT COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,

v.

Albert F. HOFFMEISTER.

(62 Ohio St. 189.)

*1. Injunction is the proper form of remedy to enforce the right of a stockholder in a private corporation, given by § 3254, Rev. Stat., to inspect the books and records of the corporation.

*2. The right to inspect does not depend upon the motive or purpose of the stockholder in demanding such inspection, and a petition which shows that the plaintiff is a stockholder, that he has requested the defendant to allow him to inspect the books and records of the corporation, and fix a reasonable time for the same, which request has been refused, states a cause of action.

*3. As incident to such right is the right to have such inspection by a proper agent, and to take copies from such books and records.

(March 6, 1900.)

ERROR to the Superior Court of Cincinnati to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in a proceeding to obtain permission to inspect the books of the defendant corporation. Affirmed.

Statement by Spear, J.:

The defendant in error, Albert F. Hoffmeister, commenced his action against the Cincinnati Volksblatt Company, in the superior court of Cincinnati, by the filing of a petition in which it is alleged that: "The defendant is a corporation organized under the laws of the state of Ohio. The plaintiff is a stockholder in said corporation, and is the owner and holder of five (5) shares of its capital stock, of the face value of five hundred ($500) dollars each. The plaintiff has requested the defendant to allow him to inspect the books and records of said corporation, and to fix a reasonable time for said inspection. Defendant has refused such request, and refuses to allow the plaintiff to inspect its books and records at any time. Wherefore the plaintiff prays that the defendant be enjoined from refusing to allow him to inspect its books and records, and prays the court for such other and further relief as he may be entitled to at law or in equity." A demurrer to the petition being overruled, the defendant company answered, admitting its corporate existence, and that plaintiff is the owner of the number of shares of stock alleged in the petition, and denying other allegations; also averring that the plaintiff's action was not brought in good faith, but to compel defendant to purchase the stock held by him under a threat to apply for the appointment of a receiver for the company; also that plaintiff is interested in a rival company, a competitor of defendant, and the application is made in bad faith, for the purpose of injuring defendant, and to compel it to purchase the stock; also that plaintiff is not, under the allegations of the petition, entitled to any relief, and that the court has no jurisdiction of the action. A reply took issue with the new matter alleged. Upon trial the court found the issues for the plaintiff; that he is entitled to inspect any of the books and records of defendant, at any reasonable time, and that he may make such inspection by himself or by agent, bookkeeper, or accountant, and may take copies of any of said books and records; and judgment was entered enjoining defendant from preventing an inspection of any of the books and records of defendant, at any reasonable time, and the taking of copies thereof by the plaintiff himself, or by his agent, bookkeeper, or accountant. This judgment was affirmed by the general term of the superior court and the company brings error.

Mr. Charles W. Baker, for plaintiff in error:

Plaintiff below has mistaken his remedy. It is not by injunction, mandatory or otherwise.

High, Inj. § 2.

If the plaintiff has any remedy at all, it is by mandamus under § 6741, Rev. Stat.

State ex rel. Templin v. Farmer, 7 Ohio C. C. 429; Spelling, Priv. Corp. §§ 656, 657; High, Extr. Legal Rem. §§ 5-24; 4 Thomp. Corp. § 4431; 2 Kinhead, Code Pl. § 790.

No stockholder is entitled to any such sweeping and omnibus order as is to be found in this final decree, and certainly not on the plaintiff's petition.

Pratt v. Meriden Cutlery Co. 35 Conn. 36; Grant, Corp. § 311; Foster v. White, 36 Ala. 467, 6 So. 88; American Asylum v. Phoenix Bank, 4 Conn. 172, 10 Am. Dec. 112; Com. ex rel. Sellers v. Phoenix Iron Co. 105 Pa. 111, 51 Am. Rep. 184; Lyon v. American Screw Co. 16 R. I. 472, 17 Atl. 61; People ex rel. Hatch v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 11 Hun. 1, Affirmed in 70 N. Y. 220.

The demurrer should have been sustained.

1 Kinhead, Code Pl. § 682; Putnam v. Valentine, 5 Ohio, 187; Van Wert v. Webster, 31 Ohio St. 420; Spangler v. Cleveland, 43 Ohio St. 526, 3 N. E. 365.

Messrs. Alfred B. Benedict and Jerome D. Creed, for defendant in error:

The stockholder's remedy to compel an inspection under the statute is by suit in equity for a mandatory injunction. He has no remedy by mandamus.

Mandamus in Ohio has preserved its original high, prerogative character, issuing only to redress public injuries, and never to redress private grievances.

State ex rel. Brass v. Carpenter, 51 Ohio St. 83, 37 N. E. 261; Freon v. Carriage Co.

*Headnotes by the Court.

NOTE.—As to the right to inspect books of the corporation, see Welhenmayer v. Bitner (Md.) 45 L. R. A. 446, and note; also State ex rel. Weinberg v. Pacific Brewing & Malting Co. (Wash.) 47 L. R. A. 208. 48 L. R. A.

42 Ohio St. 30, 51 Am. Rep. 794; Holland v. Dickson, L. R. 37 Ch. Div. 669; Mutter v. Eastern & M. R. Co. L. R. 38 Ch. Div. 92; Pender v. Lushington, L. R. 6 Ch. Div. 70; Huyler v. Cragin Cattle Co. 40 N. J. Eq. 392, 2 Atl. 274; Mitchell v. Rubber Reclaiming Co. (N. J. Eq.) 24 Atl. 407; 4 Thomp. Corp. § 4432; Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1412.

Mandamus is not the proper remedy to restore to membership in a corporation a member unlawfully excluded.

Fraternal Mystic Circle v. State ex rel. Fritter, 61 Ohio St. 628, 48 N. E. 940.

At common law a stockholder had a right to inspect, but some courts held that he must allege some reason for wanting an inspection, while other courts held that the right was absolute, just as the right of a partner is absolute to have access to the books of his partnership.

2 Cook, Stock & Stockholders, 4th ed. § 512.

Where a statute confers a right to inspect, the right is absolute. All that the stockholder needs to do is to bring himself within the language of the statute.

Holland v. Dickson, L. R. 37 Ch. Div. 669; Mutter v. Eastern & M. R. Co. L. R. 38 Ch. Div. 92; Pender v. Lushington, L. R. 6 Ch. Div. 70.

Stock in Ohio is personal property.

Rev. Stat. § 3255.

Stock is not the certificate, but the sum total of the rights a stockholder has in the company, to wit: the right to dividends, the right to vote, the right to a certificate of stock, the right to have the certificate transferred on the books of the company, the right to inspect the books, and other rights not necessary to enumerate.

Jermain v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 91 N. Y. 483; Elliott, Priv. Corp. § 81, p. 61; 1 Bl. Com. p. 138.

One may assert his property rights regardless of motive.

Letts v. Kessler, 54 Ohio St. 73, 40 L. R. A. 177, 42 N. E. 765; Morris v. Tutthill, 72 N. Y. 575; Davis v. Flagg, 35 N. J. Eq. 491; M'Donald v. Smalley, 1 Pet. 620, 7 L. ed. 287; 4 Thomp. Corp. § 4412; 1 Cook, Stock & Stockholders, 4th ed. § 514; State ex rel. Wilson v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 29 Mo. App. 301; State ex rel. Spinney v. Sportman's Park & Club Asso. 29 Mo. App. 326; Mitchell v. Rubber Reclaiming Co. (N. J. Eq.) 24 Atl. 407; Martin v. William J. Johnston Co. 25 Abb. N. C. 350, 12 N. Y. Supp. 844; Foster v. White, 86 Ala. 467, 6 So. 88.

Plaintiff need not show that he was injured by the refusal to let him see the books.

Kelsey v. Pfaulder Process Fermentation Co. 20 N. Y. S. R. 533, 3 N. Y. Supp. 723.

The right is not personal merely.

4 Thomp. Corp. § 4426; Foster v. White, 86 Ala. 467, 6 So. 88; Mitchell v. Rubber Reclaiming Co. (N. J. Eq.) 24 Atl. 407; Phoenix Iron Co. v. Com. ex rel. Sellers, 113 Pa. 563, 6 Atl. 75; State ex rel. Martin v. Bienville Oil Works Co. 28 La. Ann. 204. 48 L. R. A.

The right to inspect includes the right to take copies.

Mutter v. Eastern & M. R. Co. L. R. 38 Ch. Div. 92.

Spear, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

It is argued in support of the petition in error that the plaintiff has mistaken his remedy; that, if he has any, it is by mandamus, and not by injunction; and that the superior court is without jurisdiction, that court having no jurisdiction in mandamus. Also that sufficient facts are neither stated in the petition nor proven to entitle the plaintiff to any injunction whatever, and that, under any possible showing, he was not entitled to the sweeping order that the court made.

1. The proper form of action. As to mandamus our statute (Rev. Stat. § 6741) provides: "Mandamus is a writ issued in the name of the state, to an inferior tribunal, a corporation, board, or person, commanding the performance of an act which the law specifically enjoins as a duty resulting from an office, trust, or station." And by § 6744 it "must not be issued in a case where there is a plain and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of the law." In some jurisdictions the remedy of mandamus is given to right wrongs similar to the one here complained of. We are not, however, concerned with the law of other states, but with that of our own, and it seems hardly necessary to take space to demonstrate that in Ohio mandamus is not, but that injunction is, the proper remedy in a case of this nature. The complaint of plaintiff is that he is unlawfully prevented from the enjoyment of a right which is incident to his ownership of stock, and his remedy is that the corporation be compelled to desist from such deprivation. This does not call for the performance of an act which the law specifically enjoins. It is, on the other hand, an act which may be compelled by injunction in the common and ordinary exercise of that power. There is, therefore, a plain and adequate remedy open to him in the ordinary course of the law, for, within the meaning of this statute, an equity proceeding is a proceeding of that character. There is, in the opinion of the writer, another, and perhaps better, reason than the foregoing for the conclusion announced (Fraternal Mystic Circle v. State ex rel. Fritter, 61 Ohio St. 628, 48 N. E. 940), but the one given is deemed sufficient for the purposes of this case (Freon v. Carriage Co. 42 Ohio St. 30, 51 Am. Rep. 794; State ex rel. Bross v. Carpenter, 51 Ohio St. 83, 37 N. E. 261).

2. It being determined that the action was properly brought, and that the court had jurisdiction, is the petition sufficient, or must the plaintiff, before he can have standing in court, set out what his reasons for desiring the inspection asked are, and show that he is actuated by proper motives, and in the pursuit of justifiable ends? Such is the contention of plaintiff in error. The statute is (§ 3254): "And the books and records of such corporation shall at all reasonable times be open to the inspection of every stockholder." But it is insisted that this provision is not intended to enlarge the right, but is a mere affirmation of the common-law rule, and that that rule embodies many conditions, among them that the stockholder must allege and prove that he is acting in good faith. Without stopping to discuss the extent of, and the limitations upon, the rule as established by the common law (for the holdings are at variance upon it), we inquire what reason there is for saying that the intent of the legislature was to merely affirm the common-law rule. If that had been all, why take the trouble to legislate on the subject at all? Is it not more reasonable to conclude that the object was to get rid of all uncertainty, and of various conditions, whatever they were, and establish the right by a rule clear, direct, simple, and practically without qualification? The language is plain. The right given is clear. One condition, and one only, is attacked, viz., that the right can be exercised only at reasonable times. Ordinarily, the motive or purpose of the party who is in the exercise of, or is about to exercise, a clear legal right, is unimportant. Letts v. Kessler, 54 Ohio St. 73, 40 L. R. A. 177, 42 N. E. 765, and authorities cited; M'Donald v. Smalley, 1 Pet. 620, 7 L. ed. 287. A like rule prevails as to one's pursuit of an equitable remedy. Morris v. Puthill, 72 N. Y. 575; Davis v. Flagg, 35 N. J. Eq. 491; 4 Thomp. Corp. § 4412, and authorities cited. No reason is apparent why the rule should not apply to the case at bar. We are of the opinion that, where a suitor demands the enforcement of a clear right given him by law, whether the remedy be legal or equitable, his motive for such action is not a proper subject for judicial investigation. The petition stated a cause of action, and, if supported by the evidence, warranted the granting of equitable relief.

3. Was the order of the trial court too broad? The finding by the court of all the issues for the plaintiff settles the questions of fact for this court, but it is not improper to add that there was an entire failure to show, on the part of defendant, that the plaintiff was acting from the improper motives charged in the answer, and that the evidence, all of which we have read and considered, fully justifies the finding in favor of the plaintiff. So, that, even had the petition been obnoxious to a demurrer in failing to allege a proper purpose for the suit, the defendant, having obtained a full hearing on the charges stated in the answer, would have no ground of complaint on account of the action of the court on the demurrer. The contention is that whatever right of examination the statute gives is a personal right, and must be exercised by the stockholder in person. Since when, we would inquire, has it been the law that one who has given him a clear right as to property may not exercise it by any proper agent? The proposition has the quality of novelty, but it is not sound. It must be apparent, on reflection, that, if so circum-scribed a limit were placed on the right, its exercise in many instances would be futile. Foster v. White, 86 Ala. 467, 6 So. 88; Mitchell v. Rubber Reclaiming Co. (N. J. Eq.) 37 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 42, and notes, and same case in 24 Atl. 407; State ex rel. Martin v. Bienville Oil Works Co. 28 La. Ann. 204. Nor is the right limited to one inspection. It is an incident to ownership of stock, and may be exercised at any reasonable time so long as the relation of stockholder subsists. The right to take copies from the records follows as an incident to the right to inspect. It rests, as does the entire right to examination rest, upon the broad ground that the business of the corporation is not the business of the officers exclusively, but is the business of the stockholders. Phoenix Iron Co. v. Com. ex rel. Sellers, 113 Pa. 563, 6 Atl. 75; Mutter v. Eastern & M. R. Co. L. R. 38 Ch. Div. 92.

We refrain from extended discussion of the questions involved, because they are fully and ably discussed, and the authorities cited at large, in the briefs of the respective counsel which precede, and to which attention is here directed. We would add, however, that the rights of the plaintiff in this case are based upon a recognition of his standing as an integral part of the corporation. The idea that the corporation is an entity distinct from the corporators who compose it has been aptly characterized as "a nebulous fiction of thought." Much learning has been indulged in and much space occupied by text writers and others in an effort to differentiate the essential character of a corporation from that of its stockholders, and great ingenuity has been displayed in the argument; but it has been, in the main, a fruitless metaphysical discussion. For the purpose of description, and in defining corporate rights and obligations and characterizing corporate action, the fiction that the corporation is an artificial person or entity, apart from its members, may be convenient, and possibly useful, but, in the opinion of the writer, the argument favoring the essential separate entity of the corporation fails, and it is believed that the effort has resulted in misleading conceptions, and in much confusion of thought upon the subject. When all has been said, it remains that a corporation is not in reality a person or a thing distinct from its constituent parts, and the constituent parts are the stockholders, as much so in essence and in reality as the several partners are the constituent parts of the partnership. Stripped of misleading verbiage, the corporation is a device created by law whereby an aggregation of persons who may avail themselves of its privileges by organization are permitted to use their property in a way different from that which is permitted to others who do not so organize, and with certain special advantages, among which are a measure as to personal liability for debts, and the power to perpetuate the organization, denied by the law to all others. With this conception of a corporation, it would seem to follow, as matter of course, that the property of a corporation, although subject under some conditions to rights of creditors, is, in the last analysis, that of the stockholders; and that when one seeks an inspection of its books, records, or property he is in reality but seeking an inspection of his own, and that this should be accorded fully, freely, and at all times when such inspection will not unreasonably inconvenience others who have like interest in and rights to the property, and that the attempt to unreasonably hamper such inspection by officers, managers, or others is an unjust exercise of power, and one which courts should not sanction. Nor can the officers of the corporation, or the other stockholders, justly complain. They have chosen this method of investing their means and conducting the business for personal profit,—a method which, as we have seen, is especially favored by the law,—and they should expect to endure such inconveniences, and such chances of exposure of management as the method entails. In other words, it is not unreasonable that they should be required to take the bitter with the sweet.

No error is found in the judgments of the courts below, and they will be affirmed.

Agnes NOBLE, Plff. in Err.,

v.

D. L. TYLER, Admr., etc., of Marcella McLean, Deceased.

(61 Ohio St. 432.)

- *1. Rents are not apportionable between the administrator of a tenant for life and the remaindermen, where there is no privity, and the estate of the latter becomes an estate in possession immediately upon the death of the life tenant, and puts an end to the lease made by him.
2. The administrator of the estate of a tenant for life, or his lessee, is entitled, under §§ 6026, 6027, Rev. Stat., to the "annual crops raised by labor," as assets of the estate of the deceased, whether severed or not at his death.
3. M., the owner of a life estate, remainder to certain other persons, on August 15, 1892, leased the land to a tenant, to be farmed for a year, for which the lessor was to receive as rent $800. She died August 22, 1893. The wheat sown in the fall of 1892, together with the crops of 1893, had all been cultivated and harvested before her death, except the corn, which had been cultivated and laid by in July, and was harvested in November. The rent was secured by a note payable March 1, 1894. Held, that the note for the rent is assets of the estate of the deceased life tenant.

(January 9, 1900.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Butler County to review a judgment affirming a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas

*Headnotes by the COURT.

NOTE.—As to right to crops on death of life tenant, see Bradley v. Bailey (Conn.) 1 L. R. A. 427, and note; and some cases in note to Batterman v. Albright (N. Y.) 11 L. R. A. 800. 48 L. R. A.

disallowing exceptions to items in the inventory of the estate of Marcella McLean, deceased. Reversed.

Statement by Minshall, J.:

The suit in error in this case grew out of exceptions filed in the probate court by the plaintiff in error to certain items in the inventory of the estate of Marcella McLean, deceased, as filed by her administrator, D. L. Tyler. The exceptions were overruled, and an appeal taken to the common pleas. It, as requested, found the facts, and thereon overruled the exceptions, and the judgment was affirmed by the circuit court. It appears from the finding of facts that Marcella McLean was the owner of a life estate in two certain farms, one of 208 acres and the other of 83 acres, which estate had been devised to her by the will of her father, Elias Ayers, who died March 13, 1885, the remainder being devised to certain of his grandchildren,—Walter Ayers, David Ayers, and Bertha Ayers. Marcella died August 22, 1893, testate, leaving the residuum of her property to Agnes Noble; and D. L. Tyler was duly appointed her administrator with the will annexed. Among what is claimed to be assets of her estate are two notes,—one for $800, made by John Burch, due March 1, 1894, and given for a year's rent of the 208-acre tract; and the other for $350, given by Charles McLean, due at the same time, and given for the rent of the 83-acre tract. The leases and the notes were made August 15, 1892, and September 3, 1892, respectively. The administrator, assuming that the rent should be apportioned between the estate of Marcella McLean, the life tenant, and the remaindermen, inventoried each note at half its value; the makers being perfectly solvent. The residuary legatee, Agnes Noble, filed exceptions to this, claiming that each note should be inventoried as an asset of the estate at its full value. The finding of fact in regard to the leasing of the farms and the giving of the notes is as follows: "That Marcella McLean held possession of said tracts of 208 acres and 83 acres from the death of her father, Elias Ayers, until her death, 22d August, 1893. That on 15th August, 1892, she leased the said 208 acres to John Burch to be seeded in the fall of 1892 and farmed for the year 1893. That Burch seeded about 36 acres in the fall of 1892 in wheat, which was by him harvested in June, 1893; 15 acres timothy harvested July, 1893; and that in the spring of 1893 he planted about 42 acres in corn on said farm, and it was all laid by as early as July, 1893, but which was not gathered and harvested until November, 1893. That at the date of said lease said Burch gave his note for $800 for said rent, payable to Marcella McLean, or order, on or before the 1st day of March, 1894. That on the 3d day of September, 1892, said Marcella McLean leased said 83 acres to Charles McLean, which was to be seeded by him in the fall of 1892, in part, and the balance farmed during the year 1893. That in the fall of 1892 he seeded on said tract 24 acres in wheat, and that the same was harvested in June, 1893. The balance of said farm he planted in corn in the spring of 1893, and it was all laid by as early as July, 1893, but which was not gathered and harvested until November, 1893. That for the rent for said year 1893 said Charles McLean gave his note for $350, the same payable to Marcella McLean, or her order, on or before March 1, 1894. Each of said notes was written on same piece of paper as the lease. Said two notes so given by John Burch and Charles McLean were in the possession of Marcella McLean at her death, and held by her, and came into the hands of said D. L. Tyler, as her said administrator with the will annexed, no part of the same having been paid."

Messrs. Millikin, Shotts, & Millikin, for plaintiff in error:

There is no provision made in the statute of Ohio for apportioning the rent between the life tenant and the heir at law, or between the life tenant and a remainderman; and it follows that where the farm is rented and planted during the life of the life tenant the entire crop, or its equivalent, shall go to the administrator of the deceased owner.

The statute laws of Ohio, §§ 6026 and 6027, have settled the rule that the administrator is entitled to the rent, whether in the shape of crops or money.

The right to take crops after the termination of the tenancy rests partly upon the idea of compensation, but chiefly upon the policy of encouraging husbandry, by assuring the fruits of his labor to the one who cultivates the soil.

1 Washb. Real Prop. 132, § 3.

Growing crops are personal estate, and do not pass by judicial sale.

Cussilly v. Rhodes, 12 Ohio, 88; Houts v. Shovalter, 10 Ohio St. 125; Albin v. Riegel, 40 Ohio St. 339.

The only Ohio case that bears directly upon the question before the court is Van Hayes v. West, 3 Ohio C. C. 65.

Messrs. Slayback & Harr, for defendant in error:

We have no statute in this state providing for the disposition of rents which accrue after the death of the owner of real estate.

For the respective rights of the administrator and the reversioner or remainderman, we must look to the rules of the common law.

Where a decedent owned real estate at the time he died, occupied by tenants who paid rent therefor, the rent that became due and was unpaid at the time of such death belongs to his estate, and must be collected as assets by the executor or administrator. But all the rent that became due after such death, even though part of the time for which it is due elapsed before such death, belongs to the heir or devisee of the real estate; and with it the executor or administrator has nothing to do; not even if he afterwards sells such real estate to pay debts.

Giaque, Decedents' Estates, pp. 285, 286, §§ 26, 28; Woerner, Administrators, §§ 300, 48 L. R. A.

301; 3 Redf. Wills, p. 184; Sohier v. Eldredge, 103 Mass. 345; Fay v. Hollorn, 35 Barb. 295; Bloodworth v. Stevens, 51 Miss. 475; Ball v. First Nat. Bank, 80 Ky. 501; King v. Anderson, 20 Ind. 385; McDowell v. Hendrix, 67 Ind. 513; Logan v. Caldwell, 23 Mo. 372; Price v. Pickett, 21 Ala. 741.

Rents accruing after the testator's decease, though paid for a period of occupation a part of which was before his decease, are income, and belong to the heir.

Sohier v. Eldredge, 103 Mass. 345; 3 Redf. Wills, p. 184, § 12; King v. Anderson, 20 Ind. 385; Sutliff v. Atwood, 15 Ohio St. 186; Millikin v. Welliver, 37 Ohio St. 460.

Minshall, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The real question in this case is, When did the rent for which these notes were given accrue? If, upon the facts as found, it accrued, in the proper sense of the term, in the lifetime of Marcella McLean, the notes, to their full value, should have been inventoried as assets of her estate. The lease in each case, or, more properly speaking, the agreement for the occupation and farming of the land, was made, the one August 15, 1892, and the other September 3d of the same year. They gave to the tenant in each case the right to seed part of the land in wheat in the fall of 1892, and to farm the land for the year 1893. This is the common way among farmers of renting lands to be farmed for a year; wheat, in our climate, being sown in the fall and harvested in the following summer. No one would claim, under this letting, either tenant could have sown his tract in wheat in the fall of 1893, with the right to harvest it in 1894, for all his rights in the premises were to end with the harvesting of the crops cultivated in that year, and the rent then accrued, and would have been payable, but for the agreement by which the time was extended to the 1st of March following. By an indulgence of the common law in favor of agriculture, incorporated in the statute law of this state (§§ 6026, 6027, Rev. Stat.), one whose estate may be terminated by an event the time whereof is uncertain has the right to reap what he has sown although this may, to some extent, trench upon the occupancy of the tenant of the next estate in remainder or reversion. This, however, cannot be said to impair the next estate, for it is an incident, created by law, of every estate in reversion or remainder,—a burden, if it be one, imposed, as we have said, in the interest of agriculture; for, when the termination of an estate is uncertain, it would greatly discourage the cultivation of the land if every such tenant must sow at his peril. Hence it is that the right to harvest growing crops, sown and cultivated before the termination of the particular estate, in no legal sense infringes upon the next estate in possession. Every such estate is created subject to such contingency, and the right is an incident to every estate whose termination is not fixed by some definite time. When the time of the termination of an estate is definitely known, the reason ceases, and no such right exists; and this is why we have said that, if either of the renters of Mrs. McLean had sown the land rented to him in wheat in the fall of 1893, he would have done so at his peril, as the termination of his tenancy was a fixed period, limited to the time in which annual crops are usually harvested in the fall. It therefore follows, as we think, that the agreement for the cultivation of the particular farms of the deceased terminated in her lifetime, and the rent agreed to be paid on or before March 1, 1894, had accrued, and the notes should have been inventoried at their full value as assets of her estate. The makers of the notes could make no defense to their collection, as they had fully enjoyed, under the agreement and the law, the consideration for their respective promises to pay.

Much confusion has arisen in the case from the fact that the rent did not, by the agreement of the parties, become due until March 1, 1894,—about six months after the death of the life tenant,—from which it is assumed that the rent then accrued. This would imply that the term, instead of being for a year, was for a year and six months, which is contrary to the fact. The accrual of rent does not necessarily depend upon the time fixed by the parties for its payment. The accrual of rent has respect to the term of the lease. It accrues as the term elapses, and is fully accrued when the term is complete. The term and the enjoyment of it is the consideration for the rent. When the term is complete, the rent has accrued. If, as claimed, the question depends upon when the rent is made payable, irrespective of the time of its accrual, then the next in estate might be entitled to it any number of years after it had been earned, for any number of years may be given for its payment. It is then evident that the accrual of rent depends upon the lapse of the term for which it is to be paid, and not upon the lapse of the time given for its payment. The latter is a matter of agreement between the parties. If there were no express agreement, the rent would become due on its accrual; but by agreement it may be made to become due at any time that will best suit the convenience of the parties. Here, by agreement, it was made to become due in six months after its accrual, or, in other words, after it had been earned by the land. Hence the remaindermen have no claim to this rent. It was all earned, or had accrued, in the legal sense, in the lifetime of Marcella McLean, and is, consequently, assets of her estate, though the notes given for it did not become due until after her death. It is thought that the case of Sutliff v. Atwood, 15 Ohio St. 186, sustains the contention of the defendant in error in this regard. All that this case decides that can be in any way helpful to the claim of the remaindermen is that the taking of the notes for rent did not change the character of the consideration for which they were given while they remained in the hands of the lessor, unnegotiated; and, consequently, a suit on them by the lessor against the lessee would be in fact a suit for rent. This is not questioned. But there is no such question in this case. The principle, however, on which the case was decided, applied to this case, disposes of any claim made for the remaindermen to any portion of the rent due on these notes. Sutliff leased his dairy farm to Atwood for the term of three years at an annual rent of $500, payable at the end of each year. He transferred the first note to one Quimby, who recovered a judgment upon it, levied on the lease, and purchased it in at the sheriff's sale, and then assigned it to the lessor, Sutliff. The latter then brought suit on the notes for the rent that accrued after the assignment of the lease to him, and it was held that he could not recover. The ratio decidendi of the decision is that, being in possession of the demised premises under the assignment, his right to rent was compensated by his duty to pay it; in other words, he could not occupy the position of lessor and lessee at the same time. So, in this case, when the life tenant died, the estate of the remaindermen, by operation of law, at once became an estate in possession, and they could not demand rent therefor from any other person. Whether they in fact took possession is immaterial. They had the right to it, subject to the right of the administrator of the deceased life tenant, or her lessee, to the growing crops; and we may assume, though there is no finding as to the fact, that they took possession, as possession generally accompanies the right. Therefore, having the possession and the right to it, they cannot, in law or reason, demand rent from someone else for a possession which they themselves have and enjoy. In Millickin v. Welliver, 37 Ohio St. 460, 468, the corn in question was planted and raised after the death of the lessor, Smith, and so went to the devisees, and not to the administrator.

We have examined the cases and authorities cited by the defendant in error, and fail to see how, on the facts of the case, they support his contention. He assumes that the lease did not terminate until the rent notes became due. In this, as we have shown, he is in error. Neither tenant had any right to enter upon the farm, leased to him, after the crops had been all harvested in the usual time. Most of the cases cited relate to leases made by the owner in fee, who died before the termination of the lease. In such cases, the death of the lessor does not terminate the lease, and, as there is privity of estate between the administrator and the heir, the rent is apportioned; that which had accrued at the death of the lessor going to the administrator, and that which accrues afterwards attends the reversion, and goes to the heir or devisee. In some cases the death of the life tenant does not terminate his estate, as in the case of an estate per autre vie. In such cases, and in all other cases where the death of a life tenant does not terminate an existing lease, there may be an apportionment between the administrator and the remaindermen on the above principles. But no case is produced, and we think no well-considered one can be found, where an apportionment has been made between an administrator of the life tenant and the owner of the next estate, taking effect in possession, immediately upon the death of the life tenant. In such cases at common law, where the term had not ended at the death of the life tenant, no rent could be collected,—not by the administrator, for the reason that the lessee was deprived of the consideration for his promise (the possession of the land); nor by the remainderman, for there is no privity of estate between him and the life tenant's lessee; and for the further reason that rent in his favor cannot issue out of lands in his own possession. Whether this is so in Ohio as to the administrator does not arise in this case, for, as above shown, the tenants enjoyed all they were entitled to under the letting to them, and for which they promised to pay the notes in question; and do not, it seems, deny their liability to pay, either to the administrator or to the remaindermen. And it is worthy of note in this connection that it is admitted that, if Marcella McLean had farmed the lands as they were farmed by the tenants, her administrator would have been entitled to the crops raised in the year 1893, under the statute above referred to. It seems, then, a strange sort of logic by which the conclusion is reached that, having transferred this right to another for a consideration secured by a note, the note would not be hers and so assets of her estate, without regard to when it was made payable. The whole confusion, as we have said, arises out of not properly distinguishing between the accrual of rent and the time when it is made payable. It is generally made payable at the lapse of some particular period of the lease,—as annually, or by the month,—and so becomes payable as it matures; and in all such cases the time of payment and the accrual of the rent are coincident. But, as before pointed out, it is not necessary that this should be so in order to reserve rent. Time for the payment of rent may be given irrespective of the time of its accrual.

Reversed, and exceptions sustained.

BOARD OF COMMISSIONERS OF CHAMPAIGN COUNTY, Plffs. in Err.,

v.

Benjamin F. CHURCH, Admr., etc., of Charles W. Mitchell, Deceased.

J. W. CALDWELL, Plff. in Err.,

v.

BOARD OF COMMISSIONERS OF CUYAHOGA COUNTY.

(62 Ohio St. 318.)

*1. The act of the legislature of Ohio,

*Headnotes by the COURT.

NOTE.—For constitutionality of statutes making counties or municipalities liable for damages done by mobs, see note to Glanfortone 48 L. R. A.

entitled "An Act for the Suppression of Mob Violence," passed April 10, 1896 (92 Ohio Laws, p. 136), is constitutional.

2. The recovery authorized by said act is penal in its nature, and it is within the legislative power to provide therefor. Such legislation is not an exercise of judicial power, nor is it a violation of the right of trial by jury.
3. Such recovery, and the tax levy authorized and required by said act, are within the general powers of the legislature and the provisions of § 7, art. 10, of the Constitution, and such recovery and levy are not in contravention of § 19, art. 1, of the Constitution.
4. In an action brought under such statute, to recover the penalty of $5,000 for the death of a person caused by lynching. It is error for the court to charge the jury to the effect that if the collection of individuals who lynched the deceased had assembled without any unlawful purpose, and afterwards committed the acts of violence which resulted in the death of such person, the plaintiff could not recover, and that the verdict should be for the defendant.
5. In an action brought under such statute to recover the penalty for an injury caused by lynching, where it is sufficiently alleged in the petition that the plaintiff had suffered a lynching at the hands of a mob composed of a collection of individuals, who had assembled for an unlawful purpose, and attempted to exercise correctional power over the plaintiff and his fellows, the allegations in the petition are not negated by the specific averments, also contained in the petition, that the plaintiff was struck by "a heavy glass insulator thrown at him by one of the mob," and that he was "shot through the leg with a leaden bullet fired from a revolver in the hands of some of the mob."

(April 10, 1900.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Champaign County to review a judgment reversing a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas in favor of defendants in an action brought to recover damages for the death of plaintiff's intestate by a mob. Affirmed.

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Cuyahoga County to review a judgment affirming a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas in favor of defendants in an action brought to recover damages for injuries alleged to have been inflicted upon plaintiff by a mob. Reversed.

Statement by Davis, J.:

Benjamin F. Church, as the administrator of Charles W. Mitchell, deceased, filed a petition against the board of commissioners of Champaign county, under the "Act for the Suppression of Mob Violence," passed April 10, 1896 (92 Ohio Laws, p. 136), to recover $5,000 for the lynching of said Mitchell, at Urbana, in said county. Defendant demurred to the petition, and the demurrer was sustained by the court of common pleas, and the petition dismissed. The circuit court reversed the judgment of the court of common pleas, and the defendant then answered. The first defense contained in the answer of the defendant is a general denial, and the second defense alleges that the said act is repugnant to the Constitution of Ohio. A demurrer to the second defense of the answer was sustained, and on the trial of the case the court gave to the jury the following special charge upon the request of the defendant: "The jury is charged, as a matter of law, that although you may find and believe, from the evidence before you in this case, that said Charles W. Mitchell, referred to in the petition, suffered death at the hands of a collection of individuals in Champaign county, Ohio, on or about the 4th day of June, 1897, if you further find from the evidence that said collection of individuals did not assemble for any unlawful purpose, and did not intend to do damage or injury to anyone, and did not pretend to exercise correctional power over other persons by violence, and without authority of law, at the time of assembling, but was or were attracted and induced through motives of curiosity, and the events that had transpired around the courthouse yard and jail during the night and morning preceding, to meet and assemble together, and being thus assembled, without any unlawful purpose, and not intending to do damage or injury to anyone, or pretending to exercise correctional power over any other person or persons by violence and without authority of law, afterwards committed the acts of violence resulting in the death of said Charles W. Mitchell, then the plaintiff in this case cannot recover, and your verdict should be for the defendant." And afterwards, in the general charge, the court instructed the jury in part as follows: "Much has been said concerning the meaning of special charge No. 5 given on behalf of the defendant, and the court therefore deems it proper to instruct the jury that the meaning which you are to give to that charge is that—I give it in the words of the charge itself, omitting the first introductory sentences—if, after being assembled, the collection of individuals referred to before, without any unlawful purpose having been formed, and not intending to do damage or injury to any person, or pretending to exercise correctional power over any other person, committed the acts of violence which resulted in the death of Charles W. Mitchell, then the plaintiff cannot recover." "The special charges given you before the argument began are as much the charge of the court as are these general instructions, and, so far as it treats of the same subjects, the general charge is to be received in addition to, and as explanatory of, the special charges." The verdict was for the defendant, and on petition in error the circuit court reversed the judgment of the court of common pleas for error in the charge of the court. J. W. Caldwell brought his action, under the same statute, against the board of county commissioners of Cuyahoga county, to recover the sum of $1,000 for an injury which he alleged that he had received at the hands of a mob in that county. A demurrer to the petition, on the ground that the petition does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and that said act is unconstitutional, was sustained by the court of common pleas, and the judgment of the court of common pleas was affirmed by the circuit court. These cases came up on petitions in error to reverse the respective judgments of the circuit court.

v. New Orleans (C. C. E. D. La.) 24 L. R. A. 592; and Chicago v. Manhattan Cement Co. (Ill.) 45 L. R. A. 848.

Messrs. T. J. Frank, E. P. Middleton, and S. S. Deaton, for Champaign County, plaintiff in error:

No such liability against a county as is provided for in this statute existed at common law.

Western College of Homeopathic Medicine v. Cleveland, 12 Ohio St. 375; Robinson v. Greenville, 42 Ohio St. 625, 51 Am. Rep. 857; Gianfortone v. New Orleans, 61 Fed. Rep. 64, 24 L. R. A. 592; Rook Island v. Steele, 31 Ill. 543; Schuyler County v. Mercer County, 9 Ill. 20.

Penal statutes must be strictly construed. They cannot be extended by implication to cases not strictly within their terms.

23 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 375, note 1, p. 378; Shults v. Cambridge, 38 Ohio St. 659; White v. Woodward, 44 Ohio St. 347, 7 N. E. 446.

Statutes in derogation of the common law are to be construed strictly.

23 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 387, note 1.

Statutes passed in exercise of the police power of the state are to be strictly construed.

23 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 348-388, notes 1-3.

If the language of a statute is unambiguous there is no rule for construction, even though the objects of the act are defeated.

McCormick v. Alexander, 2 Ohio, 65; Bruener v. Briggs, 39 Ohio St. 478.

The bare fact that three or more persons in a violent manner beat another does not raise the presumption of law that they assembled with that intent, after being assembled agreed mutually to assist one another in the execution of such purpose, for, if the law from such conduct deduced the inference either as a conclusive or a disputable presumption that the intent existed, which is a necessary ingredient to a riot, there would be no distinction between riots and affrays.

State v. Kempf, 26 Mo. 429.

The act entitled "An Act for the Suppression of Mob Violence," passed by the general assembly of Ohio on the 10th day of April, 1896 (92 Ohio Laws, p. 136), is unconstitutional and void.

The constitutional limitation as to trial by jury is on the power to abridge, and not on the power to extend. The right may be extended, but not abridged.

Gunsaulius v. Pettit, 46 Ohio St. 28, 17 N. E. 231; Salt Creek Valley Turnp. Co. v. Parks, 50 Ohio St. 578, 28 L. R. A. 769, 35 N. E. 304.

The right to retain property already in possession is as sacred as the right to recover it when dispossessed.

Hocking Valley Coal Co. v. Rosser, 53 Ohio St. 24, 29 L. R. A. 386, 41 N. E. 263.

My property is as much imperiled by an action against me for money, as it is by an action against me for my land or my goods.

Normal School Dist. Bd. of Edu. v. Blodgett, 155 Ill. 441, 31 L. R. A. 70, 40 N. E. 1025.

Due process of law requires that a party shall be properly brought into court, and that he shall have an opportunity, when there, to prove any fact which, according to the Constitution and the usages of the common law, would be a protection to him or his property.

People ex rel. Witherbee v. Essex County Supers. 70 N. Y. 234; Clark v. Mitchell, 64 Mo. 578; People ex rel. Herriok v. Smith, 21 N. Y. 595; Risser v. Hoyt, 53 Mich. 201, 18 N. W. 611; Zeigler v. South & North Ala. R. Co. 58 Ala. 594; Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat. 518, 4 L. ed. 629; Bank of Columbia v. Okely, 4 Wheat. 244, 4 L. ed. 561.

What constitutes judicial power, within the meaning of the Constitution, is to be determined in the light of the common law, and of the history of our institutions, as they existed anterior to and at the time of the adoption of the Constitution.

State v. Harmon, 31 Ohio St. 250; De Camp v. Archibald, 50 Ohio St. 625, 35 N. E. 1056.

The legislature cannot exercise judicial powers.

19 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 454, note 3; Ponder v. Graham, 4 Fla. 23; Jones v. Perry, 10 Yerg. 59; State ex rel. McCurdy v. Tappan, 29 Wis. 664, 9 Am. Rep. 622; Dorsey v. Dorsey, 37 Md. 64, 11 Am. Rep. 528; Re Selby, 6 Mich. 193; People v. Frisbie, 26 Cal. 135; Sydnor v. Palmer, 32 Wis. 406; Lane v. Dorman, 4 Ill. 238, 36 Am. Dec. 543.

Ascertainment of indebtedness from one to another and a direction for payment are judicial acts which cannot be performed by the legislature.

Lane v. Dorman, 4 Ill. 238, 36 Am. Dec. 543; Central P. R. Co. v. Gallatin, 99 U. S. 761, 25 L. ed. 516.

The act of the general assembly in question arbitrarily fixes the pecuniary interest of the next of kin of the said Charles Mitchell, and adjudicates and determines the damages to be $5,000 without any regard whatever to the common law, or the history of our institutions as they existed anterior to and at the time of the adoption of the state Constitution, and denies to the defendant the right of trial or defense as to the pecuniary interest, or damage sustained, if any, and determines the question of fact and law affecting the property rights of the defendant by legislative decree and judgment, contrary to the established rules of a court of law and the law of the land.

Janesville v. Carpenter, 77 Wis. 288, 8 L. R. A. 808, 46 N. W. 128; State ex rel. Holtz v. Henry County Comrs. 41 Ohio St. 435; De Camp v. Archibald, 50 Ohio St. 625, 35 L. R. A.

N. E. 1056; Hocking Valley Coal Co. v. Rosser, 53 Ohio St. 24, 29 L. R. A. 386, 41 N. E. 263.

This statute is unconstitutional for the reason that it is an encroachment of the legislative upon the judicial branch of government, and by its terms necessarily deprives the defendant of any right of trial as to material and disputed facts, and subjects the taxpayers of the county to the loss of property without due course of law.

Hanson v. Vernon, 27 Iowa, 28, 1 Am. Rep. 215; Marion Twp. Bd. of Edu. v. State, 51 Ohio St. 539, 25 L. R. A. 770, 38 N. E. 614; Ervine's Appeal, 16 Pa. 257, 55 Am. Dec. 499; Ponder v. Graham, 4 Fla. 23; Caldwell v. Cuyahoga County Comrs. 15 Ohio C. C. 167.

The money to be recovered under this statute, and to be collected, as a debt against the county, is not directed to be paid, applied, or used for any public use or purpose for which an exaction on property can be levied.

Marion Twp. Bd. of Edu. v. State, 51 Ohio St. 539, 25 L. R. A. 770, 38 N. E. 614; Hanson v. Vernon, 27 Iowa, 28, 1 Am. Rep. 215; Palairt's Appeal, 67 Pa. 479, 5 Am. Rep. 450; Mays v. Cincinnati, 1 Ohio St. 273; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Mayer, 28 Ohio St. 521; Taylor v. Ross County Comrs. 23 Ohio St. 84; State ex rel. McCurdy v. Tappan, 29 Wis. 664, 9 Am. Rep. 622.

The power of the legislature to impose taxes is not unlimited. It is within the province of the courts to determine in particular cases whether the extreme boundary of legislative power has been reached and passed.

Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Mayer, 28 Ohio St. 521; State ex rel. Hibbs v. Franklin County Comrs. 35 Ohio St. 468; Hanson v. Vernon, 27 Iowa, 28, 1 Am. Rep. 215; Brodhead v. Milwaukee, 19 Wis. 624, 98 Am. Dec. 711; 25 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 74, note 5.

Taxation having for its only legitimate object the raising of money for public purposes, and the proper needs of government, the exaction of money from the citizens for other purposes is not a proper exercise of the power, and must therefore be unauthorized.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 487; Hanson v. Vernon, 27 Iowa, 28, 1 Am. Rep. 228; Sharpless v. Philadelphia, 21 Pa. 167, 59 Am. Dec. 759.

A tax is generally understood to mean the imposition of a duty imposed for the support of the government.

Pray v. Northern Liberties, 31 Pa. 69; Cooley, Const. Lim. 479; Hanson v. Vernon, 27 Iowa, 28, 1 Am. Rep. 215.

The act in question authorizes a tax to be levied and collected for a private purpose, and for the private use and benefit of private individuals.

Marion Twp. Bd. of Edu. v. State, 51 Ohio St. 531, 25 L. R. A. 770, 38 N. E. 614; Taylor v. Ross County Comrs. 23 Ohio St. 84; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Mayer, 28 Ohio St. 521; Lima v. McBride, 34 Ohio St. 340; State ex rel. Hibbs v. Franklin County

Comrs. 35 Ohio St. 468; Brodhead v. Milwaukee, 19 Wis. 624, 88 Am. Dec. 711; Hanson v. Vernon, 27 Iowa, 28, 1 Am. Rep. 215; Palairt's Appeal, 67 Pa. 479, 5 Am. Rep. 450; Caldwell v. Cuyahoga County Comrs. 15 Ohio C. C. 167; Smith v. Atlantic & G. W. R. Co. 25 Ohio St. 91.

There are limitations upon the police power.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. 710; 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. § 142; Re Jacobs, 98 N. Y. 98, 50 Am. Rep. 636; People v. Gillson, 109 N. Y. 389; Hare, Am. Const. Law, 618; Taylor v. Porter, 4 Hill, 140, 40 Am. Dec. 274; Norman v. Heist, 5 Watts & S. 171, 40 Am. Dec. 493; Hoke v. Henderson, 15 N. C. (4 Dev. L.) 1, 25 Am. Dec. 677; Dash v. Van Kleeck, 7 Johns. 477, 5 Am. Dec. 291; Goshen v. Stonington, 4 Conn. 209, 10 Am. Dec. 121; Fletcher v. Peck, 6 Cranch, 87, 3 L. ed. 162; Ervine's Appeal, 16 Pa. 256, 55 Am. Dec. 499; Internal Improvement Fund v. Bailey, 10 Fla. 239; Taylor v. Place, 4 R. I. 324; Greenough v. Greenough, 11 Pa. 489, 51 Am. Dec. 567; People ex rel. Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. New York City & County Supers. 16 N. Y. 424; Cincinnati, W. & Z. R. Co. v. Clinton County Comrs. 1 Ohio St. 77; Merrill v. Sherburne, 1 N. H. 199, 8 Am. Dec. 52; Salt Creek Valley Turnp. Co. v. Parks, 50 Ohio St. 568, 28 L. R. A. 769, 35 N. E. 304; State ex rel. McCurdy v. Tappan, 29 Wis. 664, 9 Am. Rep. 622.

This act of April 10, 1896, is in conflict with the provision of the Constitution of our state, which prohibits the legislature from exercising judicial functions, and it also contravenes the provision that no person can be deprived of his property without due process of law.

Pryor v. Downey, 50 Cal. 388, 19 Am. Rep. 656; Ratcliffe v. Anderson, 31 Gratt. 105, 31 Am. Rep. 716; State v. Walsh, 136 Mo. 400, 35 L. R. A. 231, 37 S. W. 1112; State v. Julow, 129 Mo. 163, 29 L. R. A. 257, 31 S. W. 781; Howell v. Fry, 19 Ohio St. 559; Salt Creek Valley Turnp. Co. v. Parks, 50 Ohio St. 568, 28 L. R. A. 769, 35 N. E. 304; State ex rel. McCurdy v. Tappan, 29 Wis. 664, 9 Am. Rep. 622.

Messrs. George M. Elchelberger and Charles H. Bosler for Church, defendant in error.

Mr. Willis Vickery, for Caldwell, plaintiff in error:

The Constitution of the state of Ohio provides for a government of unlimited powers, and whatever is not prohibited by the Constitution is reserved to the people thereof, and what is not prohibited in so many words by the Constitution of the state of Ohio can be legislated upon by the legislature.

Thorpe v. Rutland & B. R. Co. 27 Vt. 140, 62 Am. Dec. 625; People ex rel. Wood v. Draper, 15 N. Y. 543.

The wisdom of the law is not a subject for the court to consider.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 202, 204.

If an act is to be held void it is not because the judges have any control over the legislative power, but because the act is forbidden by the Constitution, and because the 48 L. R. A.

will of the people which is therein declared is paramount to that of the representatives expressed in any law.

1 Bryce, Am. Com. 430; Cooley, Const. Lim. 195; Lindsay v. East Bay Street Comrs. 2 Bay, 61.

The courts will not so construe a law as to make it conflict with the Constitution, but will rather put such an interpretation upon it as will avoid conflict with the Constitution, and give it the force of law, if this can be done without extravagance.

Inkster v. Carver, 16 Mich. 484; Newland v. Marsh, 19 Ill. 376; Roosevelt v. Godard, 52 Barb. 533; Parsons v. Bedford, 3 Pet. 433, 7 L. ed. 732; Grenada County Supers. v. Brogden, 112 U. S. 261, sub nom. Grenada County Supers. v. Brown, 28 L. ed. 704, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 125.

The courts have nothing to do with the policy, expediency, or propriety of the acts of the legislature.

Angle v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 151 U. S. 1, 38 L. ed. 55, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 240; Merchants' Union Barb Wire Co. v. Brown, 64 Iowa, 275, 20 N. W. 434; People ex rel. Hayden v. Rochester, 50 N. Y. 525; Sears v. Cottrell, 5 Mich. 251; People ex rel. Wood v. Draper, 15 N. Y. 532; Citizens' Sav. & L. Asso. v. Topeka, 20 Wall. 655, 22 L. ed. 455; Ham v. McCleave, 1 Bay, 93; People ex rel. Detroit & H. R. Co. v. Salem Twp. Board, 20 Mich. 452, 4 Am. Rep. 400; Sharpless v. Philadelphia, 21 Pa. 147, 59 Am. Dec. 759; Adler v. Whitbeck, 44 Ohio St. 562, 9 N. E. 672; Morgan v. Nolte, 37 Ohio St. 23, 41 Am. Rep. 485; Fletcher v. Peck, 6 Cranch, 87, 3 L. ed. 162; Hedderich v. State, 101 Ind. 564, 51 Am. Rep. 768; McComas v. Krug, 81 Ind. 327, 42 Am. Rep. 135; Robinson v. Schenck, 102 Ind. 319; Darlington v. New York, 31 N. Y. 189, 88 Am. Dec. 248.

Messrs. P. H. Kaiser and F. L. Taft, for Cuyahoga County, defendant in error:

This statute is void because the language employed therein is so indefinite that the intent of the legislature is not ascertainable, and therefore the enforcement of the statute is impossible.

Bond v. Swearingen, 1 Ohio, 395; State ex rel. Long v. Brinkman, 7 Ohio C. C. 165.

This statute opens a wide door for the perpetration of frauds upon the counties of this state, and is therefore against public policy and void.

This statute takes private property, and makes it subservient to private welfare.

Weismer v. Douglas, 64 N. Y. 99, 21 Am. Rep. 586.

Legislative power cannot be delegated.

Cincinnati, W. & Z. R. Co. v. Clinton County Comrs. 1 Ohio St. 77.

At common law a county cannot be held liable for the negligence or other wrongful acts of its officers.

Hamilton County Comrs. v. Mighels, 7 Ohio St. 110.

A liability imposed upon the county is a liability imposed upon the state itself; and, if the liability is imposed upon the state, then the state, and not the arm which the state thrusts out into a particular locality, should be taxed to meet that liability.

Cincinnati, W. & Z. R. Co. v. Clinton County Comrs. 1 Ohio St. 89; Western College of Homeopathic Medicine v. Cleveland, 12 Ohio St. 377.

Davis, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

These cases require a decision of the question whether "An Act for the Suppression of Mob Violence," passed April 10, 1896 (92 Ohio Laws, p. 136), is constitutional. It is argued that the provisions of this statute contravene article 1 of the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and are also repugnant to the Constitution of Ohio, because they violate the right of trial by jury, because they authorize the taking of property without due process of law, because they are a violation of private rights of property, because they are an exercise of judicial functions by the legislature, and because the object and purposes of the statute are not within the taxing power.

In the ardor of attack, it seems to have been overlooked that the Constitution extends its protection over individuals, as well as counties and municipal corporations. Even a criminal has some rights which cannot be forfeited. Every person who is accused of crime is guaranteed a fair trial, and he cannot be deprived of life or liberty without due process of law. The faith of the body politic is pledged to make good the constitutional guaranties to the individual. To the counties and municipal corporations are delegated, in large measure, the duties of local administration. Within their jurisdiction they stand in the place of the state, in enforcing the laws, and in protecting the life, the liberty, and the property of the citizen. If a large number of the people of any county become imbued with the lynching spirit, or negligent and indifferent to the due and orderly enforcement of the laws, so that lawless men may act with impunity, then there is no course for the state to take, other than to intervene and directly protect the individual, as well as to enforce upon the community the observance of good order. The power of the state to do this cannot well be questioned. What is known as the "police power" is based on the public safety, the public health and morals, and the general welfare, and it is therefore as broad as these conditions may require. In this respect, as in other respects, the power of the legislative branch of the state government is plenary, except as it may be specifically and clearly limited in the Constitution. Within these limitations the legislature may prescribe such laws, sanctioned by fines, penalties, forfeitures, or damages as will enforce the observance of the peace and dignity of the state, and compensate the injured party; for, unfortunately, the public conscience is oftentimes more easily quickened in this way than by teaching and persuasion.

Now, as to the alleged violation of the right of trial by jury, it may well be doubted whether counties and municipalities have any such absolute right of trial by jury that they may complain of its infringement by the legislature. They are creatures of constitutional and legislative enactment. They have only such powers and privileges as are given them, and these powers and privileges may, in general, be modified or taken away.

But cases like these need not be disposed of on that ground. The contention is that the statute deprives the defendant of the right to have the amount to be paid assessed by a jury as damages. A county or municipality can no more complain of this statute as an infringement upon the right of trial by jury than the man who has been tried by a jury and found guilty of a crime can complain that the law under which he is tried does not provide that the jury shall assess the amount of his fine or adjudge the extent of his imprisonment. The primary purpose of the legislature was punishment and correction. The expressed object of the law is "the suppression of mob violence." That the legislature might, in the exercise of the police power, fix the amount of a penalty without the intervention of a jury, was long ago decided by this court in Cincinnati, S. & C. R. Co. v. Cook, 37 Ohio St. 265. And, this being so, it is of no concern to the party paying the penalty to whom the state, in its sovereignty, may pay it. It may well, as under this statute, turn the money over to those who suffer by the act of lynching. In this respect it makes no difference whether in the statute it be called penalty, or compensation, or damages. Nor does it alter the case that the amount is fixed—that is, determined—by the statute, as in this case, or that it is to be found by a jury. Nor yet does it matter that it is declared to be "for the suppression of mob violence," as in this case, or "for compensating parties whose property may be destroyed in consequence of mobs or riots," as in the statute which was upheld in Darlington v. New York, 31 N. Y. 187, 88 Am. Dec. 248; because the imposition of any amount by authority of the state is, in either case, essentially penal and corrective in its nature. The party paying the money so recovered—that is, as a penalty—has no right to complain that the sovereign pays it over to the person injured, or pays it for the benefit of the minor children of a person suffering death by lynching, or to the next of kin of such person; nor that the sovereign provides that "such recovery shall not be regarded as a part of the estate of the person lynched, nor be subject to any of his liabilities." Nor is it a matter which can be put in issue for trial by jury; for the legislature does not authorize nor attempt a compensation of the injury according to the measure of the injury, to be settled on an inquiry of damages.

We have dwelt on this phase of the law more than we have thought necessary, because it is the source of the main contention in these cases. We shall very briefly advert to the remaining questions presented for our consideration.

In the nature of things, the limitations of the taxing power are not ordinarily, nor necessarily, limitations on the police power; but the matter is set at rest for the cases at bar by the Constitution itself, which provides as follows: "The commissioners of counties, the trustees of townships, and similar boards, shall have such power of local taxation, for police purposes, as may be prescribed by law." Const. art. 10, § 7. This court held in Sessions v. Crunkilton, 20 Ohio St. 349, 358, that when local taxation is exercised for purposes which are demanded by, or are conducive to, public health, convenience, or welfare, it is within the constitutional meaning of "police purposes."

From what has been said, it will appear that this statute does not authorize nor attempt the taking of private property for a private use, nor even the taking of private property for a public use, in the exercise of the right of eminent domain. It authorizes the recovery of a penalty against the county, and authorizes an order to be made on the commissioners of the county, to include the same in the next succeeding tax levy. This, as we have seen, the legislature has power to enact, under the general police power, the general taxing power, and § 7, art. 10, of the Constitution. Hence § 19, art. 1, of the Constitution does not apply.

Again, this legislation is not an exercise of judicial power; because it does not adjudicate any transaction, case, or controversy which arose before its enactment, and of which the judicial tribunals might have been cognizant. It provides what shall be the law, binding upon the judicial department, after its enactment, and is not, in any sense, a trespass upon the province of the courts.

Having disposed of the foregoing objections to the statute, we assume that the contention that it provides for the taking of property without due process of law is already sufficiently answered. Many other questions have been raised and discussed. They are all such as might well have been addressed to the legislature, but they cannot be considered here. We conclude that the act is constitutional.

On the trial of the case of "Church, Adm'r, etc., against the Commissioners of Champaign County," in the common pleas court, the court charged the jury, in substance, that if the collection of persons who lynched Mitchell had assembled without any unlawful purpose, and afterwards committed the acts of violence which resulted in the death of Mitchell, the plaintiff could not recover, and the verdict should be for the defendant. The court afterwards made an explanation of this instruction, but the explanation did not explain, especially since the court instructed the jury that such unlawful purpose or design may be formed either before or at the time of assembling, "or it may be formed with the agreement of mutual assistance after they have assembled," and that "no formal or express agreement need be proved to establish such unlawful purpose, but it may be inferred from all the facts and circumstances proved in the case, and its existence and the time of its formation are questions of fact for the jury." And the court not only refused to instruct the jury, as requested by the plaintiff, that the fact that Mitchell was lynched was evidence that the individuals who lynched him intended to lynch him, but instead the court charged the jury that the lynching of Mitchell might be considered as evidence of the unlawful intent, and also charged that such lynching did not raise a presumption of law that they assembled with that intent. The charge, when all taken together, seems, very plainly, to have told the jury that, if the crowd came together with an innocent purpose, and afterwards lynched Mitchell, they would not be a mob unless they had specifically agreed to be a mob after they had assembled. This charge is not merely seriously misleading. It is erroneous. It is an ancient doctrine in the criminal law, as old as Hale's Pleas of the Crown, at least, that, although the assembly was lawful, the persons assembled might unite in unlawful conduct and thus become rioters.

In "Caldwell against the Commissioners of Cuyahoga County," a demurrer to the petition was sustained in the court of common pleas, and the petition was dismissed. This judgment was affirmed by the circuit court. Besides the constitutional objections which we have already considered, the counsel for the commissioners urge that the petition is defective, because the plaintiff therein avers that he was struck by "a heavy glass insulator thrown at him by one of the mob," and was "shot through the leg with a leaden bullet, fired from a revolver in the hands of some of the mob." It is argued that as the shooting was done by a pistol in the hands of one person, and as the glass insulator was thrown by one person, it does not appear that the specific acts which occasioned the plaintiff's injuries were the acts of a "collection of individuals" or a "mob." We do not think that there is much force in this argument. It is clearly alleged in the petition that the plaintiff and his fellow workmen were assaulted by a collection of individuals, who had assembled for an unlawful purpose, and tried to exercise correctional power over the plaintiff and his fellows, without any authority of law, and that thus and thereby the plaintiff suffered a lynching at the hands of said mob. The petition contains a sufficient statement of a cause of action against the county, under the statute in question, and the details which are set forth in the petition are not inconsistent with the more general averments contained therein. The demurrer should have been overruled. We have carefully considered all of the arguments and authorities which counsel have submitted, and we are thoroughly satisfied with the foregoing conclusions.

In "Commissioners against Church, Adm'r of Mitchell," the judgment of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

In "Caldwell against Commissioners," the judgment of the Circuit Court and the judgment of the Court of Common Pleas are reversed.

NEW JERSEY SUPREME COURT.

Elmer RUNYAN
v.

CENTRAL RAILROAD COMPANY, Plff. in Err.

(.....N. J.....)

- *1. When passengers in the passenger cars of a railroad have carried with them into such cars, and with them upon their journey, small packages of merchandise, in derogation of the common-law contract of carriage, the usage or practice to do so, in order that the passengers may rely upon it as a regulation of the railroad company that such packages can be so carried, must be so general, certain, uniform, and notorious, and it must be so clearly proved, that it can be concluded that the officers and agents of such company possessed knowledge of such usage, and acquiesced therein, in such manner that it became a part of the contract of carriage.
2. The proof of such usage must not only be clear and explicit, but it also must be distinguished from mere acts of accommodation. The mere fact that such acts of accommodation have been constantly permitted by the servants of the railroad company, not in obedience to duty or contract, but as a matter of form and indulgence, cannot compel their continuance. Such mere accommodation can be discontinued at any time.
3. A habit of one particular passenger to carry such package of merchandise into the passenger cars, and with him on his journey, will not constitute the usage or practice which can be relied on by passengers as a general regulation of the railroad company.
4. The proof of usage involves questions both of law and fact. It is a question of law what is a sufficient usage to bind parties. The usage must be strictly proved and construed; and when the facts are undisputed it becomes a question of law whether such usage has been established, and its binding force upon the parties. Under such circumstances, it cannot be left to the jury to determine whether the usage existed, or what operation or force must be given to it.
5. When the facts and circumstances are undisputed by which a custom or usage is sought to be established, and they are such that but one legitimate reasonable conclusion or inference can be drawn, it becomes a question of law, for the court to determine, whether such usage has been proved or not.
6. Quære: Can the habit of a single passenger to carry small packages of merchandise with him into the passenger car of a railroad company, and with him on his journey, with the knowledge of the servants of the company in charge of such cars, estop the company from examination of such merchandise in order to ascertain the contents, to justify his exclusion, without reasonable notice to him to discontinue such habit?

(November 22, 1899.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Union County to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for refusal to permit plaintiff as a passenger to carry packages onto defendant's train. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Corbin & Corbin for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. McCarter, Williamson, & McCarter for defendant in error.

Lippincott, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is the same case, in a different form, as reported in the court of errors and appeals in 61 N. J. L. 537, 43 L. R. A. 284, 41 Atl. 367. The facts, up to a certain point, are the same as set forth in the opinion in that case. In that case the judgment of nonsuit was reversed because of an erroneous rejection of evidence offered by the plaintiff on the trial thereof, tending to show, or introductory to the proof of, a custom, usage, or practice on the part of the passengers of the defendant company to carry packages of merchandise with them into cars, to be transported with them on the journey, and to show that the company, with knowledge of the custom, usage, or practice, had acquiesced in it, and that thereby arose a regulation of the company that such packages might be carried as personal baggage. The plaintiff in this case had purchased a ticket from New York to Elizabeth, on a passenger train between those places, and attempted to enter the car of the defendant to go to Elizabeth. He then had with him a small satchel, containing sundry articles of use, and, besides, in his arms and hands, a 10-pound package of nails and a letter file, which he had purchased in the city of New York. The agents of the defendant company refused to allow him to enter the car with the package of nails and letter file. He insisted upon entering the car with these packages. He was prevented from doing so, and he eventually took his passage to Elizabeth on a train of the Pennsylvania Railroad, and he now sues to recover damages of the defendant company because of his exclusion from the cars of that company. He recovered a verdict against the company, upon which judgment has been entered, and the cause is now under review upon writ of error at the instance of the defendant. The court of errors and appeals, in its opinion (61 N. J. L. 537, 43 L. R. A. 284, 41 Atl. 367), held that the ticket of the plaintiff, which he had purchased for his passage, was but a token of his right to transportation, and that the plaintiff was a passenger, with all his common-law rights, and that at common law "he was entitled to take with him for use his personal baggage appropriate to the journey and its object,—that is, not only wearing apparel for use and ornament, but also, other articles, all within reasonable limit, the use of which was personal to him during his journey, and in accomplishing its purposes." The package of nails and the letter file in the hands of the plaintiff, under the evidence in the case, which is the same in this respect in the former case, were held in no wise to belong to the class of articles which he had the right to carry with him at common-law, as they plainly were not for the personal use of the plaintiff upon the journey, or in accomplishing its purpose. But the court, in treating of the offer of evidence which was erroneously excluded, said that "if the defendant company had, previous to the denial of admission of the plaintiff to their cars complained of, for a long time acquiesced in, and made accommodation for, the carriage of small packages of merchandise of its passengers as personal baggage so as to lead them to accept and rely upon its attitude in that respect as one of its regulations, that it could resume its rights under the law only after reasonable notice of its rescission of the regulation so made. It could not suddenly enforce the right resumed against passengers who were in good faith traveling in reliance upon the previous regulation, without reasonable notice, and ignorant of, and unprepared for, any change in it. We think that the questions asked were admissible as a step in the plaintiff's proofs, and were wrongfully overruled, and for that reason that the judgment should be reversed." Therefore the present case must be governed by this principle enunciated by the court of errors and appeals, that a custom, usage, or practice of passengers to carry small packages with them on the passenger cars, acquiesced in by a railroad company, embodies or ingrafts itself into the contract of carriage of the passenger as a regulation of the company, and can only be segregated from such contract by reasonable notice of the rescission of such regulation, or reasonable notice of the resumption of the common-law contract of carriage. This must be considered settled in this state, notwithstanding the fact that the questions which were proposed and excluded on the former trial were admissible, as it seems to me, upon an entirely different ground than that they tended to prove a custom or usage. It will be noticed that the whole stress of the decision in the former case was placed upon the fact that the usage or custom was of such a character as gave the passenger a right to rely on it as a regulation which for the time being became a part of the contract of carriage.

*Headnotes by LIPPINCOTT, J.

NOTE—As to right of a passenger to carry packages into a car, see also Bullock v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. (N. J.) 37 L. R. A. 417; and prior decision in the present case in 43 L. R. A. 284.
46 L. R. A.

In the case sub judice, an attempt was made on the trial, in behalf of the plaintiff, to establish a custom, usage, or practice of passengers on this railroad to carry packages of merchandise into the cars with them on their journeys, and that provision had been made by the company for the carriage of such packages in this manner, and to accommodate the passengers in the exercise of this custom and usage, and that, by reason of these facts, the defendant company had acquiesced in such custom or usage, and that upon its attitude in this respect the plaintiff had the right to rely, as one of its regulations, without notice of its discontinuance or rescission. The plaintiff in this case relies entirely upon the establishment of a previous custom, usage, or practice of passengers to carry small packages of merchandise with them into the cars and on the journey. This is made the basis of proof in this case, and it is not claimed that a right of recovery can stand upon any other ground.

After the evidence upon the part of the plaintiff had closed, a motion to nonsuit was made and refused. The first assignment of error is based upon an exception allowed to this refusal. The consideration of this assignment of error requires an examination into the question whether the evidence is of such a character as that it should be sent to the jury to determine whether such a custom, usage, or practice had been established, or, in other words, whether an implied regulation had been established that passengers could carry such packages with them. In the decision in the court of errors and appeals, the court was dealing with the overruling of an offer of evidence; and nothing at all was determined as to the character of proof necessary to establish the implied regulation, or necessary to establish the custom or usage from which acquiescence of the railroad company could be concluded, and upon which the plaintiff could rely as a part of his contract of carriage. It is clear that such a custom or usage is in derogation of the contract at common law. It is in derogation of the common-law right of the defendant, and strips it of a benefit of which it is possessed at common-law. It interpolates itself into the contract, and therefore the custom, usage, or practice must be strictly proved, the evidence adduced to prove it must be clear; it must be strictly construed; and great care should be exercised in allowing a custom, usage, or practice to change contracts either expressly entered into or implied at common law. Southwest Virginia Mineral Co. v. Chase, 95 Va. 50-57, 27 S. E. 826; Metcalf v. Weld, 14 Gray, 211; Thornton v. Suffolk Mfg. Co. 10 Cush. 376; Lawson, Usages & Customs, pp. 99-101; 27 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, title Usages and Customs, p. 717. It is to be remembered that the right of the company to bar the plaintiff with merchandise was clear, unless it be by force of some custom, usage, or practice otherwise clearly established against the company, in which they have clearly acquiesced; and the burden is upon the plaintiff to establish such custom, usage, or practice, and acquiescence, by a preponderance of proof. He is the only one who testified to any facts in relation to this matter, and he commences by showing that racks were adjusted to the sides of the car, near the roof thereof, and that these racks would hold such packages as he was carrying, and other similar packages; but he himself testifies that they were suitable for, and intended also for, packages and articles for the personal use of the passengers on their journey, and to accomplish the purpose thereof; and, therefore, keeping in mind the rule of the common law in reference to the contract of carriage, the proof of the fact that racks were there, into which small packages could be placed, does not even in the slightest tend to show that the railroad had made provisions in this way to carry merchandise. The presumption is the other way, and he testifies to nothing which overcomes it. It might just as well be insisted that the floor of the car between the seats was provided for this purpose, as well as such other unoccupied spaces which could be conveniently or inconveniently used for such purpose. Again, he does not testify beyond his own use of these racks, or any other part of the car, for such packages of merchandise. It may be well to refer specifically to his evidence in this respect, and perhaps well to set it out in its entirety. His whole evidence is as follows:

Q. Have the trains or cars that run between Elizabeth and New York any provision for parcels?

A. They have.

Q. What is it?

A. They have racks about that long and about that deep [witness illustrating].

Q. You say, "About that long." What do you mean?

A. About 2 feet 6 inches.

Q. Where are they generally located?

A. Along the upper side of the car, just above the windows; between the windows; a little higher than the windows.

Q. I think you have already testified that you have been accustomed to travel between New York and Elizabeth frequently?

A. I have, very often.

Q. And have you frequently carried parcels of this kind on the cars? (Here there was an objection to the question, and allowance, and exception.)

A. Yes.

Q. There never had been any objection to your doing this?

A. Never before.

Q. Can you tell us whether from your observation and experience prior to and up to and including the 30th day of December, 1896, passengers traveling between New York and Elizabeth, or other stations on the New York-New Jersey Central Railroad, were accustomed to, and were permitted to, carry packages?

A. Yes; four times as big as mine. (Here there was an objection to the latter part of the answer, and the witness said, "I will say yes, then," and the latter part of the answer is stricken out.)

Q. For how long a time did you observe such a habit on the part of the Central Railroad Company, allowing this to be done?

A. Ever since I have been traveling over the road,—for about ten years.

On cross-examination:

Q. You say you have seen passengers in the cars of the Central Railroad Company for the last ten years put their parcels in the racks?

—48 L. R. A.

A. Yes.

Q. You did not know what was in them, except your own parcels?

A. I did not.

Q. You have seen umbrellas, hats, coats, and cloaks put in the rack?

A. Yes.

Q. And shawls?

A. Yes.

Q. And small handbags?

A. Yes.

Q. Could you put such a handbag as you have in the racks?

A. Yes.

Q. But not very much bigger than that?

A. Oh, yes; twice the size of that.

Q. These racks are generally made of wire?

A. Yes; I believe they are.

Q. And are lightly constructed?

A. Yes; I think they are strong enough to hold a man's weight.

Q. Some of them are flat, and some of them round, are they not?

A. I have seen flat ones.

Q. And they are put up under the roof of the car, and you have seen people put paper parcels in them?

A. Yes; I have.

Q. They are the same sort of racks on the Central Railroad, substantially, as those used on all the roads?

A. Except there are different shapes.

And on redirect examination:

Q. Have you heard previous to this of any objection on the part of the railroad company to the carrying of parcels by the passengers owning them?

A. No, sir.

It will be noticed that the witness carefully avoided, except so far as his own acts were concerned, testifying to or attempting to identify any other parcels or packages of merchandise which he had seen other passengers carrying into the cars, and he does not testify that he had any knowledge what any packages he had ever seen other passengers carry contained. Upon his evidence no inference or conclusion can be drawn, either by the court or by a jury, with any reasonable degree of proof, that any packages carried by other passengers were such in their character as were at all prohibited the passenger in the exercise of his common-law right. For aught that appears in the evidence in the case, they may have been packages of articles intended for personal use on the journey, or to accomplish the object thereof. So far as the establishment of a custom is concerned, the evidence entirely fails to establish it. It is but necessary to consider fundamentally the necessary requisites of a legal custom controlling a contract, to determine that none of its elements exist in this case. Whatever the practice or usage contained in the evidence, it did not attain the force and effect of what is known as a "legal custom," which ingrafts itself into a contract, and controls the rights of the parties thereto. If it is undertaken to distinguish between what is known as a "legal custom" and what is known as a "usage" or "practice," the same difficulty in relation to the sufficiency of the evidence arises. The plaintiff relies upon a general usage or a general practice to establish the attitude and acquiescence of the defendant company, upon which he must rely in order to sustain his right to carry this package of merchandise with him. If he fails in this proof, he fails in this action, because the case was tried upon the idea that acquiescence in a general usage or practice implied a general regulation which controlled the rights of the company in respect to all other passengers as well as to himself. The plaintiff was bound to establish such a general usage or practice by a preponderance of proof, in order to succeed in a recovery. The question is whether he has presented such facts—such evidence—as warranted the trial court in submitting the case to the jury, to ascertain whether the usage or practice required had been established. It is remembered in this connection that the rule is that, where the question is one of fair dispute, the jury must determine it. The conclusion has been reached that the proof of the usage or practice is not such that under the rules of law the question of its existence could be submitted to the jury. His evidence is not at all supplemented by other evidence, either positive or circumstantial. There does not appear in the case any evidence touching the existence of such a general usage, either so general that the acquiescence of the defendant could be presumed, nor any facts of acquiescence on the part of its officers, agents, or servants, and nothing to show any actual knowledge on their part. Of this class of evidence the case is entirely barren. There are no facts and circumstances which would in the slightest tend to show any knowledge on the part of the defendant company or its agents. Such evidence is quite material when the establishment of a usage is insisted upon. His testimony shows that he was not a frequent passenger. Sometimes he would go once a week, sometimes twice a week, and sometimes not for a month at a time; and he testifies to no acts, save his own, which have in the slightest any tendency to establish a usage. Whatever the facts may be, the evidence is barren of any which were not of his own creation; and he admits that he is ignorant of any facts which go to prove that anyone but himself ever carried any packages of merchandise in the passenger cars of the defendant company, and, so far as any express knowledge or acquiescence is concerned, the case is entirely silent. His own evidence is devoid of facts which even tend to exhibit the usage insisted upon, and an examination of his evidence shows that it relates to his own acts exclusively. They do not establish the usage or practice upon which he could rely, alike with other passengers, as establishing a regulation alike applicable to all. Whether there had existed in his own conduct theretofore as a passenger such a practice or usage, applicable to him alone, with the knowledge of the company or its servants regulating such matters, as would estop the company from objecting to his carriage of these packages, and from excluding him from the cars with such packages, until after reasonable notice to him to discontinue such practice, is not the question at all, and no opinion is intended to be expressed upon that subject. Neither is it intended to express any opinion upon the question of whether such a usage had grown up of allowing the carrying of packages without requiring passengers to disclose whether they contained such articles as were prohibited by the ordinary common-law contract of carriage, and thus the defendant be prevented from excluding the passenger refusing to so disclose until reasonable notice of the rescission of such custom. These are not the questions raised or discussed, nor were such usages insisted upon as a right of recovery. The insistence was that a general usage had been established which implied acquiescence by the defendant company, and which gave rise to a general regulation, alike applicable to all passengers, to allow the carriage of packages of merchandise with them on their journey on the passenger cars. The usage, to be made a part of this contract of carriage, must be established by plain and explicit evidence. Steward v. Scudder, 24 N. J. L. 96-101. In the case of The Reeside, 2 Sumn. 567, Fed. Cas. No. 11,657, Justice Story says: "I own myself no friend to the almost indiscriminate habit of late years of setting up particular usages or customs in almost all kinds of business and trade to control, vary, or annul the general liabilities of parties under the common law, as well as under the commercial law. It has long appeared to me that there is no small danger in admitting such loose and inconclusive usage or customs, often unknown to particular parties, and always liable to great misunderstandings and misinterpretations and abuses, to outweigh the well-known and well-settled principles of law. And I rejoice to find that of late years the courts of law, both in England and America, have been disposed to narrow the limits of the operation of such usages and customs, and to discountenance any further extension of them." In Wood v. Wood, 1 Car. & P. 59, it was held that a usage, to be binding, must be certain, uniform, and notorious, so that it must have been known to the parties. Sewell v. Corp., 1 Car. & P. 392; Steward v. Scudder, 24 N. J. L. 101. Usage cannot be proved by isolated instances, but must be so certain, uniform, and notorious that it must be presumed to have been understood by the parties as entering into and constituting a part of the contract. Cope v. Dodd, 13 Pa. 33; Nichols v. De Wolf, 1 R. I. 277. The contract by the common law was just as explicit in its terms as if it had been expressed in writing, and the evidence of usage to modify it must show it to be a general one in respect to the business or matter in which it is invoked. Barton v. McKelwoy, 22 N. J.

L. 165. Whatever the usage or practice which will control, or however long a time existed, the proof of it must be clear and explicit; and it must be, and is to be, clearly distinguished from mere acts of accommodation. Many things are done in the course of trade, by way of favor, which cannot be held to constitute usage entering into contracts of the parties. The fact that such acts have constantly been done, not in obedience to duty or contract, but as matter of form, cannot compel their continuance. 27 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, title Usages and Customs, p. 717, and cases cited; Citizens' Bank v. Graf-fin, 31 Md. 507, 1 Am. Rep. 66; Metcalf v. Weld, 14 Gray, 210. A habit of particular person or persons does not of itself constitute usage. Ibid. And they are to be strictly construed. Ibid. They must be of such generality and publicity in the line of business that the parties sought to be held would be presumed to have knowledge and acquiescence.

Proof of usage involves questions both of law and fact. It is a question of law what is sufficient usage to bind the parties; that is to say, for how long a time, at what places, and with what degree of uniformity it must have been observed. If the facts be disputed, then they become a matter for the jury; but, being undisputed, a given state of facts being found, it becomes a question of law, for the court to determine, whether such a usage as claimed existed, and its binding force upon the parties. Under such circumstances, it cannot be left to the jury to determine whether the usage existed, or what operation or force must be given to it. 27 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 732, and cases cited. In this case the facts as testified to by the plaintiff, the only witness in this respect, convince, beyond question, that no usage existed on the part of the passengers to carry packages of merchandise with them in the cars; that is, such packages as under the common law they had no right to carry. The facts testified to did not constitute a usage or practice, and were such as that knowledge could not be inferred on the part of the defendant's officers and agents that such packages were being carried as a practice by the passengers, or as a usage by the passengers. No acquiescence is established. I think upon that subject the case is barren of evidence or proof. The whole case is before the court, and the evidence in behalf of the defendant in no wise aids the defective proof of the plaintiff. The elements of proof in this respect were entirely lacking, and the cause should not have been submitted to the jury. The motion to nonsuit should have prevailed, and for this reason there must be a reversal.

Upon the undisputed independent proof of the defendant in defense of the action, several important questions have been raised and discussed, but they have not been considered.

The judgment must be reversed, and a venire de novo awarded.

PENNSYLVANIA SUPREME COURT.

N. D. JONES, Appt.,
v.
FOREST OIL COMPANY.

(194 Pa. 379.)

A gas pump may lawfully be used to increase the production of an oil well, although the production of wells on adjoining property is thereby diminished.

(January 2, 1900.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a decree of the Court of Common Pleas, No. 2, for Allegheny County refusing to enjoin the use of a gas pump in an oil well adjacent to complainant's property. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court below by FRAZIER, J., which was as follows:

"The bill in this case was filed for the purpose of restraining the defendant by injunction from using what is known as a 'gas pump' for pumping oil from one of its wells on the Boyce farm, in this county. From the bill, answer, and testimony taken at the trial, we find the following facts: First. The plaintiff is the owner in fee simple of a tract of land situate in Robinson township, this county, generally known as the 'W. H. Kelso Farm,' bounded by lands of Tidball, Boyce heirs, Neely, Schaffer, Linton, Noble heirs, and McCurdy, and containing about 126 acres. That the plaintiff has drilled six oil wells on said farm; two of these wells, known as 'Kelso Nos. 2 and 3,' being located 251 and 204 feet, respectively, from the south line of the farm. That well No. 2 was finished and began producing oil in October, 1891; No. 3 was finished and began producing in November, 1891. Second. That the Forest Oil Company is a corporation of this commonwealth, and, as lessee, has the exclusive right to drill for oil and gas on the farm of the Boyce heirs, which farm adjoins the Kelso farm of plaintiff on the south. On this farm the defendant has completed and is now operating several oil wells,—among NOTE.—As to explosion of nitroglycerine by which gas is drawn from neighboring well, see People's Gas Co. v. Tyner (Ind.) 16 L. R. A. 443.

As to permitting the escape of gas from a well into the air, see Hague v. Wheeler (Pa.) 22 L. R. A. 141.

As to constitutionality of a statute prohibiting the waste of natural gas by allowing it to flow into the air, see State v. Ohio Oil Co. (Ind.) 47 L. R. A. 627, and to the same effect the decision by the Supreme Court of the United States in Ohio Oil Co. v. Indiana, 177 U. S. 190, 44 L. ed. 729.

For right to drill wells near the boundary of land and draw oil from under the adjoining land, see Kelley v. Ohio Oil Co. (Ohio) 39 L. R. A. 765.

them, a well known as 'No. 1 Boyce,' which is located 162 feet from the line dividing the Kelso and Boyce farms, and is 366 feet south from Kelso No. 3, and 580 feet southwest from Kelso No. 2. The well known as 'Boyce No. 3' is located 200 feet south from the line dividing the Kelso and Boyce farms. Third. That the parties hereto have each leased numerous other farms adjoining the Boyce and Kelso farms for oil and gas purposes, and are now, and have been for some time, producing oil and gas therefrom; that the oil is now obtained from all wells in that field by pumping, the daily production of the wells being small. I further find that the sand or rock from which oil is obtained in this field is of a loose, coarse gravelly nature. Fourth. That Boyce well No. 1 in the early fall of 1898 was producing from twelve to fifteen barrels of oil per day, and that this production gradually fell off until December 1, 1898, when its output was seven and a half barrels, and in January, 1899, it was producing less than one per day. That in February, 1899, the well was shot and cleaned out, and shortly thereafter there was added to its pumping machinery and apparatus a device known as a 'gas pump.' This device is used by oil operators for the purpose of withdrawing gas from the wells by suction, thereby increasing the well's production of oil. That the distance from which these pumps will draw oil and gas depends upon the nature and quality of the oil-producing sand, its effect being felt to a much greater distance in a coarse and loose sand than in a hard and compact sand. That about one week after the use of the gas pump was commenced on the Boyce No. 1 the gas supply in Kelso wells Nos. 2 and 3 of plaintiff began to fall off, and shortly afterwards the oil production of these wells was decreased. That, after the use of the gas pump on Boyce No. 1 was discontinued, Kelso No. 2 went back to its former production, and No. 3 is now producing daily as much as formerly, within 55-100 of a barrel, and both wells now have an ample supply of gas. Fifth. The production of the three wells claimed to be affected by the use of the gas pump was as follows: Kelso No. 2, before use of gas pump on Boyce No. 1, five barrels in six days. Kelso No. 2, while using gas pump on Boyce No. 1, four and one fourth barrels in six days. Kelso No. 3, before using gas pump on Boyce No. 1, three and three fourths barrels in six days. Kelso No. 3, while using gas pump on Boyce No. 1, two and one half barrels in six days. Boyce No. 1, before using pump, produced a fraction less than 1 barrel daily; Boyce No. 2, while using pump, produced a fraction more than 1 barrel daily. Sixth. That the gas pump has been used in every oil field except that known as the 'Bradford Field,' but that it is not generally used except in failing and almost exhausted territory. That its use by one operator necessitates its use by others in the immediate neighborhood, if they desire to prevent the daily production of their wells from being decreased. That if pumps are placed on all wells the production of the wells is neither increased nor diminished. These pumps can be purchased either in Pittsburg, or at various points in the oil fields, and cost from $50 upwards, according to size. And that the pump used on Boyce No. 1 cost $60. Seventh. That gas pumps were in use in the McCurdy field, the field in which the plaintiff's and defendant's wells are located, before being placed on the Boyce well No. 1, and have been in use in that field for more than one year previous thereto, and are now being used on wells in that field. Eighth. That the farms of plaintiff and defendant, described in findings 1 and 2, lie wholly in what is known as the 'McCurdy Oil Field,' which field was discovered in the year 1890, and has been operated since that time. That the production of the wells has largely decreased, and at this time the field is almost exhausted.

"Conclusions of Law.

"The question for determination in this case is a new one. Counsel have not referred us to any case in which this question was involved; nor have we, in our examination of the case, found any. The question here is to what extent an owner of oil wells may use mechanical devices for bringing the oil to the surface. In operating his own wells, may he use appliances which diminish the production of his neighbor's wells? It is not denied that a gas pump will to some extent affect the production of oil wells located in the immediate neighborhood of the well to which the pump is attached, if the sand from which the oil is obtained is of a porous, pebbly nature, as is the case in the McCurdy field. To some extent, the law governing the use of subterranean waters by the owner of the surface is applicable to the production of oil. In regard to wells and springs, the law is well settled that the owner of land is not entitled to recover for injuries to his wells and springs caused by the acts of an adjoining owner, if the injury results from a lawful exercise of the rights of the adjoining owner, on his own property, and without malice or negligence. An owner of land may dig a well upon his property and if, in so doing, he taps the hidden flow of water, which supplies his neighbor's spring, it is a loss to the neighbor for which the law provides no remedy. Lybe's Appeal, 106 Pa. 626, 51 Am. Rep. 542. In Pennsylvania Coal Co. v. Sanderson, 113 Pa. 145, 57 Am. Rep. 445, 6 Atl. 456, it is said: 'It must be conceded, we think, that every man is entitled to the ordinary and natural use and enjoyment of his property; he may cut down the forest trees, clear and cultivate his land, although in so doing he may dry up the sources of his neighbor's springs, or remove the natural barriers against wind and storm. . . . In sinking his well he may intercept and appropriate the water which supplies his neighbor's well.' In this case the defendant has the exclusive right to bore for oil on the farm of the Boyce heirs adjoining a farm owned by plaintiff. The right being a lawful one, the defendant is at liberty to use all lawful means to obtain 'all the gas and oil contained in, or obtainable through, the land.' Westmoreland & C. Natural Gas Co. v. De Witt, 130 Pa. 249, 5 L. R. A. 732, 18 Atl. 725. And to that end it may resort to the use of all known lawful modern machinery and appliances.

"The plaintiff's claim is that the use of a gas pump in the production of oil is unlawful, because, as he alleges, by its powerful suction the oil and gas are drawn from his adjoining farm, thereby decreasing his production. Plaintiff assumes that there is a certain fixed amount of oil and gas under his farm, in which he has an absolute property. True, they belong to him while they are part of his land; but when they migrate to the lands of his neighbor, or become under his control, they belong to the neighbor. On this point, in Brown v. Vandergrift, 80 Pa. 147, Judge Agnew, in referring to the production of petroleum, says: Its fugitive and wandering existence within the limits of a particular tract is uncertain.' And in Westmoreland & C. Natural Gas Co. v. De Witt, 130 Pa. 249, 5 L. R. A. 732, 18 Atl. 725, Justice Mitchell says: 'Water and oil, and still more strongly gas, may be classed by themselves, if the analogy be not too fanciful, as minerals ferre naturæ. In common with animals, and unlike other minerals, they have the power and the tendency to escape without the volition of the owner.

... They belong to the owner of the land, and are part of it, so long as they are on or in it, and are subject to his control; but when they escape, and go into other land, or come under another's control, the title of the former owner is gone. Possession of the land, therefore, is not necessarily possession of the gas. If an adjoining or even a distant owner drills his own land and taps your gas, so that it comes into his well and under his control, it is no longer yours, but his.' From these cases we conclude that the property of the owner of lands in oil and gas is not absolute until it is actually within his grasp, and brought to the surface. If possession of the land is not necessarily possession of the oil and gas, is there any reason why an oil and gas operator should not be permitted to adopt any and all appliances known to the trade to make the production of his wells as large as possible? If one may lawfully use a steam pump, may he not lawfully use a gas pump? In Ballard v. Tomlinson, L. R. 29 Ch. Div. 115, it was held that a landowner has the right to all of the percolating stream under his land, the court saying: 'This percolating water below the surface of the earth is therefore a common reservoir or source in which nobody has any property, but of which everybody has, so far as he can, the right of appropriating the whole. The principle of natural user does not apply at all. The plaintiff, if he has a right to use anything in nature, has a right to exercise that user by all the skill and invention of which man is capable; and it seems to me that as long as the plaintiff uses only lawful means as against his neighbor, however ingenious or however artificial those means may be, his right to appropriate the common source is not diminished because he uses the most artificial or most ingenious methods.' If it is lawful to take water from a substrata by the 'exercise of all the skill and invention of which man is capable,' we see no reason why it is not lawful to produce oil by those means, especially as the possession of the soil for purposes of tillage gives the owner no actual possession of the oil and gas underlying it. The evidence shows that the gas pump has been in constant use in all fields, except one, to a greater or less extent, since the discovery of oil; that its use has been generally recognized by all operators; and that it is only used on wells in territory which is almost exhausted. Gas pumps have been used in this field for almost a year past, within 1,500 feet of the wells of both plaintiff and defendant, without objection. Their cost is within the reach of all operators, and, when used by all, none are injured.

"It seems to me that if it is unlawful to use a gas pump, because its use may perhaps lessen the supply of gas in the well of an adjoining owner, and thereby diminish his production of oil, for the same reason it is unlawful to use a steam pump; and, if neither gas nor steam can lawfully be used in pumping, very few wells at this day will pay drilling and operating expenses.

"In view of the testimony and authorities above cited, we conclude that the use of a gas pump by defendant, under the circumstances of this case, is not an unlawful act that should be restrained by injunction; that the plaintiff is not entitled to the relief prayed for; and that the bill should be dismissed. And now, July 29, 1899, the preliminary injunction heretofore granted in this case is dissolved, and the bill dismissed, at costs of plaintiff."

Messrs. A. M. Brown and John D. Brown for appellant.

Messrs. R. W. Cummins and J. McF. Carpenter, for appellee:

Water, oil, and gas stand on the same footing and belong to the same class as regards proprietary and other rights pertaining to them.

Westmoreland & C. Natural Gas Co. v. De Witt, 130 Pa. 235, 5 L. R. A. 731, 18 Atl. 724; Brown v. Spilman, 155 U. S. 670, 39 L. ed. 304, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 245.

No one has at any time any property in water percolating below the surface of the earth, even when it is under his own land; but everybody has a right to appropriate that percolating water, at least while it is under his own land, to the extent that he may take it all, so as to prevent any of it going on the land of his neighbor.

Ballard v. Tomlinson, L. R. 29 Ch. Div. 115; Haldeman v. Bruckhart, 45 Pa. 514, 84 Am. Dec. 511; Wheatley v. Baugh, 25 Pa. 528, 64 Am. Dec. 721; Lybe's Appeal, 106 Pa. 626, 51 Am. Rep. 542; Pennsylvania Coal Co. v. Sanderson, 113 Pa. 145, 57 Am. Rep. 445, 6 Atl. 453; Williams v. Ladew, 161 Pa. 283, 29 Atl. 54.

Per Curiam:

Though this particular question is somewhat of a novelty, the principles which control it are very familiar, and perfectly well settled. They are well expressed in the opinion of the learned court below, and, on the findings of fact and conclusions of law there contained, we affirm the decrees.

NORTH CAROLINA SUPREME COURT.

George CREDLE et al., Admrs., etc., of Henry W. Wahab, Deceased, et al.,
v.

Steven B. AYERS, Appt.

(.....N. C.....)

1. Mesne profits are recoverable from a defaulting vendee in a land contract for the time that he withholds possession of the premises pending an action of ejectment against him, in which he gives a defense bond under Code, § 237.
2. The measure of damages in ejectment for withholding possession of land is the actual rental value of the land, irrespective of what the defendant may have gathered from it.
3. The court may itself find the facts in question without a reference therefor, where a referee has failed to pass upon objections to evidence.
4. Evidence of the rental value of adjoining farms is not admissible on the question of the amount recoverable as mesne profits for withholding possession of land.

(February 20, 1900.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for Hyde County in favor of plaintiffs in an action to recover possession of real estate after defendant had defaulted in payment of the first installment of the purchase money thereof. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Small & MacLean, for appellant:

Section 237 in no wise assumes that every plaintiff in an action to recover possession is also entitled to recover rents and profits. The object of the statute is only to provide for a judgment for rents and profits if the facts and circumstances of the particular case shall justify such a judgment.

Allen v. Taylor, 96 N. C. 37, 1 S. E. 462.

This is one of the actions in which the plaintiffs are seeking to recover the possession, and are not entitled to recover the rents and profits, and therefore there is no liability for the same as against the defendant or his surety.

The mortgagor is the equitable owner and the mortgagee is the legal owner of the land. The mortgagor is allowed to remain in possession and is entitled to reasonable notice to quit, and entitled to receive the rents and profits while he is in possession.

Hemphill v. Ross, 66 N. C. 477; Pearson v. Mayers, 64 N. C. 549; Wellborn v. Simonon, 88 N. C. 268; Killebrew v. Hines, 104 N. C. 188, 10 S. E. 159, 251; Carr v. Dail, Norm.—As to right of doweress to mesne profits, see note to Roan v. Holmes (Fla.) 21 L. R. A. 180.

For mesne profits, in case of cotenancy, see note to Gage v. Gage (N. H.) 28 L. R. A. on page 857.
48 L. R. A.

114 N. C. 284, 19 S. E. 235; Hinton v. Wals-ton, 115 N. C. 7, 20 S. E. 164.

If the mortgagor is left in possession, he is regarded for most purposes as the owner and takes the rents and profits.

Pingrey, Mortg. § 826; 15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 812, note 3; Teal v. Walker, 111 U. S. 248, 28 L. ed. 417, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 420; Freedman's Sav. & T. Co. v. Shepherd, 127 U. S. 494, 32 L. ed. 163, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1250; Betz v. Verner (N. J.) 7 L. R. A. note on p. 630; Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1204; Story, Eq. Jur. 12th ed. 1017; Jones, Mortg. 770, 771. Messrs. Shepherd & Shepherd also for appellant.

Mr. Charles F. Warren, for appellees: After default and demand the possession of the vendee or mortgagor is unlawful.

Kiser v. Combs, 114 N. C. 640, 19 S. E. 664; Hinson v. Smith, 118 N. C. 503, 24 S. E. 541.

If the plaintiffs have lost title pending the action, the title is still lodged and vested in Makely, not a stranger, but a party plaintiff in this action, and Ayers has voluntarily surrendered to him the possession of the land. This meets the requirement that in actions of ejectment the plaintiff must show the legal title and the right of possession under it, both at the time the action is brought and at the time of the trial.

Arrington v. Arrington, 114 N. C. 116, 19 S. E. 278.

The mortgage of Makely was not a menace to Ayers. Makely was a party to the bond for title, and bound himself by its terms and provisions.

Ayers assumed the debts as a part of the purchase money, and became the principal debtor and primarily liable for them, Makely consenting. He made default in his payments, and by reason thereof, Makely, who would not otherwise have foreclosed, did foreclose, and Wahab and Credle lost the farm.

3 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1206; 15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 834, 835, 837-840; Woodcock v. Bostic, 118 N. C. 822, 24 S. E. 362; Kerr, Real Prop. § 2166.

Where the right or title of the plaintiff in ejectment expired after the commencement of his suit, but before trial, and there was consequently no question of title or possession to try, the plaintiff was allowed to recover actual damages.

10 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 537; Wilkes v. Lion, 2 Cow. 333; Woodhull v. Rosenthal, 61 N. Y. 382; Jackson ex dem. Henderson v. Davenport, 18 Johns. 295; Brown v. Gallo-way, Pet. C. C. 291, Fed. Cas. No. 2,006; Doe ex dem. Morgan v. Bluck, 3 Campb. 447; Thrustout ex dem. Turner v. Grey, 2 Strange, 1056; Sutherland, Damages, § 848.

Vendee in action of ejectment by vendor must give bond before answering.

Allen v. Taylor, 96 N. C. 37, 1 S. E. 462.

Vendor is entitled to judgment for possession unless vendee gives bond under the Code, §§ 237, 390.

The demand for possession and refusal, the bringing of the action of ejectment, and the execution of bond by defendant, are equivalent in law to an entry.

Dow v. Memphis & L. R. R. Co. 124 U. S. 652, 31 L. ed. 565, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 673; Sage v. Memphis & L. R. R. Co. 125 U. S. 361, 31 L. ed. 694, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 887; Freedman's Sav. & T. Co. v. Shepherd, 127 U. S. 494, 32 L. ed. 163, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1250.

Clark, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The vendee having defaulted in payment of the first instalment of the purchase money, due November, 1894, the vendors (and their mortgagee, Makely, who had joined in the contract of sale) brought an action of ejectment in December, 1894, at the end of thirty days thereafter, under the terms of the contract. The plaintiffs could have brought their action either (1) for possession of the land; (2) for sale and foreclosure; or (3) in personam, for judgment for the debt; or for all three. They elected to take the first, and have sued for possession and damages for withholding. Allen v. Taylor, 96 N. C. 37, 1 S. E. 462; Silvey v. Ayley, 118 N. C. 959, 23 S. E. 933.

The defendant contends that he is not liable for mesne profits, and relies upon Killebrew v. Hines, 104 N. C. 182, 10 S. E. 159, 251; Carr v. Dail, 114 N. C. 284, 19 S. E. 235; and Hinton v. Walston, 115 N. C. 7, 20 S. E. 164. Those cases hold that a vendee or mortgagor, before or after breach, who is permitted to retain possession, is entitled to the rents and profits (unless there is an express stipulation in the contract or mortgage to the contrary, as in Orinkley v. Egerton, 113 N. C. 444, 18 S. E. 669; Jones v. Jones, 117 N. C. 254, 23 S. E. 214); but here the withholding by the defendant, after action brought in December, 1894, was wrongful, and he became liable, like any other defendant in ejectment, for the mesne profits. For what other purpose than to secure such mesne profits is the defense bond required, under Code, § 237? Had the bond not been given, or not been raised to $5,000, as required by the court (Rollins v. Henry, 77 N. C. 467), the plaintiffs would have had possession by default (Code, § 390; Norton v. McLaurin, 125 N. C. 185, 34 S. E. 269, and cases cited); or if the defendant had been allowed to defend without the bond, by reason of poverty, a receiver would have been appointed to secure the rents and profits (Horton v. White, 84 N. C. 297). This case differs from Leach v. Curtin, 123 N. C. 85, 31 S. E. 269, in that possession is here sued for and demanded in the complaint. The defendant surrendered possession to Makely in May, 1896. That did not release the defendant's liability for rents and profits for 1895, during the wrongful withholding, unless there had been a stipulation to that effect. Otherwise, any tenant in possession could wrongfully withhold possession of land 48 L. R. A.

after action brought, and enjoy the rents and profits till forced to trial, and then release himself and bond from liability for mesne profits by abandoning possession. In such case the plaintiffs take judgment for the mesne profits till they got possession, and for the title, but not for the possession. Woodley v. Hassell, 94 N. C. 157; Clark's Code, 3d ed. § 384. Under the former practice, in actions of ejectment, damages were recoverable only up to the time action was begun, but under the present system they are recoverable up to the trial. Pearson v. Carr, 97 N. C. 194, 1 S. E. 916; Arrington v. Arrington, 114 N. C., at page 120, 19 S. E., at page 279; 10 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 1st ed. p. 537; Sutherland, Damages, § 848. Here, up to surrender of premises, and by agreement in the order of reference, these are restricted to the rents and profits for the year 1895.

The mortgagee, Makely, foreclosed and bought the premises in May, 1896. That could have no effect upon the liability of the defendant for mesne profits during his wrongful withholding. This, being "fruit fallen," by the defendant's own authorities (Killebrew v. Hines and others, above cited), would go to the plaintiffs Credle & Wahab, and not to their coplaintiff and mortgagee, Makely. But the defendant is relieved from difficulty, as Makely is a coplaintiff, assenting to the recovery of judgment by Credle & Wahab, and, besides, his express agreement, releasing such mesne profits to them, is in the record.

The referee finds as a fact that the defendant, by his negligence and want of good husbandry, materially lessened the productivity of the land, and exposed the crop to the depredation of hogs and cattle. He correctly held, as a matter of law, that the measure of damages was the actual rental value of the land, and not what the defendant actually gathered from the land. The language of the defense bond required by Code, § 237, is for payment of costs and damages for loss of rents and profits. The object is to put the plaintiffs, when wrongfully kept out of possession, in statu quo, by giving as compensation the rental value that could have been had if the possession of the premises had not been withheld. 10 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 1st ed. p. 542 (c).

The defendant further excepted because the referee failed to pass upon certain objections to evidence, and that the judge, instead of referring the case, found those facts himself. This was admissible (Wallace v. Douglass, 103 N. C. 19, 9 S. E. 453; Brackett v. Gilliam, 125 N. C. 380, 34 S. E. 444); and the defendant has had benefit of those exceptions in his exceptions to the rulings of the judge. Nor was there error in the referee rejecting evidence as to rental value of adjoining farms, as that would have raised collateral issues. Warren v. Makely, 85 N. C. 12; Bruner v. Threadgill, 88 N. C. 361; Hinton v. Pritchard, 98 N. C. 355, 4 S. E. 462.

Affirmed.

ILLINOIS SUPREME COURT.

Albert DALLEMAND et al., Appts.,
v.

Isaac SAALFELDT, Admr., etc., of David Saalfeldt, Deceased.

(175 Ill. 310.)

1. That failure to comply with an ordinance requiring the openings into elevator shafts to be kept closed when not in use was negligence, and was the proximate cause of the death of a person who fell down the shaft, may be found from evidence showing that such person, who was attempting to ascend on the elevator, was required to stand near the edge to operate it, and that the opening was protected only by a bar across, while the lining of the elevator shaft made a horizontal edge above the opening, so that one standing near the opening might come in contact with such bar or edge and be dragged from the elevator and precipitated down the shaft.

2. The dangers attendant upon the running of an unsafe elevator are not assumed by one employed to wash bottles in the basement, and whose duty does not involve the use of the elevator.

3. Whether or not an employee acts properly in obeying an order of a foreman to take bottles to an upper floor by the use of an elevator is a question for the jury.

4. A youth nineteen years old, employed only five to seven weeks at work in which he occasionally uses an elevator, is not, as matter of law, charged with knowledge that it is unsafe, where no instruction upon the matter is given him, and there is nothing to show that the danger is apparent.

5. An employee who performs a particular service by order of the foreman, which is outside the scope of his employment, does not thereby assume risks incident thereto unless they are such that an ordinarily prudent man would not encounter them.

(October 24, 1898.)

NOTE.—Servant's right of action for injuries received in obeying a direct command.

I. Introductory.

II. Direct orders, an immaterial factor, where the risk to which they exposed the servant was one of those assumed.

III. Contributory negligence, when not predicated of compliance with a direct order.

IV. Master and servant not upon the same footing.

V. Servant usually entitled to act on the assumption that his master has performed and will perform his duty.

VI. Rationale of the servant's right to rely on the master.

a. Order an implied assurance of safety.

b. Order tends to throw servant off his guard.

c. Necessity for prompt obedience.

d. Direct order tends to negative voluntariness of action.

VII. When direct orders will not justify the servant's obedience.

VIII. Negligence in respect to the manner of carrying out the order.

IX. Specific order no excuse unless the servant's act was induced by it.

X. By whose orders the master is bound.

I. Introductory.

The fact that the servant at the time when he was injured was complying with a direct, specific, personal order of his master, or his master's representative, has, it is well settled, a material bearing upon the question whether he can hold the master responsible. Haley v. Case (1886) 142 Mass. 316, 7 N. E. 877, holding that an instruction requested by the defendant, which enunciated the doctrine as to the effect of the plaintiff's knowledge, was properly qualified by the addition of words drawing the attention of the jury to the aspect of the evidence, though, as the cases to be cited below indicate, the significance of this fact is very different according as the defense of an assumption of the risk or of contributory negligence is relied upon.

The modifications of ordinary principles which result from the introduction of the elements may be referred to three distinct conceptions:

1. That it is culpable to direct a servant to do something which for any reason exposes him to an extraordinary risk, of which the master has, and the servant has not, actual or constructive notice, unless the direction is accompanied by appropriate instruction and warning. The unfitness of the servant himself may make a risk extraordinary as to him which would not be so as to another servant. Kehler v. Schwenk (1892) 151 Pa. 505, 25 Atl. 130.

Thus, a railroad company is liable for injuries received by an inexperienced brakeman in making a dangerous coupling in the night-time, where the conductor refused to allow anyone else to make it, and up to the time of the accident kept persistently urging him to expedite the task, with full knowledge of the danger to which he was exposed. Shadd v. Georgia, C. & N. B. Co. (1895) 116 N. C. 968, 21 S. E. 564.

In Sullivan v. India Mfg. Co. (1873) 113 Mass. 396, where the defendant had a verdict, the court remarked, in discussing the correctness of the charge given by the trial judge, that where a boy fourteen years old is injured by moving cog-wheels, it is competent for him, although he obeys the order, to show that the employer was negligent in exposing him to peril which he was incapable of appreciating without proper instructions.

See also note to James v. Rapides Lumber Co., 44 L. R. A. 33,—The duty of a master to instruct and warn his servants as to the perils of the employment.

2. Another of these conceptions is that the order has an effect analogous to that ascribed in some cases to a promise by the master to remove a certain cause of danger, that is to say, as an implied stipulation on the master's part that he will take upon himself the responsibility for any injuries resulting from obedience to the order.

3. That the circumstance of the directions having immediately preceded and occasioned the act of the servant may properly be deemed to justify the inference that there was neither that free and deliberate exercise of the will, nor that perfect appreciation of the nature and extent of the peril which, as is shown elsewhere, are essential elements, both of an as-

APPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Appellate Court, First District, affirming a judgment of the Circuit Court for Cook County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for the alleged negligent killing of plaintiff's intestate. Affirmed.

Statement by Carter, Ch. J.:

David Saalfeldt, a youth nineteen years old, was employed by appellants in their bottling works in the city of Chicago, to wash bottles. While thus employed, together with two other servants of appellants, in the basement of appellants' establishment, Cavanaugh, the foreman there, received an order from Casey, the foreman on the third floor, to send him (Casey) some bottles. The foreman shouted an order to the three bottle washers to send some bottles to the third floor, without designating which of them should do it. Cavanaugh testified that Saalfeldt had no orders to send up bottles, but that there were standing orders that the two other men should send them, but Keating, the general manager, testified: "His duty was to wash bottles, clean them properly, and put them to drain. It was not his special duty to bring up and down bottles, but he did so at times. When he was asked to assist one of the foremen in taking a large load of bottles off, it was his duty to accompany the men. The bottles were carried in cases and barrels." Saalfeldt, however, put a case of bottles on the freight elevator, and went up, managing the elevator himself, and delivered the bottles to Casey on the third floor. He then returned to the elevator, to go up and get some bottles, as he said, from the fifth floor, sumption of risks, and of contributory negligence.

The first of these conceptions has been discussed elsewhere, the rules appropriate to the supposed situation being, in fact, precisely the same from the standpoint whether the servant encountered the danger as a consequence of general or of specific orders. See note to James v. Rapides Lumber Co. (La.) 44 L. R. A. 33, on the duty of the master to instruct and warn servants of perils. As to injuries outside scope of services, see note to Olson v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. post, 796.

The second rarely emerges in the language used by judges, and need only be noticed in passing.

See Indianapolis & C. R. Co. v. Love (1858) 10 Ind. 554, where the master is said to "assume the risk."

The phrase that "the master became subject to all the risk of an accident" is used in Kehler v. Schwenk (1892) 151 Pa. 505, 25 Atl. 130.

The third, which has an immediate reference to the mental condition of the servant, and to the quality of his overt act, will now be dealt with under convenient headings.

It is not necessary for the purposes of the general rule that the words of the superior servant which induced the injurious act should have been of a formally imperative character, but only that they should be reasonably susceptible of being construed as a specific order. A workman who said to the foreman when told to clear the track as a train was coming, "There are two stones on the track;" and was told, "It is time you were getting them off," is justified in considering this an order to take them off. Stephens v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. (1885) 86 Mo. 221 (1888) 96 Mo. 207, 9 S. W. 589.

II. Direct orders an immaterial factor where the risk to which they exposed the servant was one of those assumed.

As the only necessary elements in an assumption of a risk are that the servant understood it and voluntarily incurred it, it is obvious that where the defense is relied upon, the fact that the servant was acting in obedience to a direct command when he undertook the work which led to his being injured will not avail him, where it appears that he appreciated the perils involved, and the command was not such as to amount to what the law regards as coercion. The master, therefore, incurs no special responsibility by ordering the servant to perform one of his ordinary duties in the regular course of the work. Davis v. Detroit & M. R. Co. (1870) 20 Mich. 105, 4 Am. Rep. 364; Wilson v. Tremont & S. Mills (1893) 159 Mass. 154, 34 N. E. 90 (servant of full age injured while attempting to hold a bag which was being filled with cotton taken from a dryer over spikes driven in a beam so high that he could only reach it with his finger. The court said: "The mere fact that the defendant told him to take the cotton from the dryer did not make a concealed danger of that which was obvious before, or render involuntary his assumption of a risk which was incident to and part of his regular work, and which he knew to be such and understood").

Merely directing a servant to work, "quick" does not render a master liable for injuries received by him in operating a machine, the dangers from which were open and obvious. Ruchlins v. French (1897) 168 Mass. 68, 46 N. E. 417 (verdict for plaintiff rightly directed).

One ordered by his foreman to clean rolls in a mill, and who has equal knowledge with the foreman of the danger in attempting to clean them on the front side, assumes the risk of attempting to clean them from that side, whether he ought to have obeyed the order of the foreman or not. Kean v. Detroit Copper & Brass Rolling Mills (1887) 66 Mich. 277, 33 N. W. 395.

A trammer in a mine, who obeys directions to help fix a roof and take down some ground in a stope, and is injured by ore or rock falling from a roof which has just been tested in his presence, assumes the risk. Paule v. Florence Min. Co. (1891) 80 Wis. 350, 50 N. W. 189.

There is no doubt of the general rule that one who, knowing and appreciating the danger, enters upon a perilous work, even though he does so unwillingly and by order of his superior officer, must bear the risk; but where he is not aware of the danger, and such ignorance is consistent with due precaution, it is otherwise. Ferren v. Old Colony R. Co. (1887) 143 Mass. 197, 9 N. E. 608; s. p. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Mealer (1892) 6 U. S. App. 86, 50 Fed. Rep. 725, 1 C. C. A. 633; Fitzgerald v. Honkomp (1892) 44 Ill. App. 365.

In other words, he does not make himself an insurer of the servant's safety because the latter is requested to incur a danger, provided that danger is one manifestly incident to the employment. Welch v. Brainard (1895) 108 Mich. 38, 65 N. W. 667 (employer is not liable for an injury to a servant caused by the fall of ensilage 10 feet deep, resulting from the latter's undermining the same, although the form-for Casey. Casey testified that he was looking at the elevator at the time, and in about half a minute after Saalfeldt started up saw him falling below the elevator down the elevator shaft. Saalfeldt fell to the basement, and was killed. The elevator stopped automatically a few inches above the fifth floor. No one saw Saalfeldt when he fell into the shaft, or testified how the accident happened.

At the time of the injury the following ordinances were in force in Chicago, and were given in evidence:

"§ 1571. Hoistways in which an elevator shall be used shall be constructed entirely of brick, from its lowest point, extending up through and 6 feet above the roof. All openings in such hoistway shall be protected by iron doors, and no wood shall be used upon the inside of such hoistways.

"§ 1572. Doors in such shaft shall be made of metal, and the catches or fastenings upon such doors shall be so placed that they can be opened only from the inside of the shaft and entirely under the control of the elevator operator.

"§ 1573. All openings not having doors shall have metallic frames, with prismatic lights in iron frames."

"§ 1614. All doors in shafts of elevators shall have latches so contrived that a key shall be used to unlatch the doors from the outside, but may have a knob or handle to open the door from the inside."

"§ 1653. It shall be the duty of every person owning, controlling, and operating or using, as owner, lessee, or agent, any passenger or freight elevator in any building within the corporate limits, to employ some competent person to take charge of and oper-er directed the work to be done by undermining instead of by taking from the top).

A similar rule holds where the risk encountered falls under the description of extraordinary, provided only it was one which the servant must be taken to have fully understood. Linch v. Sagamore Mfg. Co. (1887) 143 Mass. 206, 9 N. E. 728 (servant injured by explosion of steam pipe caused by his letting steam into it while it was full of water, the danger of doing this being known to him. No recovery, though he was acting under orders and unwillingly). Hoth v. Peters (1882) 55 Wis. 405, 13 N. W. 219 (servant injured by fall of lumber from a car which was slippery from frost and ice cannot recover, though he assumed the place of danger by the direction of the foreman).

A carpenter sent to do some work in a brewery, and there directed to place a stringer in a certain room, from which he is driven out by the fumes of ammonia, who when ordered by the superintendent of the brewery to try again, saying that the work must be done, makes another attempt, in which he is seriously injured, assumes all the risk, and cannot recover. Beltzmillier v. Bergner & E. Brewing Co. (1888) 22 W. N. C. 33, 12 Atl. 509.

An employee of ordinary intelligence, who knows that trenches are liable to cave in, and that the one in which he is working has just partially caved in at a distance of a few feet, assumes the risk of returning to his work there in upon an order of the superintendent. Showalter v. Fairbanks, M. & Co. (1894) 88 Wis. 376, 60 N. W. 257.

Where the plaintiff has been using a handcar which for three months he has known to be defective, the obligations of the parties are not changed by the mere fact that when the time comes for suspending work at noon the foreman tells him and his fellow workmen to get on the car and go to dinner. The rule which relieves a servant from the consequences of continuing to work with knowledge of danger when he is ordered by the employer or his representative into a position of extra hazard has no application to such a case. Burlington & C. R. Co. v. Liehe (1892) 17 Colo. 280, 29 Pac. 175.

Speaking generally, therefore, the doctrine that a servant acting under the direct orders of the master or a superior co-servant does not assume the risk incident to the work is not applicable except where the service is a special one, and not even then where the danger is open to a person of ordinary prudence and intelligence. Stuart v. New Albany Mfg. Co. (1895) 15 Ind. App. 184, 48 N. E. 961.

48 L. R. A.

III. Contributory negligence, when not predicated of compliance with a direct order.

Some judges, following out the analogy of the doctrine stated in the last section, have held that the rule by which contributory negligence is inferred, as matter of law, from the undertaking or continuance of work which entails an abnormal risk of which the servant was aware, involves the corollary that the addition of the element of a direct order will not prevent the defense from taking effect if the servant understood the perils to which he would be exposed in obeying that order. Baker v. Western & A. R. Co. (1882) 68 Ga. 609 (dangerously defective tool used under orders of foreman); Bell v. Western & A. R. Co. (1883) 70 Ga. 566 (hand-car known to be defective); S. P. Nelling v. Industrial Mfg. Co. (1886) 78 Ga. 260. See, however, Central R. Co. v. De Bray (1883) 71 Ga. 406.

But by almost all courts, including those who apply the rule just referred to (see Pennsylvania, Illinois, and North Carolina cases cited infra), it is held that the fact of the servant's having been directly ordered to do the act which caused the injury introduces into the situation a differentiating circumstance, which will render his contributory negligence a question for the jury in nearly every conceivable state of the evidence. It does not follow that because the servant could justify a disobedience of the order he is guilty of negligence in obeying it. Stephens v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. (1888) 96 Mo. 207, 9 S. W. 589.

In other words, if the master, knowing of the existence of abnormal dangers, commands and urges the servant to do something which involves exposure to him, and an accident happens in consequence of the servant's obedience, his previous knowledge of those dangers will not, of itself, prevent his recovering damages. Moline Plow Co. v. Anderson (1885) 19 Ill. App. 417.

Hence we find it laid down in a leading case that where, in obedience to an order, the servant performs a duty which, though dangerous, is not so dangerous as to threaten immediate injury, or where it is reasonably probable that the work may be safely done by using extraordinary caution or skill, he may recover if injured. Patterson v. Pittsburg & C. R. Co. (1874) 76 Pa. 389, 18 Am. Rep. 412, where the injury was caused by a defective switch. The court said: "Let it be considered that the switch in question was dangerous, yet doubtless many trains had passed over it safely, and hence a man of common prudence might well ate the same, and any such person who shall neglect to comply with the provisions of this section shall be fined the sum of $10 for each and every day of such neglect."

The doors to the elevator shaft were of wood, and could be opened either from the elevator side or the room side. "In the basement and fourth and fifth floors were folding doors, working on hinges, and, including both doors, about 6 feet wide. The first, second, and third stories had sliding doors the full width of the respective openings, and were operated by lifting or sliding up the door toward the ceiling, where it remained until pulled down. There was a bar across each door, from $2\frac{1}{2}$ to 3 feet from the floor, which was attached by hinges at one end, and could be raised or lowered from either side or outside the elevator. No particular person had charge of the elevator or its operation at the time of the accident, nor was any person employed by appellants for that special purpose." The doors were kept open in the daytime. Eisendrath, an architect, testified that the elevator carriage was in the regular form of a freight elevator,— "simply a large platform with the usual side-bars and cross-bars to hang the carriage on." Saalfeldt had run the elevator up and down a number of times—one witness testified to a dozen times, and another testified that he manifested ability to handle it,— but it did not appear from the evidence whether or not the proper and safer mode of using it had been explained to him, or whether he fully understood how to use or control it. The evidence tended to show that the deceased was an intelligent boy, sober, industrious, and careful. Appellee recovered a judgment for \$1,750. The appelconclude that, though it was more than ordinarily dangerous, yet many more trains might in like manner be passed over it safely. Under such a state of facts the conductor might properly rest upon the judgment of his superiors who requested him to continue its use, hoping that by extra care and skill he might avert accidents until the switch was reconstructed or properly repaired. On the other hand, if the defect was so great that obviously with the use of the utmost skill and care the danger was imminent, so much so that none but a reckless man would incur it, the employer would not be liable."

It would be a very unjust rule which would allow a master to shield himself from responsibility for the consequence of his own negligence by alleging those acts, not inevitably or immediately dangerous, to have been negligent, which his servant performed by his express order. Hawley v. Northern C. R. Co. (1880) 82 N. Y. 370, citing the Pennsylvania case which has also been approved in Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Bayfield (1877) 87 Mich. 205, and Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Rudd (1892) 88 Va. 648, 14 S. E. 361 (following the Pennsylvania case, where a brakeman who was engaged in uncoupling a car without a stick, in contravention of rules, but by order of the conductor, was thrown off the flat car where he was standing and run over).

To the same effect, see Stuart v. Evans (1883) 49 L. T. N. S. 138, 31 Week Rep. 706, per Williams, J.; Illinois Steel Co. v. Schymanowski (1896) 162 Ill. 447, 44 N. E. 876; Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Ampey (1896) 98 Va. 108, 25 S. E. 226 (servant knew that appliances for coupling were defective, but believed that the coupling ordered could be safely made by hand); Louisville, E. & St. L. Consol. R. Co. v. Uts (1892) 133 Ind. 265, 32 N. E. 881 (fact that brakeman walked along the top of a train moving at a high rate of speed not necessarily a bar to his action, where he was acting under orders); Indiana Car Co. v. Parker (1884) 100 Ind. 181 (workman not necessarily negligent in changing from one part of his work to another); Hawkins v. Johnson (1886) 105 Ind. 20, 55 Am. Rep. 169, 4 N. E. 172 (rule that servant must at his peril choose the safer of two methods of doing his work, not applicable where a servant drove a wagon by express orders along a particular way, and was caught by a shaft which he was stepping over, having found that it was too low to admit of his passing underneath it while seated in the wagon); Cullen v. Norton (1889) 52 Hun, 9, 4 N. Y. Supp. 774 (servant ordered to work underneath an unexploded blast); Central R. Co. v. De Bray (1883) 71 Ga. 406 (brakeman not necessarily negligent in getting off a moving train by the orders of the conductor); and decisions referred to infra.

In Patton v. Western N. C. R. Co. (1887) 98 N. C. 456, 1 S. E. 863, a section master ordered plaintiff to jump off a rapidly moving train (rate of speed not shown by evidence). The court declined to apply the general rule that such an act is negligent, saying: "It seems that this command was given and promptly obeyed without hesitation. It was rash, negligent, unreasonable, and unwarranted, but the danger to be encountered in obeying it was not so manifest and so great as, under the circumstances, to render a prompt obedience to it contributory negligence on the part of the appellant. An ordinary laborer on railroads—one of ordinary experience—might make a leap without injury; he might not unreasonably believe that he could, taking proper care, and especially so when commanded to do so by a railroad employee of long experience who had the right to command him in the course of his duty. While to jump from a rapidly moving train of cars is very hazardous, and ordinarily to do so is negligence, it is not contributory negligence where the plaintiff—a laborer on the railroad—is suddenly commanded by his employer or its agent to do so, in the course of his employment, and the command at once obeyed from a sense of duty and without waiting to think of and consider the hazard. Such a case is exceptional. The agent of the employer suddenly commands the laborer to do an extra hazardous act in the course of his duty—one that may, though not probably, be safely done by observing due care; one that must be done at once if done at all. The laborer obeys the command promptly, nerved only by a faithful sense of duty, and as a consequence suffers serious bodily injury. In that case the injured party does not, in legal contemplation, contribute to his own injury. The facts and circumstances were such as that he might, when suddenly called on, not unreasonably believe that the command was a proper one, and that he ought to obey. Although the act was hazardous, it was not essentially dangerous."

In Frandsen v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. (1873) 36 Iowa, 372, it was held that the following instruction was properly refused:—"7. If the jury find that the plaintiff was instructed by the section foreman to assist in removing the hand car, at a time when a person exercising ordinary care and prudence would reason-late court has affirmed the judgment, and appellants have further appealed to this court.

Messrs. Marcus Kavanagh and C. Le Roy Brown for appellants.

Messrs. Moses, Rosenthal, & Kennedy for appellees.

Carter, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The only error insisted upon by appellants is that the trial court erred in refusing to give to the jury the instruction asked by them, at the close of the evidence, to find the defendants not guilty. We are therefore called upon to decide whether or not the evidence, taken as true, and in its most favorable bearing in support of plaintiff's cause of action, with all proper inferences which might be justifiably drawn from it, was so insufficient to support the judgment that it should, for that reason, be set aside. Whether or not the verdict should have been set aside as being against the weight of the evidence is, of course, a question of fact which has been finally settled. We have to do only with the question of law.

It is not contended that appellants were not in default in failing to comply with the ordinances of the city respecting elevators, but the first contention is that such default was not the proximate cause of the injury,—that no causal connection is shown between such default and the accident to the deceased. It is plain from the evidence that, had the ordinance been complied with, and the doors to the openings been kept closed, the accident could not have happened. There was no opening between the platform ably apprehend danger to his life or limb, he is not required to obey such instruction; and if the jury further find that he does follow such instruction and is injured, and that by disobeying the same the injury could, by the exercise of ordinary care and judgment, have been avoided, then the defendant is not liable." The court said: "Under the evidence it was not error to refuse this instruction. We would not say that it might not properly be given in some possible case. But the bare fact that a position to which an employee is ordered for the discharge of his duty is a dangerous one will not justify his disobedience, since he was employed for that duty, and its discharge may be necessary to save the lives of others; and a failure to do his duty, or disobedience under such circumstances, might be negligence on his part, rendering the employer liable to others injured thereby. To assume a position of danger is not necessarily negligence, but it is often a clear duty; and an employee in such case, even if injured, would have no right of action, since he was employed for such position of danger and paid for assuming it. If, however, the prior negligence of others unnecessarily created the danger, or, by reason of the negligence of others, the injury was caused to him, then he may have his action."

The rule that an employer who furnishes a proper machine is not liable to a servant injured while using it for an improper purpose does not apply in the case of an injury to an inexperienced employee who was using the machine in obedience to the direction of a superior whom it was his duty to obey. Newbury v. Getchel & M. Lumber & Mfg. Co. (1896) 100 Iowa, 441, 69 N. W. 748.

A fortiori is the servant entitled to have the case submitted to the jury where he does not know of the danger, but merely sees the physical conditions which create the danger. Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Ward (1894) 90 Va. 687, 24 L. R. A. 717, 19 S. E. 849 (servant entered an unduly narrow ditch under peremptory orders to dig it deeper, and it caved in upon him).

In other cases the same principle is expressed by a restrictive form of statement, the servant being held entitled to obey a specific command of his superior without necessarily incurring the consequences of contributory negligence, unless the execution of that command involves a hazard which no ordinarily prudent person would have subjected himself to (Newbury v. Getchel & M. Lumber & Mfg. Co. (1896) 100 Iowa, 441, 69 N. W. 748); or unless a reasonably prudent person in his situation and with his knowledge of the danger would not have obeyed the command (Stephens v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. (1888) 96 Mo. 207, 9 S. W. 589); or unless the danger is so "apparent" (Nall v. Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. (1891) 129 Ind. 268, 28 N. E. 188, 611; Thompson v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (1888) 14 Fed. Rep. 564, 4 McCrary, 620; Chicago Anderson Pressed Brick Co. v. Sobkowiak (1890) 38 Ill. App. 531, Affirmed in (1894) 148 Ill. 578, 36 N. E. 572 [laborer injured by fall of overhanging bank]; Steinhauser v. Spraul (1898) 114 Mo. 551, 21 S. W. 515, 859, or "obvious" (Texas & P. R. Co. v. Lewis (1894; Tex. Civ. App.) 26 S. W. 873 [section-hand not negligent because he obeys orders to take hand-car off track when a train is close at hand]. Compare Schroeder v. Chicago & A. R. Co. (1891) 108 Mo. 822, 18 L. R. A. 827, 18 S. W. 1094, or "clear" (Higgins v. Missouri P. R. Co. (1891) 48 Mo. App. 555), or "glaring" (Jenney Electric Light & P. Co. v. Murphy (1888) 115 Ind. 566, 570, 18 N. E. 80; Lebanon v. McCoy (1895) 12 Ind. App. 500, 40 N. E. 700 [laborer obeyed order to remove timber lying near a negligently erected bridge]; Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Ward (1894) 90 Va. 687, 24 L. R. A. 717, 19 S. E. 849 [day laborer injured by the caving in of the sides of a narrow excavation which the foreman ordered him to dig to a greater depth than was prudent]; East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. v. Dufeld (1883) 12 Lea, 69, 47 Am. Rep. 319; Huhn v. Missouri P. R. Co. (1887) 92 Mo. 440, 4 S. W. 987; Shortell v. St. Joseph (1891) 104 Mo. 114, 16 S. W. 397 [case for jury where the laborer was injured by the fall of an arch while he was taking down the supports]; Stephens v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. (1888) 96 Mo. 207, 9 S. W. 589 [case for jury where section man tried to get two stones off the track when a train was approaching]; Ballard v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. (1892) 51 Mo. App. 453 [servant jumped from moving train]; Fogus v. Chicago & A. R. Co. (1892) 50 Mo. App. 250 [plaintiff injured by the fall of a large wheel which he was helping to move down an incline against his better judgment]; Halliburton v. Wabash R. Co. (1894) 58 Mo. App. 27 [plaintiff injured in following foreman's orders as to way of placing drive-wheels under a locomotive, or "imminent" (Illinois Steel Co. v. Schymanowski (1896) 162 Ill. 447, 44 N. E. 876), or "manifest" (Larson v. Center Creek Min. Co. (1897) 71 Mo. App. 512; Last Chance Min. & Mill. Co. v. Ames (1896) 23 Colo. 187, 47 Pac. 382),—that a person of that average prudence and intelligence whose of the elevator and the walls of the elevator shaft through which Saalfeldt could have fallen, and it is clear from the evidence that he must have fallen into the shaft from the open space at the doors after the elevator passed up; and, taking the evidence as true, this could have happened only at the fourth floor, and as Casey, who had charge of the work on the third floor, testified that it was only about half a minute after the elevator started up from the third floor that he saw the deceased falling down the shaft beneath the elevator, we cannot say, as a matter of law, that it was an unjustifiable inference for the jury to draw that Saalfeldt was in some manner caused to fall from the elevator into the open space at the open doors of the fourth floor, and from thence into the shaft beneath. As we understand the evidence, the platform of the elevator was supported by a framework of bars, but was not inclosed, and its entire front was open, and of the same width as the doors,—6 feet. There was a wooden bar across the open doors at the fourth floor, $3\frac{1}{2}$ feet from the floor. These were double doors 8 feet and 3 inches high, and swung on hinges opening into the room. At the top, when closed, they fitted against or into the lower edge of the wooden partition or lining of the elevator shaft that extended up to the next opening. The operating cable was 1 foot from the opening. We are of the opinion that it would not have been, in the eye of the law, an unreasonable conclusion for the jury to reach, from the evidence, that the combination of these open doors, with the bar across them and the horizontal edge of the partition projecting downward from above, were unsafe to one on the ascending hypothetical conduct is the test of the existence or absence of negligence would have declined, under the given circumstance, to undertake the duty which necessitated the incurring of the danger in question.

In other words, if a danger is not absolute or imminent so that injury must almost necessarily result from obedience to an order, and the servant obeys the order and is injured, the master will not afterwards be allowed to defend himself on the ground that the servant ought not to have obeyed the order. Chicago Anderson Pressed Brick Co. v. Sobkowiak (1889) 34 Ill. App. 812.

This rule, closely viewed, amounts to nothing more than a statement that, in determining what is ordinary care on the part of a given individual, all the circumstances of his position should be regarded, including, in cases like the present, the servant's orders, the demands of his duty, the apparent risk to be met, and the purpose of his action, no less than his physical surroundings. Having weighed all these considerations, unless the case then discloses that the risk was such as would not be taken by a man of common prudence, so situated, the court cannot justly declare the assumption of that risk by a servant, in obedience to orders, as negligence. Schroeder v. Chicago & A. R. Co. (1891) 108 Mo. 322, 18 L. R. A. 827, 18 S. W. 1094 (where a section-man tried to get a hand-car off the track when a train was approaching).

The practical result of such a doctrine, when stated in terms of the servant's knowledge, is that the servant may maintain an action, unless he not only knows what is the risk to be encountered, but also that it will probably be attended with injury which he cannot avoid by the exercise of care and caution. This form of expression is found in Halliburton v. Wabash R. Co. (1894) 58 Mo. App. 27.

The rule is especially applicable where the servant is an immature boy, who objected to do the work, but ultimately did it with reluctance. Kehler v. Schwenk (1892) 151 Pa. 505, 25 Atl. 130.

IV. Master and servant not upon the same footing.

A fundamental principle which is frequently insisted upon in cases of the type reviewed in the last section, as well as in those in which a specific order is not an element, has been thus stated in a leading decision: "The servant does not stand on the same footing with the master. His primary duty is obedience, and if, when in the discharge of that duty, he is damaged through the neglect of the master, it is but meet that he should be recompensed." Patterson v. Pittsburgh & C. R. Co. (1874) 76 Pa. 389, 18 Am. Rep. 412.

This essential inequality of the positions of the parties is deemed to warrant the deduction that "a prudent man has a right, within reasonable limits, to rely upon the ability and skill of the agent in whose charge the common master has placed him, and is not bound, at his peril, to set his own judgment above that of his superior." Indiana Car Co. v. Parker (1884) 100 Ind. 181; Rogers v. Overton (1882) 87 Ind. 410 (not negligence for a trackman to obey order of roadmaster to assist in bending rails without heating them—that being the proper method).

"The master and servant do not stand upon an equal footing, even when they have equal knowledge of the danger. The position of the servant is one of subordination and obedience to the master, and he has the right to rely upon the superior knowledge and skill of the master. The servant is not entirely free to act upon his own suspicions of danger." Shortell v. St. Joseph (1891) 104 Mo. 114, 16 S. W. 397.

Compare Illinois Steel Co. v. Schymanowski (1896) 182 Ill. 459, 44 N. E. 876; McKee v. Tourtellotte (1896) 167 Mass. 69, 48 L. R. A. 542, 44 N. E. 1071 (assurance of safety; see VI. a, infra); Larson v. Center Creek Min. Co. (1897) 71 Mo. App. 512; Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Ward (1894) 90 Va. 687, 24 L. R. A. 717, 19 S. E. 849; Stephens v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. (1885) 86 Mo. 221; Colorado Midland R. Co. v. O'Brien (1891) 16 Colo. 219, 27 Pac. 701 (laborer, not appreciating the risk, went on overloaded construction train); Turner v. Norfolk & W. R. Co. (1895) 40 W. Va. 675, 22 S. E. 83 (boy of sixteen years killed while riding on a hand-car through a cut in a curve, which his foreman had entered without sending a man ahead with a flag,—not negligent in obeying order to get on the car).

V. Servant usually entitled to act on the assumption that his master has performed and will perform his duty.

Where a servant obeys the orders of the person authorized to give them, he is not negligent because he assumes that his employer and his employer's agents are doing and have done their duty. Stuart v. Evans (1883) 49 L. T. N. S. 138, 31 Week. Rep. 706, per Williams, J. (in obeying the commands of the master the elevator, and necessarily standing near the opening to work the cable; and when this condition of things, connected with the elevator, was maintained by the appellants in violation of the city ordinances, their negligence was sufficiently established. It seems not at all unreasonable that the jury should have found, not only that the defendants below were guilty of negligence, but that such negligence was the proximate cause of the injury. Both were questions of fact, and it would have been error had the court given an instruction to the contrary.

The evidence shows that Saalfeldt was an intelligent, sober, and careful youth, and from this evidence and the circumstances before them, and as there was no eyewitness to the accident, and no countervailing evidence, the jury were authorized to find that he was, at the time of the injury, using due care for his own safety.

Illinois C. R. Co. v. Norwicki, 148 Ill. 29, 35 N. E. 358. And as the record is made up we must assume, if such an assumption were at all necessary, that the court below instructed the jury that the plaintiff could not recover unless they believed, from the evidence, that at the time of the accident he was observing due care, for the record shows that, after the court refused the instruction to find defendants not guilty, other instructions were asked and given on behalf of each party, but they are not in the record.

So far we have a case where there is such evidence tending to prove that the injury complained of was caused by the neglect and default of the appellants, and while appel-servant, if he has no information or knowledge to the contrary, has a right to presume that the master has done, and will do, his duty towards him, and can rely upon the judgment and discretion of the master in its performance); Southwestern Teleph. Co. v. Woughter (1892) 56 Ark. 206, 19 S. W. 575. See also Crowley v. Cutting (1896) 165 Mass. 436, 43 N. E. 197 (servant ordered to steady a stone which is being hoisted by a derrick has a right to rely on the presumption that it is properly fastened); McMillan Marble Co. v. Black (1890) 89 Tenn. 118, 14 S. W. 479 (boy set to work under a dangerous projecting rock entitled to assume that it has been tested); Cook v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. (1885) 34 Minn. 45, 24 N. W. 311 (floor of depot which had been injured by fire and was under repair gave way); McGovern v. Central Vermont R. Co. (1890) 123 N. Y. 280, 25 N. E. 373 (laborer in a grain elevator, who is sent for by the superintendent and ordered to enter one of the bins through a trap door at the bottom to detach from the sides any grain that may be sticking to the sides has a right to assume that the superintendent has previously ascertained that no grain has accumulated in such a position as to be dangerous to men working in the lower part of the bin); Eldridge v. Atlas S. S. Co. (1890) 58 Hun, 96, 11 N. Y. Supp. 468 (seaman entitled to assume that which can be safely operated—fact was specially emphasized that he was bound by his articles to obey orders); Lebanon v. McCoy (1895) 12 Ind. App. 500, 40 N. E. 700 (demurrer case); Deweese v. Meramec Iron Min. Co. (1893) 54 Mo. App. 476 (miner injured by fall of stone from a slope above a pit where he was sent to work, the evidence being that it was impossible by any reasonable care to prevent such occurrences altogether, but that the defendant's vice principal had failed to use proper precautions, in view of the fact that he knew that stones had been falling in uncommonly large numbers on the day of the accident); Steinhaus v. Spraul (1892) 114 Mo. 551, 21 S. W. 515, Affirmed on Rehearing in (1892) 114 Mo. 558, 21 S. W. 859 (domestic servant, ordered to ascend ladder, entitled to assume that it is not defective).

Or, to introduce a consideration which lacks this reason for the rule with the one just noticed, the servant has a right to assume that the master, or the master's representative, with their superior knowledge of the conditions, will not expose him to unnecessary perils. Illinois Steel Co. v. Schymanowski (1896) 162 Ill. 459, 44 N. E. 876. See also Powers v. Fall River (1897) 168 Mass. 60, 46 N. E. 408 (tripod, used instead of derrick for hoisting water pipes, fell 48 L. R. A.

into ditch which servant was digging. Servant's right to rely on superintendent's experience emphasized); Haliburton v. Wabash R. Co. (1894) 58 Mo. App. 27.

"Where an employer commands his employee, whom he assumes to direct, to use a defective implement in a particular way, leaving the latter no discretion as to the time or manner of its use, the employee may rely upon the superior knowledge and experience of the employer, unless the defect is so glaring and extreme as to make the danger of using the utensil apparent to anyone." Jenney Electric Light & P. Co. v. Murphy (1888) 115 Ind. 566, 18 N. E. 30.

In Hawley v. Northern C. R. Co. (1880) 82 N. Y. 370, the court argued thus: "We must take into account the plaintiff's position. His business was that of an engineer, and unless he obeyed orders and ran his engine he would have been obliged to abandon the defendant's service; of one thus situated the law should not be too exacting. We must assume that the officers of defendant, who had charge of the road, and must have known its condition, deemed it safe; and the plaintiff had the right to rely somewhat upon their judgment. Other employees of the road, and hundreds of passengers, were daily trusting their lives upon the road, and on the day of the accident he was ordered to, and did, precede a passenger train. Under such circumstances, was the plaintiff bound to set up his judgment against that of all others, and determine for himself that the road was absolutely unsafe for the passage of his engine, and abandon his position as engineer, or take upon himself the risk caused by defendant's negligence? We think under all the circumstances, and upon all the evidence, given on both sides, that it was a question for the jury to determine, whether the plaintiff acted with reasonable prudence and discretion in venturing to run his engine over the road."

Thus, obedience to an order is not contributory negligence in any case in which the servant has a right to assume that the master will warn him as to any danger which the service may involve. Lofrano v. New York & Mt. V. Water Co. (1890) 55 Hun, 452, 8 N. Y. Supp. 717; Newbury v. Getchel & M. Lumber & Mfg. Co. (1896) 100 Iowa, 441, 69 N. W. 743.

As to the circumstances under which an instruction is obligatory, see Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Brown (1893) 18 U. S. App. 10, 56 Fed. Rep. 804, 6 C. C. A. 142 (servant, ordered to cut in two one of the supporting posts of a shed, was ignorant that the shed would fall if the posts were cut).

So, although the general rule is that a servlee's intestate was observing due care for his own safety, that the jury could, without acting unreasonably in the eye of the law, so find; thus making these questions of fact, and not of law. A more serious question is presented by the objection urged that Saalfeldt, as the servant of appellants, assumed the risk as one incident to his employment. The general rule of law on this subject is too well settled and understood to require comment or citation of authority, but whether a given case comes within the rule is not always easy to determine. As a question of fact it has, by the judgment of affirmance of the appellate court, been finally determined in this case that the risk was not incident to the duties which, by his employment, Saalfeldt undertook to discharge, or else that the facts were such as to bring it within an exception to the general rule; and we are concerned only with the legal question whether or not there was any evidence on which such finding could reasonably be based. The witness Keating, who testified that he was the superintendent of appellants' whole business outside of the office, further testified that Saalfeldt was employed to wash bottles in the basement, that he had no other duties, and that he had nothing to carry upstairs or downstairs as a part of his duties. Cavanaugh also testified that that was no part of his duties. There was no one employed for the special purpose of running the elevator, but there was evidence that Saalfeldt had run it a number of times, and appeared to understand how to run it. The jury were warranted in finding, from the evidence, that it was no part of the duty of Saalfeldt to take cases of bottles up or down on the elevator, ant is guilty of negligence, as matter of law, where he unnecessarily puts himself in a dangerous position, his culpability, under such circumstances, will be for the jury, where he is entitled to assume that he was ordered to take that position, because his duty required it. Light v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (1894) 93 Iowa, 83, 81 N. W. 380 (railroad employee is not, as a matter of law, guilty of contributory negligence in attempting to mount a coal car in obedience to the orders of his superior, although he might have ridden safely to the place to which he was directed to go on the foot-board of the engine).

VI. Rationale of the servant's right to rely on the master.

The justifiability of the servant's reliance on the master may be referred to various conceptions, which, though distinct, are correlated.

a. Order an implied assurance of safety.

In the first place, the giving of a specific order by a master is said to amount to an implied assurance on his part that the work ordered may be done with reasonable safety. Illinois Steel Co. v. Schymanowski (1896) 162 Ill. 459, 44 N. E. 876; Hawkins v. Johnson (1886) 105 Ind. 29, 55 Am. Rep. 169, 4 N. E. 172; Keegan v. Kavanaugh (1876) 62 Mo. 232.

The question whether, as a matter of fact, a trainman knew, or had an opportunity of knowing, the methods employed by the company in running its train by telegraphic orders, becomes immaterial where the superintendent gave a peremptory order that his train should proceed regardless of the movements of another train traveling in the opposite direction. Sheehan v. New York C. & H. E. R. Co. (1883) 91 N. Y. 332.

But upon principles explained elsewhere, an employer who would prima facie be held liable for injuries caused by the breaking of a chain on the ground, when without making any inspection he urged his men forward with words which showed that in his opinion there was no danger, cannot be held liable if such an inspection, made with reasonable care, would not have declared the fact that there was a defect in the chain. Hoffman v. Dickinson (1888) 31 W. Va. 148, 6 S. E. 53.

An inexperienced foreigner, imperfectly acquainted with English, who, after a machine has acted in an unexpected manner, appeals for advice to the employer whose duty it is to instruct him, and receives an answer which he supposes to amount to an instruction to go on as before, is not negligent in following that direction. Bjbljan v. Woonsocket Rubber Co. (1895) 164 Mass. 214, 41 N. E. 265.

As to the cases in which an actual assurance of safety is coupled with the order, see note to McKee v. Tourtelotte (Mass.) ante, 542.

b. Order tends to throw servant off his guard.

Secondly, it is recognized that the order, having a natural tendency to throw the servant off his guard, may properly be considered to excuse him from the exercise of the same degree of care as would have been incumbent on him if the case had not involved this factor. Hawkins v. Johnson (1886) 105 Ind. 29, 55 Am. Rep. 169, 4 N. E. 172.

"When the master undertakes to direct specifically the performance of work in a particular manner, we cannot say, as matter of law, that the servant is not justified in relying to some extent upon the knowledge and carefulness of his employer, and in relaxing somewhat the vigilance which otherwise would be incumbent upon him. The servant's attention must be principally directed to the performance of the work in the manner in which he is ordered to perform it, and he may be in a less favorable position to see and judge of the surrounding dangers. Haley v. Case (1886) 142 Mass. 316, 7 N. E. 377.

c. Necessity for prompt obedience.

Thirdly, the courts take into account the fact that when a servant is suddenly called upon to execute a piece of work in a particular manner, under the eye of his employer, or his employer's representative, a careful observation of the conditions is generally quite impracticable if the direction is to be carried out with that promptitude which is expected from subordinates. Haley v. Case (1886) 142 Mass. 316, 7 N. E. 377; Strong v. Iowa C. R. Co. (1895) 94 Iowa, 380, 62 N. W. 799 (risk of using defective appliances not assumed, where the servant is acting in an emergency, under the order of a superior, where disobedience would imperil the lives of parties to whom the master owes a duty. Passenger train might have been wrecked by delay. Brakeman required to couple a car to an engine with pilot bar and properly supported); Mason v. Richmond & D. R. Co. (1892) 111 N. C. 482, 18 L. E. A. 845, 16 S. E. 698 (brakeman ordered to couple cars on a dark night not bound to exand that, therefore, the dangers attending that work were not incident to his employment, nor assumed by him by virtue of his contract of service with his employers.

But it is said that Saalfeldt volunteered to take the bottles up on the elevator without any order to do so by anyone having authority so to direct, and that in so doing he voluntarily assumed the risk also. We agree with the appellate court that it was a question of fact for the jury whether or not Saalfeldt acted voluntarily in taking the bottles up on the elevator, or in good faith upon the order of Cavanaugh. Cavanaugh had charge over the men in that department, and gave the order to take up the bottles. Saalfeldt had done such work before, and had not been forbidden to do it. Cavanaugh, the foreman, did not specify which of the three men should obey him, and clearly the jury may have found that the order was addressed to the three men, to be obeyed by any one of them. Whether Saalfeldt properly acted in obedience to such order or not was clearly a question of fact for the jury, and not of law for the court.

It is, however, further contended that, whether the risk was incident to his contract of employment, and therefore one assumed by him, or whether it was incident to the special service which he undertook to perform in obedience to orders, the judgment is erroneous, because, it is said, he had knowledge of the condition of the elevator and its unsafe surroundings, and, having undertaken to perform it with such knowledge, he could not hold his employers, the appellants, liable. He had been engaged in his work for appellants from five to seven weeks. The evidence does not show that they ever amine coupling); Dillingham v. Harden (1894) 6 Tex. Civ. App. 474, 26 S. W. 914 (servant not bound to examine a skid which he is directed by his foreman to use in lowering rocks into a pit).

A servant "does not stand upon the same footing as his master, as respects the matter of care in inspecting and investigating the risks to which he may be exposed. He has a right to presume that the master will do his duty in this respect, and, therefore, when directed by proper authority to perform certain services, or to perform them in a certain place, he will ordinarily be justified in obeying orders, without being chargeable with contributory negligence or with the assumption of the risks of so doing." Cook v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. (1885) 84 Minn. 45, 24 N. W. 311.

In Greenleaf v. Illinois C. R. Co. (1870) 29 Iowa, 14, 4 Am. Rep. 181, where a brakeman was killed owing to the want of a ladder on a car, the court argued thus: "Though decedent knew of the defective car, if he acted under instructions and directions of a superior the action would by no means thereby be defeated. Under such circumstances, compelled, as he necessarily would be, to act with promptness and dispatch, it would be most unreasonable to demand of him the thought, care, and scrutiny which might be exacted where there is more time for observation and deliberation. Thus, if a ladder is usually found upon such cars, in the haste necessarily attendant upon uncoupling cars and stopping the train he was not bound to deliberate and settle in his mind that a like means of ascending the car was on this one, though he knew by prior observation that it was wanting."

In Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. McCarty (1896) 49 Neb. 475, 68 N. W. 633, the court said: "Our conclusion, after a consideration of the subject, is that it is a harsh and unreasonable rule which charges a servant, when commanded to perform an act by his master, with the duty of at once determining whether or not the act can be safely performed, and then performing it at his peril, or refusing to perform it at the expense of losing his employment. The risk incurred by obeying a negligent command of the master is not one ordinarily incident to the servant's employment, and is not an assumed risk, because negligence on the part of the master is not presumed to be a feature of the employment. It is true that where ample time exists for examination and reflection a servant may not, beyond a certain limit, continue in the service, performing dangerous acts, 48 L. R. A.

except at his own risk; and it is this consideration which governs the cases holding that the continued use of defective appliances without protest and a promise by the master to remedy them discharges the master from liability. With the case, however, of a command given suddenly, which must be obeyed immediately or not at all, a different question is presented. The servant is confronted with a new danger, one not contemplated when he entered the employment, and one not made a part of it by continued use. The servant has certainly, in the first place, a right to presume that the master gave the command advisedly and in the exercise of due care. If the servant disobey, he forfeits his employment; and even though he be aware of the danger, whether or not it is negligence for him to obey depends upon circumstances. The act may be so foolhardy, so clearly entailing disaster, that the only reasonable course is to disobey. The test of negligence is in such cases, as in others, whether or not a man of ordinary prudence so situated would obey or refuse. In many cases a man of ordinary prudence, compelled to decide instantly, even though aware of the existence of danger, would prefer obedience, and would take the risk."

A carpenter employed by a railroad company who obeys a hasty order to pick up his tools, bedding, etc., and put them on a push car and to get on, does not assume the risks arising from the fact that the car, which then starts down a heavy grade, is not provided with proper appliances to control its velocity. Miller v. Union P. R. Co. (1882) 12 Fed. Rep. 600, 4 McCrary, 115.

A servant who obeys a hurried order of his foreman to take hold of a car and push it is not, as a matter of law, guilty of contributory negligence in failing to look ahead and observe an obstruction near the track. The want of time for deliberation, and the position he would naturally assume in doing the work, are a sufficient reason for not holding him strictly to the duty of using his senses to discover danger. Stackman v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. (1891) 80 Wis. 428, 50 N. W. 404.

A brakeman acting in an emergency which gives no time for reflection may be found by the jury not chargeable with contributory negligence in attempting to mount and stop a car going at dangerous speed, when ordered to do so by the conductor, although the ground at that place was uneven and he was unable to see well because his lantern had gone out. Fox v. Chicago, St. P. & K. C. R. Co. (1892) 86 Iowa, 368, 17 L. R. A. 289, 53 N. W. 259.

gave him any instructions regarding the use of the elevator, or any information respecting the dangers to be guarded against in using it; and in view of the facts and his inexperience and youth it cannot be said, as a matter of law, that there was no evidence upon which a finding could be based that he did not have knowledge of the danger, or that the danger was not apparent. Whether or not the danger was apparent, or he had knowledge of it, were questions of fact. Besides, the burden of showing such knowledge was on the defendants below. 14 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 844. Again, if the fact was—and in support of the judgment, there being evidence to the point, we will assume the jury so found—that Saalfeldt performed this particular service by order of his employers, given through the foreman, and that it was outside the scope of his employment, then the risk would be one which he did not, by virtue of such employment, necessarily assume. 2 Bailey, Master's Liability for Injuries to Servant, §§ 3476, 3502; 14 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 856, 857; Linderberg v. Crescent Min. Co. 9 Utah, 163, 33 Pac. 692; Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Adams, 105 Ind. 151, 5 N. E. 187, and in such case, although he had knowledge of the dangers attending the use of the elevator in its unsafe environment, he was not bound to disobey on pain of assuming the risk, but might perform the service, and hold his employers liable, unless the danger was such that an ordinarily prudent man would not encounter it. Ibid.; Illinois Steel Co. v. Schymanowski, 162 Ill. 447, 44 N. E. 876.

However weak the plaintiff's case may have been upon the evidence, we are unable to find, as matter of law, that any fact necessary to a recovery has been found without evidence to support the finding.

The judgment must be affirmed.

A brakeman on a freight train is not guilty of negligence in attempting to make a coupling between two cars of unequal height with a misshapen link which he had been directed by the conductor to take from the ground and use, when, owing to darkness and storm, he did not discover the defect in the link in time to avoid an accident. Denver, T. & G. R. Co. v. Simpson (1891) 16 Colo. 55, 26 Pac. 339.

Where one gang of men engaged in raising a track by putting stone under it on the sudden approach of a train is ordered to take off some stone remaining on the track, and immediately attempts to do so, without opportunity to observe and calculate the distance to the train or its speed, he is not necessarily guilty of contributory negligence such as will defeat his recovery. Stephens v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. (1888) 96 Mo. 207, 9 S. W. 589. See also Kain v. Smith (1882) 89 N. Y. 375.

The converse principle is observable in the ruling that it was negligence per se to take unnecessarily a dangerous position without the excuse of an urgent command leaving no time for investigation. Nolan v. Shickle (1879) 60 Mo. 336; Last Chance Min. & Mill. Co. v. Ames (1896) 23 Colo. 167, 47 Pac. 382. See also Wanner v. Kindel (1893) 4 Colo. App. 168, 84 Pac. 1014 (employer not liable for an injury to an employee using a circular saw, merely by reason of an order that he shall not waste so much time in cleaning the logs before sawing them, when he does not in any wise so command him to proceed as to preclude him from the exercise of due care in putting the logs in proper condition to be cut up).

A shout by the gang foreman of "All aboard" is not an order of that peremptory character that justifies one of his subordinates in taking such a manifest risk as that of mounting a moving train. Novock v. Michigan C. R. Co. (1886) 63 Mich. 121, 29 N. W. 525.

This consideration has been held to excuse a servant's temporary forgetfulness of a danger the existence of which he had previously ascertained.

In Lee v. Woolsey (1885) 109 Pa. 124, where the master was personally directing the work, and giving emphatic orders to move quickly, the court said: "If an employee is, in haste, called upon to execute an order requiring prompt attention, he is not to be presumed necessarily to recollect a defect in machinery, or a particular danger connected with his employment, so as to avoid it. A prompt and faithful employee, suddenly called upon by a superior to do a particular act, cannot be supposed to remember at the moment a particular danger incident to its performance, of which he had previous knowledge; and it would be most unreasonable to demand of him the thought and care which might be exacted when there is more time for observation and deliberation" (servant failed to observe that planks had been removed over a space through which he was engaged with tackle and horse in hoisting timbers). See also Greenleaf v. Illinois C. R. Co. (1870) 29 Iowa, 14, 4 Am. Rep. 151 (brakeman not necessarily negligent in failing to remember that a car which he was about to uncouple had not the usual end ladder).
§ 8 L. R. A.

It is worth remarking, however, that, upon general principles, excusable forgetfulness of a known danger would not avail the servant, even if he acted under orders, supposing the defense of assumption of risks to have been relied upon by him (see II. supra), and also to have been offered in combination with the circumstances of a protest by the servant. The addition of the latter element, of course, furnishes an additional reason why the court should not declare him to be, as matter of law, culpably negligent. See East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. v. Duffield (1883) 12 Lea, 63, 47 Am. Rep. 319 (laborer, after protest, used defective hammer, where there was need of quick action to get the track ready for an expected train); Chicago Anderson Pressed Brick Co. v. Sobkowiak (1890) 38 Ill. App. 531 (servant ordered to proceed after he had objected to work on account of its danger).

But here, again, the servant would not be allowed to recover on this ground where the defense raised is an assumption of the risks. See supra, II.

d. Direct order tends to negative voluntariness of action.

The fact that the master urged or coerced the servant into danger is not infrequently mentioned as an exception cutting down the effect of the general rule that, if the servant continues in an employment with knowledge of abnormally dangerous conditions, he cannot recover for an injury caused by their existence. Patterson v. Pittsburg & C. R. Co. (1874) 76 Pa. 389, 18 Am. Rep. 412; Pennsylvania Co. v. Lynch (1878) 90 Ill. 333; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Clark (1882) 11 Ill. App. 104.

When a servant does not assert his judgment in opposition to the supposed better judgment or stronger will of his master, the law usually allows a jury to determine whether he voluntarily assumed the risks, or acted in reliance upon the judgment of his master, or out of a constrained acquiescence in the rule of obedience which his relation as servant imposes. Cullen v. Norton (1889) 52 Hun, 9, 4 N. Y. Supp. 774 (set to work underneath an unexploded blast which went off).

The cases illustrating this exception from a positive standpoint are not numerous. Where the servant is of mature years, the compulsion which it contemplates will only be inferred in circumstances of a very unusual description. Wells & F. Co. v. Gortorski (1893) 50 Ill. App. 445 (laborer understanding only a foreign language, pushed into a position of danger by the foreman, and coerced to remain there by fear of the latter, superinduced by his language, actions, and position, which was greater than his fear of the danger of the place, and overcame his own judgment, may recover for injuries sustained).

The case of a young child is different. He cannot be expected to have the will power of a grown man in resisting his master's orders; and where the evidence tends to show coercive influence the opinion of the jury should be taken upon the question whether his compliance with the order was negligent.

In Kehler v. Schwenk (1892) 151 Pa. 505, 25 Atl. 130, where a boy of fourteen was injured, the court referred to Patterson v. Pittsburg & C. R. Co. (1874) 76 Pa. 389, 18 Am. Rep. 412, supra, and said: "The principle of this decision would exonerate the plaintiff in the present case from a charge of contributory negligence in engaging in a palpably dangerous service, even if he were a full-grown adult, because there was other testimony to the effect that the appliance might be used with safety although apparently dangerous; but when his youth and physical weakness are considered, and the fact that he was ordered to do this work, and that he objected to doing it, and went reluctantly to the service, it cannot be doubted that he is entirely free from any charge of contributory negligence, and also that the master became subject to all the risk of an accident. He was but little more than a child, either in years or in strength, and could not be expected to have the will power of a full-grown man in resisting his master's orders. He cannot be held, therefore, as one who voluntarily engages in a dangerous service, especially by a master who specifically directed him to do the hazardous work. On the contrary, the very fact of the plaintiff's youth and weakness is one of the elements that go to make up the charge of negligence on the part of the defendant in putting such a person upon such a service. It seems to us the master, in such circumstances, and not the servant, must be held to have assumed the risks of the service."

In Tagg v. McGeorge (1893) 155 Pa. 368, 26 Atl. 671, it was held that, where a foreman ordered a boy thirteen years old to hurry in his work of cleaning a dangerous machine in order that he might clean another machine which was ordinarily attended by another boy who was absent, and the boy was injured in the work, it is not improper for the court to charge that, if the boy was not aware of the danger, and his will was subjected to that of the foreman, and he obeyed him because he thought the foreman knew better, or because he was afraid to disobey, the jury might find for the plaintiff.

In some cases the fear of the servant that he may lose his situation if he disobeys the order is referred to as one of the factors in the case. Brennan v. Front Street Cable R. Co. 48 L. R. A.

(1894) 8 Wash. 363, 36 Pac. 272; Fogus v. Chicago & A. R. Co. (1892) 50 Mo. App. 250.

The authorities are divided upon the general question whether legal compulsion can be inferred from this circumstance (see note to O'Maley v. South Boston Gaslight Co. (Mass.) 47 L. R. A. 181, Volenti non fit injuria as a defense to actions by injured servants), and it seems doubtful whether its complexion can be altered by the fact that it is an element in a case in which a direct order was given.

VII. When direct orders will not justify the servant's obedience.

The general limits of the doctrine discussed in the preceding sections may be readily defined by giving an appropriate turn to the language employed in stating it. Thus, it is held that, although the servant may have been directly commanded or urged to undertake the work from which the injury resulted, he cannot claim an indemnity where the danger to be encountered was at once so obvious and so serious that no prudent man would have incurred it.

In Patterson v. Pittsburg & C. R. Co. (1874) 76 Pa. 389, 18 Am. Rep. 412, the court remarked: "We are not to forget that the servant is required to exercise ordinary prudence. If the instrumentality by which he is required to perform his service is so obviously and immediately dangerous that a man of common prudence would refuse to use it, the master cannot be held liable for the resulting damage. In such case the law adjudges the servant guilty of concurrent negligence, and will refuse him that aid to which he otherwise would be entitled."

Compare Moline Plow Co. v. Anderson (1885) 19 Ill. App. 417; Shortel v. St. Joseph (1891) 104 Mo. 114, 16 S. W. 397; Southwestern Telegraph Co. v. Woughter (1892) 56 Ark. 206, 19 S. W. 575; McDermott v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. (1895) 87 Mo. 285 (disapproving of an unqualified instruction to the effect that an act done in obedience to orders is not negligent).

The order, that is to say, must, if it is to serve as a justification, be in a matter with regard to which the servant has a right to rely on the superior judgment of the master. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. v. Duffield (1883) 12 Lea, 69, 47 Am. Rep. 319.

The courts decline to lay down a rule of law purporting to define accurately how dangerous a proposed action would have to be before a servant receiving an order from his master to perform it would be required to disobey under pain of being chargeable with negligence. Chicago Anderson Pressed Brick Co. v. Sobkowiak (1890) 36 Ill. App. 531.

But when the servant's culpability is clear, they will not hesitate, as in other cases where the defense of contributory negligence is raised, to declare, as matter of law, that there can be no recovery where an employee undertakes to get upon an engine while it is running at the rate of from 6 to 12 miles an hour, as this is such a rash and dangerous attempt as to require a nonsuit, although he was acting under orders. Roul v. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. (1890) 85 Ga. 197, 11 S. E. 558.

To go to work in a dark cellar in which the servant knows there is a deep well hole, without ascertaining whether it is guarded or not, is culpable negligence which will prevent him from recovering for injuries caused by the want of a guard, even though he was ordered to "hurry up the work." Taylor v. Carew Mfg. Co. (1885) 140 Mass. 150, 3 N. E. 21.

A conductor who is injured by a collision will be denied recovery where he consented to the starting of his train in violation of the rules of the road, without a word of formal protest, although he had, at the time, every reason to expect that he would meet another train traveling in the opposite direction on the same track. On the one hand, if it was ordinarily his duty to obey the orders of the despatcher, even though they were in violation of the company's rules, the order to start the train under such circumstances was so obviously wrong, and was likely to involve such frightful consequences, that it was manifestly negligent to act upon it without inquiring the reasons for it. Westcott v. New York & N. E. R. Co. (1891) 153 Mass. 460, 27 N. E. 10.

A section hand well acquainted with his duties is guilty of contributory negligence in attempting, in response to an order of the foreman, while seated on the rear of a hand-car rapidly descending a grade, to take hold of the rapidly moving brake handles, in the absence of a sudden emergency. Jones v. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. (1895) 11 Tex. Civ. App. 39, 31 S. W. 706.

An order by the skip tender of a mine, whose duty it is under a rule of the mine to prevent more than six men from riding in the skip at once, to an employee to get on the skip after ten other persons are on, does not relieve such employee from contributory negligence where no emergency called for sudden action on his part. Last Chance Min. & Mill. Co. v. Ames (1896) 23 Colo. 167, 47 Pac. 382.

A section-hand is not bound to obey an order of the section-boss to get on to and help propel an obviously overcrowded hand-car, and no recovery can be had for his being thrown off and killed in consequence of his obeying the order. Bradshaw v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (1893) 14 Ky. L. Rep. 688, 21 S. W. 346.

Under the statutory doctrine prevailing in Kentucky as to the effect of the gross negligence of a superior servant, a railway company is not relieved from liability for injuries to a brakeman incurred in uncoupling cars in obedience to an order, caused by the gross negligence of the conductor or other superior employee in the control and management of the train, by the fact that the danger of going between the cars to uncouple them was open and visible. Greer v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (1893) 94 Ky. 169, 21 S. W. 649.

VIII. Negligence in respect to the manner of carrying out the order.

The doctrine discussed above is a protection to the servant pro tanto, only in so far as it relieves from the charge of culpability in the actual undertaking of the work which he was ordered to do. It does not relieve him of the duty of avoiding any particular danger incident to carrying out the order. Cornwall v. Charlotte, C. & A. R. Co. (1887) 97 N. C. 11, 2 S. E. 659; Smith v. St. Paul & D. R. Co. (1892) 51 Minn. 86, 52 N. W. 1068 (a charge to the effect that orders would not justify a servant in going into known dangers was held not to be prejudicial error); East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. v. Bridges (1893) 92 Ga. 399, 17 S. E. 645.

Where the master orders a thing to be done by a servant, he will not be exonerated from liability for injuries to the servant arising from doing the act merely because the servant does not do it in the particular way directed by the master. The question in every such case is whether the servant pursued the less dangerous course. Citizens' Gaslight & Heating Co. v. O'Brien (1886) 118 Ill. 174, 8 N. E. 810.

48 L. R. A.

IX. Specific order no excuse unless the servant's act was induced by it.

An action based on the theory that the servant was obeying an order will, upon general principles, fail unless the necessary legal connection between it and the act of the servant is established. The fact that an order was given and acted upon by the plaintiff's co-servants is wholly immaterial as an element where he did not hear it himself, but simply followed their example in doing what he did. Novock v. Michigan C. R. Co. (1886) 63 Mich. 121, 29 N. W. 525.

A direction to a servant to "hurry up" her work is not a fact which can be supposed to distract her attention to affect her power of observation two hours afterwards. Herold v. Pfister (1896) 92 Wis. 417, 68 N. W. 356.

An angry summons from the master's representative, which the servant complies with so hurriedly that he inadvertently leaves the place of work in a dangerous condition, will not excuse him for shortly afterwards forgetting that condition, the consequence being that he suffers injury. Brennan v. Front Street Cable R. Co. (1894) 8 Wash. 363, 36 Pac. 272 (servant was late on the morning when the accident occurred, and was so hurried when he was called that he left open a manhole containing machinery, and stepped into it a short time afterwards, while performing his duties in great haste).

No such connection can be predicated where the injury occurs owing to the manner in which the servant executed a general order which left him free to choose his own methods of carrying it out, and might, so far as appears, have been safely performed by the selection of a different method.

When an employee has within his own control the manner of using an obviously defective tool, and the means of securing safety if he chooses to employ them, if he neglects the means of security to himself he elects to take the risk. In such a case, it cannot in reason be said that the employee has acted upon the confidence reposed in the employer, and that he is, therefore, entitled to remuneration. Jenney Electric Light & P. Co. v. Murphy (1888) 115 Ind. 568, 18 N. E. 80.

A jury would not be warranted in finding that an oath addressed to a sailor who knew what to do was sufficient to shift the responsibility for a misstep on the ground that it confused him and drove him forward into the danger, where the words accompanying the oath carried no specific or wrong direction as to the manner in which the plaintiff should act. Williams v. Churchill (1884) 137 Mass. 243, 50 Am. Rep. 304 (plaintiff became entangled in the loose end of a towrope while acting in obedience to the directions of the master, after he had just cried out with an oath "You won't get that rope fast").

The theory that the plaintiff's injury was caused by his obedience to an improper command is not sustainable where he was injured in jumping from a train while responding to a hasty summons to supper, but there was no command to jump from the train, and he determined for himself the particular manner in which the order should be carried out. Piqueno v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co. (1883) 52 Mich. 44, 17 N. W. 232.

A foreman's order to splice a short rope to the winch end of a longer rope to make it reach a pile lying on the ground, which was to be hauled into position by a pile-driver, will not render the master liable for injuries to the employee ordered, where he undertook to make the splice in a manner not required either by the order or the character of the work. Wiggins Ferry Co. v. Hellig (1892) 43 Ill. App. 238.

Hence, a servant who relies on the orders of his superior as an excuse for taking up a dangerous position must show, not merely that he was ordered generally to go to work, but that he was ordered to take up the particular position in which he was injured. Songstad v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. (1889) 5 Dak. 517, 41 S. W. 755.

In Illick v. Flint & P. M. R. Co. (1888) 67 Mich. 632, 35 N. W. 708, a verdict was held to have been rightly directed for the defendant where a brakeman, in complying with a signal to set brakes, undertook, of his own motion and without any special request, to reach the top of a car by climbing a side ladder, when the train was approaching a bridge, the timbers of which were only a little over 2 feet from the cars.

X. By whose orders the master is bound.

In nearly all the cases cited in the present chapter the servant giving the orders was one who, under the recognized exceptions to the doctrine of common employment, was actually a vice principal, either because he was a general representative of the master as respects the management of the whole business or the particular work to be done. Kean v. Detroit Copper & Brass Rolling Mills (1887) 66 Mich. 277, 33 N. W. 395 (superintendent); Illinois Steel Co. v. Schymanowski (1895) 59 Ill. App. 32 (superintendent); Hawkins v. Johnson (1886) 105 Ind. 55 Am. Rep. 169, 4 N. E. 172 (foreman of factory); Shortel v. St. Joseph (1891) 104 Mo. 114, 16 S. W. 397 (engineer in charge of construction); Colorado Midland R. Co. v. O'Brien (1891) 16 Colo. 219, 27 Pac. 701 (foreman in charge of construction); Novock v. Michigan C. R. Co. (1896) 63 Mich. 121, 29 N. W. 525 (superintendent of construction train); Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Ward (1894) 90 Va. 687, 24 L. R. A. 717, 19 S. E. 849 (foreman in charge of work of excavation).

Or was in charge of a department of the business. Indiana Car Co. v. Parker (1884) 100 Ind. 181; Rogers v. Overton (1882) 87 Ind. 410 (orders of road master to trackman).

Or simply because he was a superior servant in a state where such superiority constitutes vice principalship at common law. Jones v. St. Louis, N. & P. Packet Co. (1890) 43 Mo. App. 308 [second mate]. As in the following cases the order was given by a section master to a laborer: Patton v. Western N. C. R. Co. (1887) 96 N. C. 455, 1 S. E. 863; East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. v. Duffield (1883) 12 Lea, 63, 47 Am. Rep. 319; Bradshaw v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (1893) 14 Ky. L. Rep. 688, 21 S. W. 346; Stephens v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. (1885) 86 Mo. 221; Schroeder v. Chicago & A. R. Co. (1891) 108 Mo. 322, 18 L. R. A. 827, 18 S. W. 1094. In others the order was given by a conductor to a brakeman. Mason v. Richmond & D. R. Co. (1892) 111 N. C. 482, 18 L. R. A. 845, 16 S. E. 698; Shadd v. Georgia, C. & N. R. Co. (1895) 116 N. C. 968, 21 S. E. 554; Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Rudd (1892) 88 Va. 648, 14 S. E. 301; Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Ampey (1896) 93 Va. 108, 25 S. E. 226; Turner v. Norfolk & W. R. Co. (1895) 40 W. Va. 675, 22 S. E. 83; Greer v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (1898) 94 Ky. 160, 21 S. W. 649; or is given that effect by statute (in these cases the order was that of a section foreman to a laborer: Jones v. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. (1895) 11 Tex. Civ. App. 39, 31 S. W. 706; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Lewis (1894; Tex. Civ. App.) 26 S. W. 873). See also Bjbjlan v. Woonsocket Rubber Co. 48 L. R. A.

(1895) 164 Mass. 214, 41 N. E. 265 (fellow servant deputed to instruct a new employee as to the manner of doing work); Last Chance Min. & Mill. Co. v. Ames (1896) 23 Colo. 167, 47 Pac. 328 [order of ship-tender to minor]; or else the rights of the parties were controlled by a statute abolishing altogether the doctrine of common employment. Central R. Co. v. De Bray (1883) 71 Ga. 406; Fox v. Chicago, St. P. & K. C. R. Co. (1892) 86 Iowa, 368, 17 L. R. A. 289, 58 N. W. 259; Strong v. Iowa C. R. Co. (1895) 94 Iowa, 380, 62 N. W. 799; Frandsen v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. (1873) 36 Iowa, 372; Smith v. St. Paul & D. R. Co. (1892) 51 Minn. 86, 52 N. W. 1068.

These cases, therefore, do not enable us to say whether, for the purpose of principles discussed in the foregoing sections, the responsibility of the master for the order is determined by the analogy of the decisions, which have established the doctrine that, where the order required the servant to do something not within the scope of his original contract, the defense of coservice is not a bar to the action, the sole question being whether the servant giving the order had authority to give it. Nor has the particular point been raised in any case. In several instances, however, the bench and bar, by passing over this ground of defense under circumstances in which, judging from the views propounded in other decisions as to the doctrine of coservice, that doctrine would have prevented recovery if it had been deemed controlling, seem to have indirectly determined that this analogy holds.

In some of the following decisions the servant giving the order has been expressly decided by the same court not to be a vice principal. In others this view is a necessary deduction from the general tenor of the rulings of the court:

Order of the captain of a ship to a seaman. Williams v. Churchill (1884) 137 Mass. 243, 50 Am. Rep. 304.

Of the foreman of a gang of trackmen. Cook v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. (1885) 84 Minn. 45, 24 N. W. 311.

Of a conductor to a brakeman. Louisville, E. & St. L. Consol. R. Co. v. Uts (1892) 133 Ind. 265, 32 N. E. 881; Piquegno v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co. (1883) 52 Mich. 44, 50 Am. Rep. 248, 17 N. W. 232; Burlington & C. R. Co. v. Liche (1892) 17 Colo. 280, 29 Pac. 175; Denver, T. & G. R. Co. v. Simpson (1891) 16 Colo. 55, 26 Pac. 339.

A master cannot relieve himself of responsibility for an order which is apparently within the scope of the authority of the superior servant, by showing that no such authority was conferred by the rules framed for the regulation of the business.

The mere fact that the conductor of a train had, under the company's rules, no right to order a man off a moving train, is no defense to an action by a brakeman who is injured in obeying such an order. Central R. Co. v. De Bray (1883) 71 Ga. 406.

But he cannot be bound by the orders of a servant who, when he gave them, was plainly transcending his powers. Nashville & C. R. Co. v. McDaniel (1883) 12 Lea, 386 (agent whose duty it was to look after claims for cattle killed by trains has no right to order train hands to help to clear a tunnel of obstruction).

An order given by one superior servant to do an act in violation of rules will not excuse the servant for doing that act after he has passed under the control of another superior servant, who has never given him a similar direction. Mason v. Richmond & D. R. Co. (1894) 114 N. C. 718, 19 S. E. 362 (brakeman injured while coupling cars with his hands instead of a stick). Referring to its former judgment in the case (1892) 111 N. C. 482, 18 L. R. A. 845, 16 S. E. 608, the court said: "We still adhere to the doctrine that a brakeman is not culpable for exposing himself, in obedience to the orders of the conductor in charge of the train, to peril to which his voluntary exposure of himself would constitute contributory negligence. Our ruling was founded both upon the principle that the conductor, as middleman, had on behalf of the company waived its express regulation, and upon the idea that the known relation between a conductor and a brakeman, running on the same train as his subordinate, was such as to subject him to a well-grounded fear of dismissal should he hesitate to obey such an order, and thereby relieve him of legal culpability for conduct which, but for the fact of his acting under the fear of the consequences of disobedience, would constitute negligence. But we did not intimate that a brakeman would be warranted in assuming that another conductor, under whom he had served for several months without receiving any order modifying the written rule, would discharge him for failure to couple with his hands when a stick would not answer the purpose. And we do not think that the command of Guthrie to "hurry up," coupled with the testimony of the plaintiff that he thought Guthrie had seen him couple with his hands before that time, is tantamount to an express command, such as was given by Conductor Dick, who had previously been his superior."

C. B. L.

OREGON SUPREME COURT.

Ellen HENDERSON, Respt.,

v.

M. W. HENDERSON, Appt.

(.....Or.....)

1. A contract by which a husband agrees to pay certain moneys to his wife in discharge of his obligation to support her is not against public policy, when made, not for the purpose of a voluntary separation, but after a separation has actually occurred on account of the misconduct of one of the parties which justified it.
2. A decree based on a post-nuptial agreement by which a wife is given a certain sum per month for her maintenance constitutes a contract which cannot be modified by the court on account of a change in the husband's financial condition, so as to reduce the amount payable, without the wife's consent.

(March 26, 1900.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Multnomah County refusing defendant's application to reduce the amount which he had been directed to pay as alimony in a divorce proceeding. Affirmed.

Statement by Wolverton, Ch. J.:

On February 4, 1894, the plaintiff was granted a divorce from the defendant, and in the decree therefor the defendant, among other things, was required to support and educate the minor child of the parties during his minority, and to pay to plaintiff during the term of her natural life the sum of $150 per month. On January 6, 1897, defendant petitioned the court in which such decree was rendered to modify the same so that he should be required to pay the plaintiff only $75 per month, alleging as reasons therefor that his business and property, and the income therefrom, had so decreased that he was no longer able to meet and pay the sum decreed, or any greater amount than $75 per month; that the plaintiff did not require, nor did she expend, more than that sum for her support, but had spent the remainder for purposes not beneficial to her. The plaintiff answered that defendant ought to be estopped from setting up that she did not require more than $75 per month of the sum decreed, or that, by reason of adverse fortune, he is now unable to pay more, or to allege any matter whatsoever as a reason for a modification of the decree in the respect prayed for, for the reason that plaintiff and defendant, on or about January 15, 1894, made and entered into a postnuptial agreement settling and adjusting as between themselves their property rights, under and by the terms of which, among other things, the defendant, for himself, his heirs, executors, and administrators, in consideration of plaintiff's covenants, did covenant and agree to pay through the First National Bank of Portland, Oregon, to the plaintiff, or order, the sum of $150 on the 15th day of each month thereafter during the term of her natural life; that, as security for the payment of the same for the term of ten years from said date, the defendant agreed to join with the plaintiff in deeding block 22, in McMullen's addition to the city of East Portland, Oregon, to one Byron Z. Holmes, to be held by him in trust as security for the payment of said allowance for the term aforesaid; and it was further agreed that, in case the defendant should desire to sell or dispose of said property, then said Holmes was to furnish plaintiff good and sufficient surety for the payment of said allowance for the balance of said term, or invest the proceeds of the sale in a manner satisfactory to the attorneys for plaintiff and himself, and thereafter to hold said new investment as security for the payment of said allowance; that it was mutually agreed between the parties to said agreement that said property was not to be sold or disposed of for less than the amount required to pay the stipulated allowance until the expiration of the ten years; that the plaintiff, in consideration of said covenants and agreements, relinquished all her right and interest in and to the property of defendant, both real and personal, of every name, nature, and description whatsoever, and it was therein specially agreed that the defendant would properly clothe, maintain, and educate the said minor child of said parties; that said agreement was signed and delivered by the parties thereto, and thereupon, and contemporaneously with the execution thereof, the plaintiff and defendant did duly make, execute, and deliver a warranty deed for said block to the said Byron Z. Holmes, who accepted said trust, and thereupon as a part of the same transaction, Holmes entered into separate contracts with plaintiff and defendant, wherein he agreed to carry out and fulfill all of the covenants and terms of said agreement between plaintiff and defendant, and fully to carry out the trust imposed upon him; that at the time the first agreement referred to was made and entered into between plaintiff and defendant they were husband and wife; the said agreement was made for a valuable consideration, in order to adjust and settle the property rights between them, and to provide for the support and maintenance of plaintiff and the support and education of the minor child; that the terms of said agreement and the provisions for support therein contained were reasonable and just; that the agreement is in full force and effect, and all the terms and conditions thereof have been fully complied with by plaintiff; that the deed to Holmes was made in pursuance of said agreement, as well as with declarations of trust respecting the property: that thereafter the court rendered the said decree of February 4, 1894; and that the amount of alimony agreed upon between them in the adjustment of their property rights was embodied therein, and that the defendant has complied with the terms of said agreement up to the 15th day of September, 1897, but since then has wholly disregarded them. A demurrer interposed to this defense being overruled, a reply was filed, denying the estoppel only, and further alleging that the tendency of said agreement between the plaintiff and defendant was to interest the defendant in foregoing resistance to the suit of plaintiff against the defendant then pending for a dissolution of the bonds of matrimony between them, and that said agreement is contrary to public policy, and void. Thereupon a motion was filed by plaintiff for a decree upon the pleadings, which being allowed and the petition dismissed, the defendant appeals.

NOTE.—As to validity of separation agreement between husband and wife, see also Winn v. Sanford (Mass.) 1 L. R. A. 512, and note; Clark v. Foadick (N. Y.) 6 L. R. A. 182, and note; Galusha v. Galusha (N. Y.) 6 L. R. A. 48 L. R. A.

487, and note; and Blank v. Nohl (Mo.) 18 L. R. A. 350.

As to power of court to reduce alimony, see also Wetmore v. Wetmore (N. Y.) ante, 666, and cases cited in footnote thereto.

Messrs. Stott, Boise, & Stout for appellant.

Messrs. Charles J. Schnabel and Chamberlain & Thomas, for respondent:

The court had no power, under the statute, 48 L. R. A.

ute, to modify its decree for the payment of money under any circumstances.

Oregon Code, §§ 501, 502.

In the case of a decree of divorce a vinculo, the award of alimony is absolute, and cannot be altered after the expiration of the term or the time in which a new trial may be had, unless in the decree the court reserves the right to do so, or unless the power to subsequently modify the decree is given expressly by statute.

2 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 136.

Because of the matters set forth in the answer of the respondent, the appellant is estopped from asking for any modification of the decree.

The great weight of authority sustains the validity of such contracts between husband and wife where upon their face they are fair, and there is nothing to show that the contract was made to stimulate the divorce proceedings, even though made during the pendency of suit or action and before decree.

2 Bishop, Marr. & Div. § 702; Dutton v. Dutton, 30 Ind. 452; Owen v. Yale, 75 Mich. 256, 42 N. W. 817; Randall v. Randall, 37 Mich. 563; Stokes v. Anderson, 118 Ind. 552, 4 L. R. A. 313, 21 N. E. 331; Martin v. Martin, 65 Iowa, 255, 21 N. W. 595; Calame v. Calame, 25 N. J. Eq. 550; Thomas v. Brown, 10 Ohio St. 247; Blake v. Blake, 7 Iowa, 46; Thrall v. Thrall, 83 Hun, 188, 31 N. Y. Supp. 591; Buck v. Buck, 60 Ill. 241; Storey v. Storey, 125 Ill. 608, 1 L. R. A. 320, 18 N. E. 329; Hamilton v. Hamilton, 89 Ill. 349; Jordan v. Westerman, 62 Mich. 170, 28 N. W. 826; Chapin v. Chapin, 135 Mass. 393; Senter v. Senter, 70 Cal. 619, 11 Pac. 782; Moon v. Baum, 58 Ind. 194; Packard v. Packard, 34 Kan. 53, 7 Pac. 628; Gray v. Gray, 83 Mo. 106; Born v. Horstmann, 80 Cal. 452, 5 L. R. A. 577, 22 Pac. 169, 338; Petersine v. Thomas, 28 Ohio St. 596; Crews v. Mooney, 74 Mo. 26; Emery v. Neighbour, 7 N. J. L. 144, 11 Am. Dec. 541; Fletcher v. Holmes, 25 Ind. 458; Miller v. Miller, 64 Me. 484; Morrison v. Morrison, 49 N. H. 69; Speck v. Dausman, 7 Mo. App. 165; Stratton v. Stratton, 77 Me. 377, 52 Am. Rep. 779; Carson v. Murray, 3 Paige, 483.

Wolverton, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

We are now to determine whether the facts set up by the answer to the defendant's petition constitute a defense to a modification of the decree in so far as it provides for the maintenance of the divorced wife. The facts relied upon are set forth by way of estoppel to the defendant insisting upon the modification, it being urged that a valid and binding agreement based upon a sufficient consideration was entered into by and between the parties, and that, the decree having been given and rendered in pursuance thereof, neither party can now be heard, without the consent of the other, to deny its validity or binding force and effect. It is suggested, but not urged with great confidence, that a decree of divorce, whereby provision is made for the maintenance of one party by the other, is final; that all matters determined thereby have become res judicata, and cannot subsequently be questioned or modified. Such decrees are generally regarded as final, unless reservation has been made in the decree for further adjudication and determination, or the statute has made appropriate provision for such further action. No reservation was made by the decree itself in the case at bar, but the statute has made provision to the effect that, whenever a marriage shall be declared void or dissolved, the court shall have power to further decree, among other things, for the recovery of and from the party in fault such an amount of money in gross or in instalments as may be just and proper for such party to contribute to the maintenance of the other, and for the appointment of one or more trustees to manage in such manner as the court shall direct any sum of money decreed for the maintenance of the wife, and that at any time after a decree is given the court or judge thereof, upon the motion of the other party, shall have power to set aside, alter, or modify so much thereof as may provide for the appointment of trustees for the care and custody of the minor children, or their nurture, and education, or the maintenance of either party to the suit. Hill's Anno. Laws (Or.) § 501, subds. 3, 5; Id. § 502. Mr. Justice Moore, speaking of § 502 (in Corder v. Speake (Or.) 51 Pac. 647), says: "The statute authorizes the court, upon motion, to set aside, alter, or modify so much of a decree of divorce as relates to the maintenance of either party to the suit." This language is explicit, and is a rational and just interpretation of the statute; and, were it not for the contention of counsel that the question was not involved in that case, we should make no further comment. True, the provisions of the section are somewhat vague, but, when read in pari materia, as it should be, with the preceding section, it is manifest that the legislative intentment was to authorize a modification in that particular. Subdivision 1 of § 501, supra, provides for the care and custody of the minor children; subdivision 2 for the recovery of the party in fault, and not allowed the care and custody of the children, such an amount of money as may seem proper for such party to contribute towards their nurture and education; and then follow the provisions to which allusion has already been made, touching the maintenance of the party not in fault, and the appointment of trustees for the management of such sums as shall be decreed for the maintenance of the wife, or the nurture and education of the children committed to her care and custody. The modification contemplated comprises the subject-matter of these several subdivisions, respecting which the court is empowered to enter its decree in the first instance, and may be tersely enumerated (1) as it respects the appointment of trustees for the care and custody of the minor children, (2) as it respects the nurture and education thereof, and (3) as it pertains to the maintenance of either party to the suit. This latter provision plainly refers to subdivision 3 of the 48 L. R. A.

preceding section, whereby it is provided for the recovery of the party in fault of such an amount of money as may be proper for such party to contribute towards the maintenance of the other, and this comprehends the wife in the case at bar. Such is the construction usually accorded the latter section in the practice, and is, we are convinced, within the legitimate purpose and intentment of the legislature.

The maintenance provided for by statute is an enlargement upon the signification of the term "alimony" as used in the parlance of the common law. Alimony is an allowance which, by order of the court, the husband is compelled to pay the wife from the date he has been legally separated or divorced, for her support and maintenance. This is to be distinguished, in a general sense, from an allowance pendente lite, and proceeded from the recognition of the husband's common-law liability to support the wife. 2 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 92. But the statute contemplates an allowance out of the wife's estate in favor of the husband also, thereby extending the power to make an allowance in divorce proceedings; and the authority to modify the decree subsequent to the time of its rendition in respect to maintenance exists as well in the one case as the other,—that is to say, whether the allowance is made from the husband's estate for the maintenance of the wife, or vices versa. Although the right to have an allowance awarded for maintenance has been extended by the statute to the husband, the same reasons do not exist in support thereof which formerly induced the allowance of alimony proper. His right thereto is merely statutory, and, while her right is now sustained by the same authority, the statute is, as to her, declarative of that which formerly existed through usage and custom in so much that it had become the unwritten law. At common law the measure of the allowance was determined by the husband's "faculties," and this because of obligations growing out of the marriage relation to support his wife and offspring. But the rule which should regulate the measure of an allowance to the husband must stand upon an entirely different footing. Whatever that may be, it is unnecessary for us to discuss at this time. The more recent legislation has tended strongly to the removal of all disabilities of the wife which do not exist as to the husband, and she may now contract and incur liabilities and responsibilities to the same extent and in the same manner as if she were unmarried. Hill's Anno. Laws (Or.) § 2997. While this fact should not detract from the reasons which support an allowance for her benefit, yet it is a strong circumstance tending to the support of her contracts relative to her maintenance made with her husband, who has always been accounted sui juris.

It is urged that the contract in controversy is against public policy, and void. But this can hardly be said of it when examined in the light of adjudications uniformly adhered to for a long period of time. In Walker v.

Walker, 9 Wall. 743, sub nom. Walker v. Seal, 19 L. ed. 814, where the validity of a deed of separation between the husband and wife was called in question because it was thought to have been executed contrary to public policy, it was held to be valid, the consideration being apparent, and that it would be enforced in equity if it appeared that it was not made in contemplation of a future possible separation; but in respect to one which was to occur immediately, or for the continuance of one that had already taken place, especially was it said to be true if the separation was occasioned by the misconduct of the husband, and the provision for the wife's support was reasonable under the circumstances, and no more than the court would award for her as alimony should she seek such a remedy for her grievances. When the separation exists as a fact, and is not induced or occasioned by the agreement, the consideration for the husband's undertaking to pay alimony is his release from liability for the support of his wife. Roll v. Roll, 51 Minn. 353, 53 N. W. 716; Pettit v. Pettit, 107 N. Y. 677, 679, 14 N. E. 500. It may be stated, generally, that any contract or agreement between husband and wife, which, by its terms or effect, is conducive to a relaxation or a severance of the marital ties, is void, as contrary to public policy, and will not be upheld or maintained. But where a separation has been induced, not by collusion, but by the vicious conduct or disability of one of the parties, without inducement or fault of the other, and it has furnished just grounds for legal separation, then a contract looking to a settlement of property rights and the proper maintenance of the one not in fault is in no sense repugnant to public policy. Randall v. Randall, 37 Mich. 563. In Wisconsin it has been determined, in effect, under a statute authorizing the court from time to time, upon petition of either of the parties, to revise and alter the decree as it may respect alimony or an allowance for the wife and children, that, notwithstanding the parties may have entered into an agreement anterior to the decree touching the amount of such alimony, the terms of which were incorporated in the decree, yet that the court was authorized to subsequently modify the allowance. Blake v. Blake, 68 Wis. 303, 32 N. W. 48, 75 Wis. 339, 43 N. W. 144. The strong tendency of adjudications elsewhere, however, establishes a contrary doctrine,—that when parties have agreed between themselves touching the allowance, and the same is reasonable, and such as ought to be granted under the circumstances and conditions attending the divorce proceedings, having in view the station and capabilities of the parties to respond, and not being contrary to the policy of the law, such an agreement, subject to the approval of the court, is binding upon the parties thereto. In Calame v. Calame, 25 N. J. Eq. 548, the husband had deserted his wife, and while he was living in a state of wilful estrangement from her he offered in writing to turn over to her certain lands, and to pay her a sum of money, which she accepted in writing. The court, in subsequently granting the wife a divorce, further decreed that she was entitled to the lands and money agreed upon. Under the statute of New Jersey, alimony could not be given in gross, nor in a portion of the real estate of the husband. It was held, however, notwithstanding the court could not enforce an agreement as between the parties to live apart, yet that it could and would enforce an agreement, in a proper case, for the payment of the sum intended for separate maintenance according to the stipulations, and this without the intervention of a trustee, although the husband and wife could not ordinarily enter into a binding contract with each other. Mr. Chief Justice Beasley, in concluding his opinion, said: "My deduction from these principles and decisions is that it was within the competency of equity to enforce, as a part of the decree of divorce, the agreement made, in lieu of alimony, between the complainant and defendant. I do not mean, however, that every agreement which is thus made will be supported. The court should undoubtedly look into these arrangements and their surroundings; but when it appears that the separation of the wife, forming the groundwork of the agreement, was justifiable, and the provision is suitable, to this extent it is, in my judgment, safe to say that the contract should be upheld." In Stokes v. Anderson, 118 Ind. 533, 552, 4 L. R. A. 313, 321, 21 N. E. 331, 338, it was said: "It may be that, if an action for divorce is pending, or if, in anticipation of such an action, the parties meet and agree upon the amount of alimony to be allowed to the wife in case a divorce is granted, and the arrangement is just and equitable, and confined strictly to the matter of alimony, it will be sustained. But if the agreement is broader in its terms, and its tendency is to interest the husband in procuring a divorce, or in foregoing resistance to an effort by his wife to that end, then it is contrary to public policy, and is void." Everhart v. Puckett, 73 Ind. 409. See also Dutton v. Dutton, 30 Ind. 452. In Buck v. Buck, 60 Ill. 241, a decree was granted the wife, reciting, among other things, that the husband was a man of large property; that alimony having been settled between the parties upon the basis therein stated, it was accordingly decreed that the husband pay to the wife $12,000, and the further sum of $1,000, the value of certain furniture and silverware, and that he should maintain and educate an adopted child. The case went to the supreme court, and as a ground of reversal it was urged that the alimony allowed by the court was excessive and oppressive. But it was held that the husband, having consented to the provisions of the decree, should have no relief against his own voluntary agreement; the court saying: "Whether the alimony is too high, or whether the court had any lawful authority to make provision for the maintenance of the adopted daughter without the consent of the plaintiff in error, it is not now necessary for us to express an opinion. It was competent for the plaintiff in error to consent to such a decree, and, having done so, it must remain forever binding on him." So, in Storey v. Storey, 125 Ill. 608, 1 L. R. A. 320, 18 N. E. 329; it was held that, "while it is true that husband and wife cannot lawfully enter into an agreement for divorce, yet it is well settled that the amount of alimony which the husband is to pay to the wife, and the terms of the payment, and the length of time during which such payment is to continue, may be all arranged between them by consent." So a decree awarding alimony in gross or out of the husband's realty, based upon the agreement of the parties, even where the statutory provisions do not permit an allowance in that mode, has been upheld and enforced. Oreos v. Mooney, 74 Mo. 26; Russell v. Russell, 4 G. Greene, 26, 61 Am. Dec. 112. As bearing upon the question, see also Owen v. Yale, 75 Mich. 256, 42 N. W. 817; Petersine v. Thomas, 28 Ohio St. 596; Stratton v. Stratton, 77 Me. 373, 52 Am. Rep. 779; Morrison v. Morrison, 49 N. H. 69. We conclude, therefore, in consonance with these latter authorities, that the better rule is that, notwithstanding the court has power and authority to modify its decree of divorce touching the awarding of a sum of money for the maintenance of either the husband or wife by the other subsequent to the entering of the decree, yet, nevertheless, they may agree in a proper case touching the amount of such sum and the manner of its payment, subject to the approval of the court as to its validity in good morals and as conformable to public policy, and in further consideration of the status and condition of the parties relating to the question of its fairness and equability of adjustment; but that, when such an agreement has been approved by the solemn decree of the court, it becomes forever binding, to the same degree and with like effect as ordinary contracts between parties admittedly sui juris, and is not subject to revocation or modification, except by the consent of the parties thereto.

In this view, the decree of the court below must be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

J. D. FENTON, Respt.,
v.

FIDELITY & CASUALTY COMPANY of New York, Appt.

(.....Or.....)

1. Indemnity against liability for damages giving a cause of action as soon as the accident occurs, which may be assigned, although the assured is insolvent and cannot pay the claim, is created by a policy insuring an employer against liability for damage through injury to employees, which provides that the insurer shall have immediate notice of an accident and exclusive power to settle and adjust the claim.

NOTE.—As to insurance against employer's liability, see Anoka Lumber Co. v. Fidelity & C. Co. (Minn.) 30 L. R. A. 689; Hoven v. West Superior Iron & Steel Co. (Wis.) 32 L. R. A. 388; and Embler v. Hartford Steam Boiler Inspection & Ins. Co. (N. Y.) 44 L. R. A. 512. 48 L. R. A.

2. The construction most favorable to the assured is to be adopted in case of doubt as to the proper construction of an insurance policy.
3. A clause in an employer's indemnity policy giving the insurer the right to defend actions in the name of the assured will not prevent the assured from assigning a claim for medical services to an injured employee before the same has been reduced to judgment, liability for which it incurred under a provision in the policy authorizing it to provide such immediate relief as may be imperative in case an accident occurs.

(April 24, 1899.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Multnomah County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover a liability alleged to be covered by a policy of insurance issued by defendant and to have been assigned to plaintiff. Affirmed.

Statement by Beam, J.:

This is an action upon a policy of insurance issued by the defendant company to the Willamette Steam-Mills Lumbering & Manufacturing Company, insuring it against liability for damages on account of injuries accidentally suffered by its employees. The portion of the policy material to the questions on this appeal is as follows: "In consideration of the warranties made in the application for this policy, and of four hundred and eighty dollars, the Fidelity and Casualty Co. of New York, hereinafter called the 'company' does hereby agree to indemnify the Willamette Steam-Mills Lumbering & Mfg. Co. of Portland, in the county of Multnomah and state of Oregon, hereinafter called the 'assured,' for the term of twelve months, beginning on the ninth day of October, 1895, at twelve o'clock noon, and ending on the ninth day of October, 1896, at twelve o'clock noon, standard time, against liability for damages on account of fatal or nonfatal injuries accidentally suffered by any employee or employees of the assured, . . . subject to the following agreements and conditions: (1) The company's liability for an accident resulting in injuries to, or the death of, one person, is limited to $5,000.00, and subject to the same limit for each person. Its gross liability for a casualty resulting in injuries to, or the death of, several persons, is $10,000.00. (2) The assured, upon the occurrence of an accident, and also upon receiving information of a claim on account of an accident, shall give immediate notice, in writing, of such accident or claim, with full particulars, to the company, at its office in New York city, or to the agent, if any, who shall have countersigned this policy. (3) If thereafter any legal proceedings are taken against the assured to enforce a claim for damages on account of such accident, the company will defend the same, at its own cost, in the name and on behalf of the assured. (4) The assured shall not, except at his own cost, settle any claim, nor incur any expense, nor interfere in any negotiations for settlement with the injured person, nor in any legal proceedings, without the consent of the company previously given in writing; but he may provide such immediate surgical relief as may be imperative. The assured shall render to the company all reasonable aid in securing information and evidence, and in effecting settlements. (5) This policy does not cover liability . . . for injuries intentionally inflicted upon any person, nor any liability excepting that of the assured to the injured person himself, or his legal representatives, for damages on account of personal injuries." "(9) Any assignment of interest under this policy shall be void, unless the written consent of the company is first obtained." "(14) This policy, and the application for it, a copy of which application is indorsed hereupon, taken together, with all their respective declarations, stipulations, parts, and conditions, constitute a contract of insurance between the company and the assured; and, if a suit is brought on this contract, it must be construed accordingly, whether such suit is brought on the original contract, or on any renewal thereof." While this policy was in force, and on the 24th of October, 1895, O. Mathison, an employee of the mill company, was seriously injured while employed in its service; and, immediately surgical relief being imperative, the plaintiff, who is a physician and surgeon, was employed by the manager of the mill company to attend the injured man. Shortly thereafter the mill company became insolvent, and its property went into the hands of receivers, who, in pursuance of an order of the court, assigned and transferred to the plaintiff its claim against the defendant for the liability incurred in providing immediate surgical relief for Mathison, and he accepted the same in full payment and satisfaction of his claim against the mill company, and thereupon brought this action directly against the defendant to recover the sum of $150, alleged to be the reasonable value of his services. The defendant, after denying the allegations of the complaint, alleges the insolvency of the mill company; that it had not paid, and would not be able to pay, any portion of plaintiff's claim. A demurrer was sustained to the new matter set up in the answer, and a trial, being had, resulted in a judgment in favor of the plaintiff for the sum of $100, from which the defendant appeals.

Messrs. Cox, Cotton, Teal, & Minor and J. M. Long, for appellant:

The plaintiff proved no damage, and the appellant was entitled to a judgment upon the first cause of action set out in the complaint.

Weller v. Eames, 15 Minn. 461, Gil. 376, 2 Am. Rep. 150; Churchill v. Hayes, 3 Denio, 321; Douglass v. Clark, 14 Johns. 178; Aberdeen v. Blackmar, 6 Hill, 324; Jeffers v. Johnson, 21 N. J. L. 73; Embler v. Hartford Steam Boiler Inspection & Ins. Co. 8 App. Div. 186, 40 N. Y. Supp. 450; Maloney v. Nelson, 144 N. Y. 182, 39 N. E. 82; Gil-48 L. R. A.

bert v. Wiman, 1 N. Y. 550, 49 Am. Dec. 359; Wicker v. Hoppock, 6 Wall. 94, 18 L. ed. 752; Re Negus, 7 Wend. 501; Redfield v. Haight, 27 Conn. 31; Jones v. Childs, 8 Nev. 121.

The plaintiff cannot sue at law alone on this cause of action.

State Ins. Co. v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. 20 Or. 563, 26 Pac. 838; Home Mut. Ins. Co. v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. 20 Or. 569, 26 Pac. 857.

The failure of the mill company to serve immediate notice of this claim lost all its rights under the policy, and the issuer is not bound to specify its defenses; nor does it waive those not specified.

Weidert v. State Ins. Co. 19 Or. 261, 24 Pac. 242.

At the time of the commencement of this action there was no right of action in the mill company for want of a breach and failure on the part of the mill company to comply with the policy as to notice and right to defend in its name; and there is no right of action in the assignee until after breach of the condition of the bond.

Hillman v. Shanahan, 4 Or. 163, 18 Am. Rep. 281.

The words "but he may provide such immediate surgical relief as may be imperative," when given the most favorable construction to the respondent and the mill company, would only make the appellant liable for indemnity against loss actually sustained.

French v. Via, 143 N. Y. 90, 37 N. E. 612; Embler v. Hartford Steam Boiler Inspection & Ins. Co. 8 App. Div. 186, 40 N. Y. Supp. 450; Massachusetts Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Robinson, 98 Ill. 324; Bailey v. New England Mut. L. Ins. Co. 114 Mass. 177, 19 Am. Rep. 329; Greenfield v. Massachusetts Mut. L. Ins. Co. 47 N. Y. 430; Grattan v. National L. Ins. Co. 15 Hun, 74; North American L. Ins. Co. v. Wilson, 111 Mass. 542; Flynn v. North American L. Ins. Co. 115 Mass. 449; Wise v. St. Louis Marine Ins. Co. 23 Mo. 80; Nims v. Ford, 159 Mass. 575, 35 N. E. 100.

Messrs. Fenton, Bronaugh, & Muir, for respondent:

The contract set out in the complaint, independently of the clause in subdivision 4 of the policy, upon which the plaintiff's first count is founded, is a contract to indemnify the mill company against liability. The particular words of the contract upon which the plaintiff's right to recover against the defendant rests amount to a direct authorization of the assured to incur the liability sued upon, and, if incurred, and not paid to the assured or the beneficiary, the contract is broken. The assured may recover without having paid the demand. Plaintiff could sue directly in his own name, treating the assured as the agent of the defendant to employ him to render the immediate surgical relief in the given case. There is a distinction between contracts of indemnity against damages, and contracts of indemnity against liability.

American Employers' Liability Ins. Co. v. Fordyce, 62 Ark. 562, 36 S. W. 1051; Locke

v. Homer, 131 Mass. 93, 41 Am. Rep. 199; Jones v. Childs, 8 Nev. 121; Carson Opera House Asso. v. Miller, 16 Nev. 327; Smith v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 18 Wis. 17; Thompson v. Taylor, 30 Wis. 68; Trinity Church v. Higgins, 48 N. Y. 532; Gilbert v. Wiman, 1 N. Y. 550, 49 Am. Dec. 359; Wick-er v. Hoppock, 6 Wall. 98, 18 L. ed. 752; Anoka Lumber Co. v. Fidelity & C. Co. 63 Minn. 286, 30 L. R. A. 689, 65 N. W. 353; Grand Rapids Electric Light & P. Co. v. Fidelity & C. Co. 111 Mich. 148, 69 N. W. 249; Haas v. Dudley, 30 Or. 355, 48 Pac. 168; Fidelity & C. Co. v. Fordyce, 64 Ark. 174, 41 S. W. 420; Ross v. American Employers' Liability Ins. Co. 56 N. J. Eq. 41, 38 Atl. 22; 10 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 415; Belloni v. Freeborn, 63 N. Y. 390; Kohler v. Matlage, 72 N. Y. 266; National Bank v. Bigler, 83 N. Y. 62; Chace v. Hinman, 8 Wend. 453, 24 Am. Dec. 39; Solary v. Webster, 35 Fla. 363, 17 So. 646; Hoven v. Employers' Liability Assur. Corp. 93 Wis. 201, 32 L. R. A. 388, 67 N. W. 46.

The assignment of the demand or claim of the mill company against the defendant to the plaintiff was in consideration of the release of the mill company by plaintiff, and operated as a payment by the mill company to plaintiff. Even if the defendant's contract should be deemed an indemnity against damage, instead of an indemnity against liability, so as to require a payment of the claim before it could recover against the defendant, then the plaintiff having satisfied his claim by accepting the assignment of the mill company's demand against the defendant, the latter is liable.

Bausman v. Credit Guarantes Co. 47 Minn. 377, 50 N. W. 496; White v. French, 15 Gray, 339; Thompson v. Taylor, 30 Wis. 75.

Bean, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

There are several assignments of error in the notice of appeal, but they are practically all based on the contention that the contract of the defendant with the mill company is one of indemnity against damages, and therefore no recovery can be had thereon unless actual damage is shown. There is a distinction made by the authorities between a contract of indemnity against liability for damages, and a simple contract of indemnity against damages. In the former case it has very generally been held that an action may be brought, and a recovery had, as soon as the liability is legally imposed, while in the latter there is no cause of action until there is actual damage. Jones v. Childs, 8 Nev. 121; 10 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 413; Smith v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 18 Wis. 21; Thompson v. Taylor, 30 Wis. 73; Locke v. Homer, 131 Mass. 93; Trinity Church v. Higgins, 48 N. Y. 532; Weller v. Eames, 15 Minn. 461, Gil. 376, 2 Am. Rep. 150. If, therefore, the policy upon which this action is based is a mere contract of indemnity, the payment by the mill company of the liability incurred by it for the services of the plaintiff is a condition precedent to the right of recovery. If, on the other hand, the contract is one of indemnity against liability, a cause of action accrued thereunder as soon as the liability of the mill company to the plaintiff attached. Upon this question the policy must speak for itself; and its several provisions, in our opinion, indicate quite clearly that it is not merely an agreement to indemnify the mill company against such damage as it may suffer on account of injury to its employees, but that, in case of an accident to an employee whereby a cause of action arises against it, the insurance company will assume the liability on account thereof. By the express terms of the contract, it agrees to indemnify the mill company, not only against actual damage, but against liability for such damage. The policy provides that the defendant shall be immediately notified of an accident, and shall thereafter have exclusive right and power to settle and adjust any claim therefor, and control all legal proceedings in connection therewith. And the mill company is prohibited from settling any claim or incurring any expense without the written consent of the insurance company, except that in case of an accident it may provide such immediate surgical relief as may be imperative. It would, in our opinion, be inconsistent with the terms and provisions, as well as the object and purpose, of the policy, to hold that the assured must actually pay and discharge the claim or demand made against it on account of an injury to one of its employees, as a condition precedent to the maintenance of an action on the policy. This is the interpretation given to a similar contract by the supreme court of Minnesota in the case of Anoka Lumber Co. v. Fidelity & C. Co. 63 Minn. 286, 30 L. R. A. 689, 65 N. W. 353, and is in harmony with the construction of policies substantially the same by the courts of other states. Hoven v. Employers' Liability Assur. Corp. 93 Wis. 201, 32 L. R. A. 388, 67 N. W. 46; Ross v. American Employers' Liability Ins. Co. 56 N. J. Eq. 41, 38 Atl. 22; American Employers' Liability Ins. Co. v. Fordyce, 62 Ark. 562, 36 S. W. 1051; Fidelity & C. Co. v. Fordyce, 64 Ark. 174, 41 S. W. 420. It is claimed by defendant's counsel that the policy under consideration in the Minnesota case was an indemnity against liability only, and therefore differs materially from the one now under consideration. The provisions of the policy are not quoted in the report of the case, but Mr. Justice Buck begins his opinion by saying that the action is brought on a policy "insuring the company, for twelve months, against liability for damages;" and, although he subsequently states that it was a case of insurance against liability, it seems reasonably certain, from the entire opinion, that the policy was the same as the one before us, and we regard the case as directly in point. If, however, the meaning of the policy is in doubt, and its language is fairly and reasonably susceptible of two constructions,—one favorable to the assured, and the other to the defendant,—the one is to be adopted which is the most favorable to the assured. This is the universal ruling in the construction of insurance policies, because they are drawn by the attorneys, officers, and agents of the company, and it is but fair that, if there should be any ambiguity or uncertainty in the language used, it should be construed most strongly against the company. American Surety Co. v. Pauly, 170 U. S. 133, 42 L. ed. 977, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 552; Utter v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 65 Mich. 545, 32 N. W. 812; Grand Rapids Electric Light & P. Co. v. Fidelity & C. Co. 111 Mich. 148, 69 N. W. 249.

It is also contended that the mill company is prohibited from assigning its rights under the policy, prior to the rendition of a judgment against it on account of some liability covered thereby. The contention is based on the provision that the insurance company shall have the right to defend any action, at its own cost, in the name and on behalf of the assured. But this provision has, in our opinion, reference to an undetermined claim for damages, and not to liabilities incurred under what may be determined the emergency clause in the policy, which authorizes the assured, in case of an accident, to provide such immediate relief as may be imperative. In the case of a claim for damages on account of an accident, the question of liability is unsettled so long as the matter is being contested in the courts; but, for imperative surgical relief furnished, the liability of the mill company, and its corresponding right of action against the insurance company, are fixed and determined as soon as such surgical relief is provided, and therefore there can be no reason for the insurance company defending any action brought thereon in the name and on behalf of the assured.

Judgment affirmed.

RHODE ISLAND SUPREME COURT.

Paul WOODS

v.

Walter G. NICHOLS.

(.....R. I.....)

1. A purchaser of property in good faith from a person who holds it under an agreement by which a third person has retained the title thereto, if he sells the property again, is liable for conversion, although he is not in possession of the property.
2. The damages recoverable in trover by one who has retained title to the property as security for purchase money are limited to the balance due him thereon, less any depreciation in its value by the use which he had authorized.

(February 14, 1900.)

PETITION for new trial of an action in which a verdict had been rendered at a Trial Term in Providence County in favor of plaintiff in a proceeding to recover damages for the conversion of a buggy. Granted. The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Henry Marsh, Jr., for plaintiff:

Under the lease agreement between the plaintiff and Barnes the payment was a condition precedent, and Barnes, having failed to comply with it, acquired no title to the buggy, and had no authority to sell it.

Fosdick v. Schall, 99 U. S. 250, 25 L. ed. 341; Rogers v. Whitehouse, 71 Me. 222; Holt v. Holt, 58 N. H. 276; Manwell v. Briggs, 17 Vt. 176; Burnell v. Marvin, 44 Vt. 277; Sargent v. Metcalf, 5 Gray, 306, 66 Am. Dec.

368; Salomon v. Hathaway, 126 Mass. 482; George v. Stubbs, 26 Me. 243; Luey v. Bundy, 9 N. H. 298, 32 Am. Dec. 359; Weeks v. Pike, 60 N. H. 447; Root v. Lord, 23 Vt. 568; Coggill v. Hartford & N. H. R. Co. 3 Gray, 545; Benner v. Puffer, 114 Mass. 376; Goodell v. Fairbrother, 12 R. I. 233, 34 Am. Rep. 631; Skelton v. Manchester, 12 R. I. 326; Brown v. Fitch, 43 Conn. 512; Hine v. Roberts, 48 Conn. 267, 40 Am. Rep. 170; 6 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 453; 2 Kent, Com. 492; Ullman v. Barnard, 7 Gray, 554.

In taking the buggy from Barnes, who had no authority to dispose of it, and applying it to his own use, the defendant, Nichols, was guilty of a conversion, and is liable to this plaintiff in this action.

M'Combie v. Davies, 6 East, 540; Baldwin v. Cole, 6 Mod. 212; West Jersey R. Co. v. Trenton Car Works Co. 32 N. J. L. 517.

In purchasing from Barnes who had no title, or authority to sell the buggy, the defendant, Nichols, acquired no title as against the plaintiff.

6 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 486; Story, Sales, *313; 2 Kent, Com. 497; Coggill v. Hartford & N. H. R. Co. 3 Gray, 545; Singer Mfg. Co. v. Graham, 8 Or. 17, 34 Am. Rep. 572; Deshon v. Bigelow, 8 Gray, 159; Heckle v. Lurvey, 101 Mass. 344, 3 Am. Rep. 366; Hoffman v. Carow, 20 Wend. 21, 22 Wend. 285; Robinson v. Skipworth, 23 Ind. 311; Freeman v. Underwood, 66 Me. 229.

The defendant, Nichols, having purchased the buggy from Barnes, who had no power to sell, and having resold the buggy, even though he acted in good faith, is liable to the plaintiff for conversion.

NOTE.—For conversion by purchaser in good faith, see also Omaha & G. Smelting & Ref. Co. v. Tabor (Colo.) 5 L. R. A. 236.

As to measure of damages in case of conversion, see also Cramton v. Valido Marble Co. (Vt.) 1 L. R. A. 120; Wright v. Bank of the Metropolis (N. Y.) 1 L. R. A. 289; Hayes v. Massachusetts Mut. L. Ins. Co. (Ill.) 1 L. R. A. 48 L. R. A.

A. 303, and note; Haas v. Sackett (Minn.) 2 L. R. A. 449, and note; Chauvin v. Vallon (Mont.) 3 L. R. A. 104; Allen v. South Boston R. Co. (Mass.) 5 L. R. A. 716; Griggs v. Day (N. Y.) 18 L. R. A. 120; White v. Yawkey (Ala.) 32 L. R. A. 190; Langford v. Rivinus (C. C. App. 2d C.) 33 L. R. A. 250.

West Jersey R. Co. v. Trenton Car Works Co. 32 N. J. L. 517; Hoffman v. Carow, 20 Wend. 21, 22 Wend. 285; Morrill v. Moulton, 40 Vt. 242; Carter v. Kingman, 103 Mass. 517; Robinson v. Way, 163 Mass. 212, 39 N. E. 1009; Robinson v. Bird, 158 Mass. 357, 33 N. E. 391; Hyde v. Noble, 13 N. H. 494, 38 Am. Dec. 508; Abbott v. May, 50 Ala. 97; Hamet v. Letcher, 37 Ohio St. 357, 41 Am. Rep. 519; Terry v. Bamberger, 44 Conn. 558.

And no demand was necessary.

Curme, D. & Co. v. Rauh, 100 Ind. 251; Courtis v. Cane, 32 Vt. 232, 76 Am. Dec. 174; Hoffman v. Carow, 20 Wend. 21, 22 Wend. 285; Hyde v. Noble, 13 N. H. 494, 38 Am. Dec. 508; Baker v. Lothrop, 155 Mass. 376, 29 N. E. 643.

This action of trover is maintainable against the defendant, Nichols, even though he had resold the buggy, and did not, at the time the action was brought, have it in his power to give up the buggy.

Carter v. Kingman, 103 Mass. 517; Robinson v. Way, 163 Mass. 212, 39 N. E. 1009; Robinson v. Bird, 158 Mass. 357, 33 N. E. 391; Hoffman v. Carow, 20 Wend. 21, 22 Wend. 285; Morrill v. Moulton, 40 Vt. 242.

The measure of damages in an action of conversion against a third person is the whole value of the property with interest from the time of the conversion.

Angier v. Taunton Paper Mfg. Co. 1 Gray, 621, 61 Am. Dec. 436; Colcord v. McDonald, 128 Mass. 470; Brown v. Haynes, 52 Me. 578.

The value should be estimated according to the market value at the place of conversion.

26 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 1st ed. 826; MoAvoy v. Wright, 137 Mass. 207.

Messrs. F. P. Owen and John P. Beagan for defendant.

Stiness, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff sued in trover for the conversion of a buggy, January 2, 1899. He leased the buggy to Waldo E. Barnes, Jr., by a written agreement, which stipulated that Barnes might have possession of it for thirty days for $155, paying $50 cash on that day, and the balance ($105) on February 1, 1899; that he should not assign, underlet, or part with possession of the buggy without the written consent of the plaintiff; and that the property in the buggy was to remain in the plaintiff until the payment of the full sum, at or before the expiration of said time. Barnes paid $25 down, and gave a check for $25, which was protested, and has not been paid. The plaintiff shipped the buggy to Barnes, who sold it, January 4, 1899, to the defendant for $90. About January 13, 1899, the defendant sold the buggy to Charles C. Ballou, who took it into his possession, and afterwards left it at the defendant's stable temporarily, where it was seen by the plaintiff's son on January 18, 1899. The defense rested upon the ground that, as the defendant had bought the buggy of Barnes for value and without knowledge of the plaintiff's claim, and so sold it to Ballou, who had bought in equal good faith, the defendant not having possession of the buggy, could not be held liable in trover. Such a defense is not sufficient. It ignores the rule caveat emptor. It is clear that Barnes had no title to sell, and hence neither Nichols nor Ballou acquired any by their purchases. The law, as stated in Cooley, Torts, *451, which is well supported by authority, is as follows: "One who buys property must, at his peril, ascertain the ownership, and, if he buys of one who has no authority to sell, his taking possession, in denial of the owner's right, is a conversion. . . . So, it is no protection to one who has received property and disposed of it in the usual course of trade that he did so in good faith, and in the belief that the person from whom he took it was the owner, if in fact the possession of the latter was tortious."

The mere possession by Barnes under the agreement was not tortious, but possession with an intention to sell, contrary to the agreement, was tortious. Under the agreement, he had no right to sell. The law in England and in this country is in harmony on the question before us. In Hollins v. Fowler, L. R. 7 H. L. 757, the subject was most exhaustively considered, and it may be taken as a definitive statement of the law in England. The case holds that any person who, however innocently, obtains possession of the goods of a person who has been fraudulently deprived of them, and disposes of them, whether for his own benefit or that of any other person, is guilty of a conversion.

In that case the defendants were brokers, who had bought cotton from another broker in ignorance of any fraud on his part, and had sold it to spinners, who had made it into yarn. The defendants were held liable in trover. In Gilmore v. Newton, 9 Allen, 171, 85 Am. Dec. 749, the owner of a horse let it to another, who sold it to the defendant. The latter let it to a person who took it away, and neither he nor the horse had since been seen. The defendant was held liable for a conversion, based upon his letting to the latter, as an act of dominion over the property. In Carter v. Kingman, 103 Mass. 517, a person had received goods from the owner, with the right to use them and to become the owner of them on fulfillment of conditions, but until then he should not sell or remove them without the owner's consent, and they should not become his till paid for. He sold them to a third person, who removed and resold them. It was held that the third person was liable to the owner of the goods for their conversion, although he had acted in good faith, and had parted with them before any demand upon him. In Robinson v. Bird, 158 Mass. 357, 33 N. E. 391, Holmes, J., said: "The defendant is an auctioneer who has sold personal property belonging to the plaintiffs. Therefore he is liable for a conversion, unless he can show some other excuse or justification than his good faith and his ignorance of the plaintiffs' title,"—citing Coles v. Clark, 3 Cush. 399; Hoffman v. Carow, 22 Wend. 285; Cochrane v. Rymill, 40 L. T. N. S. 744; Hollins v. Fowler, L. R. 7 H. L. 757. See also Tuttle v. Campbell, 74 Mich. 652, 42 N. W. 384; Terry v. Bamberger, 44 Conn. 558; Morrill v. Moulton, 40 Vt. 242. Many more cases might be cited to the same effect, and doubtless there are others which are more or less in conflict with them. These, however, are sufficient to establish the rule which we have stated, because they rest upon the sound principle that one cannot be deprived of his property without his consent, and that a purchaser of property, except negotiable instruments, has no better title to it than the vendor from whom he buys it. Such was the decision of this court in Goodell v. Fairbrother, 12 R. I. 233, 34 Am. Rep. 631. The case at bar showed title in the plaintiff, and a conversion by the defendant in the act of selling. The plaintiff was therefore entitled to a verdict in his favor.

As to the damages, the general rule is that the measure is the value of the property at the time of the conversion. If the buggy had depreciated in value, by the use which the plaintiff had authorized, of course he is subject to that loss. But, if it had not depreciated, then, under the terms of the agreement, on a sale by him, he was to receive only the balance of $155, the stipulated price, which had not then been paid. Within these limits, the damages are open to assessment, and for this purpose a new trial is necessary.

Petition for new trial granted, and case remitted.

STATE of Rhode Island

v.

Benjamin DALTON.

(.....R. I.....)

A statute which prohibits a person who sells an article from giving to the purchaser as part of the same transaction a stamp, coupon, or other device which will entitle him to receive from a third person some other well-defined article in addition to the one sold is an unwarrantable interference with individual liberty guaranteed by Const. art. 1, § 10, and U. S. Const. 14th Amend. § 1.

(May 2, 1900.)

TRANSFER by the District Court for the Eighth Judicial District for the opinion of the Appellate Division of constitutional questions arising upon trial of defendant charged with issuing trading stamps contrary to the provisions of the statute. Judgment for defendant.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. A. L. Churchhill, for plaintiff:

A court will not declare an act unconsti-

NOTE.—The only prior authority on the subject of trading stamps seems to be the case of Lansburgh v. District of Columbia, 11 App. D. C. 512, which is commented upon by the court in the present case.

—48 L. R. A.

tutional unless the act is directly antagonistic to some specific provision of the Constitution of the state or of the United States.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. 204, cases in note 1.

A court will not declare an act void unless it is clear beyond a doubt that it is in violation of the Constitution.

Fletcher v. Peck, 6 Cranch, 87, 3 L. ed. 162; 7 Harvard L. Rev. 129, 143, 144; Sinking-Fund Cases, 99 U. S. 700, sub nom. Union P. R. Co. v. United States, 25 L. ed. 496; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Matthews, 174 U. S. 96, 43 L. ed. 909, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 609; Taylor v. Place, 4 R. I. 324; State v. Narragansett, 16 R. I. 424, 3 L. R. A. 295, 16 Atl. 901; Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. 216.

The legislature of a state has sovereign power, unless limitations have been placed on that power by the Constitution of the state or of the United States.

Thorpe v. Rutland & B. R. Co. 27 Vt. 140, 62 Am. Dec. 625; People ex rel. Wood v. Draper, 15 N. Y. 532; Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. 102-106, 205, 206.

The Constitution of the United States does not limit the state in the exercise of its police power.

Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 27, 28 L. ed. 923, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 357; Thorpe v. Rutland & B. R. Co. 27 Vt. 140, 62 Am. Dec. 625; Com. v. Alger, 7 Cush. 53; Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 1, 6 L. ed. 23; Lawton v. Steele, 152 U. S. 133, 38 L. ed. 385, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 499; New York v. Miln, 11 Pet. 102, 9 L. ed. 648; The Federalist, Dawson's ed. 23.

The 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and the clause thereof providing that "no state shall deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law," was not intended to, and does not, make any change in respect to the police power of the states.

Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. 36, sub nom. Butchers' Benev. Asso. v. Crescent City L. S. L. & S. H. Co., 21 L. ed. 394; Powell v. Pennsylvania, 127 U. S. 678, 32 L. ed. 253, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 992, 1257; Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Beckwith, 129 U. S. 26, 32 L. ed. 585, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 207; Giozza v. Tiernan, 148 U. S. 657, 37 L. ed. 599, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 721; Hooper v. California, 155 U. S. 648, 39 L. ed. 297, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 207; Holden v. Hardy, 169 U. S. 366, 42 L. ed. 780, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 383.

The right to carry on a particular business, occupation, or calling, and the correlative right of contract, are not rights guaranteed by the 14th Amendment against the exercise of the police power by the state.

Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. 36, sub nom. Butchers' Benev. Asso. v. Crescent City L. S. L. & S. H. Co., 21 L. ed. 394; Hooper v. California, 155 U. S. 648, 39 L. ed. 297, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 207; Bartemeyer v. Iowa, 18 Wall. 129, 21 L. ed. 929; Powell v. Pennsylvania, 127 U. S. 678, 32 L. ed. 253, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 992, 1257; Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623, 31 L. ed. 205, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 273; Holden v. Hardy, 169 U. S. 366, 42 L. ed. 780, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 383; Patapsco

Guano Co. v. North Carolina Bd. of Agri. 171 U. S. 345, 43 L. ed. 191, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 862; Allgeyer v. Louisiana, 165 U. S. 578, 41 L. ed. 832, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 427; Bert-holf v. O'Reilly, 74 N. Y. 515, 30 Am. Rep. 323; Re Jacobs, 98 N. Y. 98, 50 Am. Rep. 636; People v. Marx, 99 N. Y. 377, 52 Am. Rep. 34, 2 N. E. 29; Live Stock Dealers' & B. Asso. v. Crescent City L. S. & S. H. Co. 1 Abb. (U. S.) 398, Fed. Cas. No. 8,408.

The test to which every act is brought is this: Did the legislature enact the measure in the exercise of a reasonable discretion? Has the act any relation to the objects it purported to attain? In other words, can a valid reason be given for the legislation? If the court finds in the affirmative the act will stand.

Patterson v. Kentucky, 97 U. S. 501, 24 L. ed. 1115; Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623, 31 L. ed. 205, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 273; Powell v. Pennsylvania, 127 U. S. 678, 32 L. ed. 253, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 992, 1257.

Only in a case of the most plain exercise of arbitrary power will the court pronounce an act without reasonable foundation.

Plumley v. Massachusetts, 155 U. S. 461, 39 L. ed. 223, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 590, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 154; Soon Hing v. Crowley, 113 U. S. 705, 28 L. ed. 1145, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 730; Powell v. Pennsylvania, 127 U. S. 678, 32 L. ed. 253, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 992, 1257; Holden v. Hardy, 169 U. S. 366, 42 L. ed. 780, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 383; Orient Ins. Co. v. Daggs, 172 U. S. 557, 43 L. ed. 552, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 281; Patapsco Guano Co. v. North Carolina Bd. of Agri. 171 U. S. 345, 43 L. ed. 191, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 862; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Matthews, 174 U. S. 96, 43 L. ed. 909, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 609.

The act in question is a valid exercise of the police power for the reason that it prohibits schemes which are in the nature of a lottery or gift enterprise, and are open to the same objections.

A lottery has been defined as "a scheme for the distribution of prizes and for the obtaining of goods or money by chance."

People v. Noelke, 94 N. Y. 137, 46 Am. Rep. 128; Wilkinson v. Gill, 74 N. Y. 63, 30 Am. Rep. 264.

The fact that a scheme has an element of certainty does not operate to purge it of its taint as a lottery where the element of chance is present.

Horner v. United States, 147 U. S. 449, 37 L. ed. 237, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 409; Dunn v. People, 40 Ill. 465; Taylor v. Smetten, L. R. 11 Q. B. Div. 207; Reg. v. Harris, 10 Cox, C. C. 352; Davenport v. Ottawa, 54 Kan. 711, 39 Pac. 708; State v. Lumsden, 89 N. C. 573; Lynch v. Rosenthal, 144 Ind. 86, 31 L. R. A. 835, 42 N. E. 1103.

It is the element of chance, the hope of getting something for nothing, and the appeal to the gambling instinct that constitutes the evil of lottery transactions.

Lansburgh v. District of Columbia, 11 App. D. C. 512; Humes v. Fort Smith, 93 Fed. Rep. 857.

So far as an act is to protect the morals and advance the welfare of the people by 48 L. R. A.

prohibiting every scheme and device bearing any semblance to a lottery or gambling, it would be a valid exercise of power, and citation of authorities is not necessary to sustain a proposition so well settled.

Long v. State, 74 Md. 565, 12 L. R. A. 425, 22 Atl. 4; Stone v. Mississippi, 101 U. S. 814, 25 L. ed. 1079; Phalen v. Virginia, 8 How. 163, 12 L. ed. 1030.

Even if no intentional element of chance is involved the act is constitutional as forbidding a scheme in its nature demoralizing to legitimate business.

Lansburgh v. District of Columbia, 11 App. D. C. 512; Humes v. Fort Smith, 93 Fed. Rep. 857.

If the successful maintenance of the business depends, as it would seem to, in part, on the gross over-valuation of the premiums, the legislature has a clear right to protect the people from imposition by prohibiting the business altogether.

Patapsco Guano Co. v. North Carolina Bd. of Agri. 171 U. S. 345, 43 L. ed. 191, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 862; Plumley v. Massachusetts, 155 U. S. 461, 39 L. ed. 223, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 590, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 154; State v. Smyth, 14 R. I. 100, 51 Am. Rep. 344; Steiner v. Ray, 84 Ala. 93, 4 So. 172; State v. Corbett, 57 Minn. 345, 24 L. R. A. 498, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 694, 59 N. W. 317; Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. 740-744.

The means used in the acquisition and disposition of property are subject to the control of the state. That liberty in the use of property or liberty of contract are curtailed by an act is not an objection to the constitutionality thereof.

State v. Brown & S. Mfg. Co. 18 R. I. 16, 17 L. R. A. 856, 25 Atl. 246; People v. Cannon, 139 N. Y. 32, 34 N. E. 759; Com. v. Roswell, 173 Mass. 119, 53 N. E. 132; Singer v. State, 72 Md. 464, 8 L. R. A. 551, 19 Atl. 1044; State v. Corbett, 57 Minn. 345, 24 L. R. A. 498, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 694, 59 N. W. 317; Com. v. Gardner, 133 Pa. 284, 7 L. R. A. 666, 19 Atl. 550; Shelton v. Mobile, 30 Ala. 540, 68 Am. Dec. 143.

The act in question does not deny to the defendant the equal protection of the laws, since all persons in the inhibited class—that is, all persons issuing or redeeming stamps or coupons redeemable in merchandise—are under the same liability.

Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. 36, sub nom. Butchers' Benov. Asso. v. Crescent City L. S. & S. H. Co. 21 L. ed. 394; Strauder v. West Virginia, 100 U. S. 303, 25 L. ed. 664; Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 27, 28 L. ed. 923, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 357; Soon Hing v. Crowley, 113 U. S. 703, 28 L. ed. 1145, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 730; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Mackey, 127 U. S. 205, 32 L. ed. 107, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1161; Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Beckwith, 129 U. S. 26, 32 L. ed. 585, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 207; Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 30 L. ed. 220, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1064.

The state may distinguish, select, and classify objects of legislation, and in this has a wide discretion.

Kentucky Railroad Tax Cases, 115 U. S. 321, sub nom. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R.

Co. v. Kentucky, 29 L. ed. 414, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 57; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Mackey, 127 U. S. 205, 32 L. ed. 107, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1161; Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Beckwith, 129 U. S. 26, 32 L. ed. 585, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 207; Holden v. Hardy, 169 U. S. 366, 42 L. ed. 780, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 383; Magoun v. Illinois Trust & Sav. Bank, 170 U. S. 283, 42 L. ed. 1037, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 594; Orient Ins. Co. v. Daggs, 172 U. S. 557, 43 L. ed. 552, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 281; State v. Brown & S. Mfg. Co. 18 R. I. 16, 17 L. R. A. 856, 25 Atl. 246.

The fact that an act does not include all branches of one general business in its scope, but selects a certain branch thereof, does not open the legislation to the charge of unconstitutional class legislation.

Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. 36, sub nom. Butchers' Benev. Asso. v. Crescent City L. S. L. & S. H. Co. 21 L. ed. 394; Soon Hing v. Crowley, 113 U. S. 703, 28 L. ed. 1145, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 730; Orient Ins. Co. v. Daggs, 172 U. S. 557, 43 L. ed. 552, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 281; Holden v. Hardy, 169 U. S. 366, 42 L. ed. 780, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 383; Corting v. Kansas City Stock-Yards Co. 79 Fed. Rep. 679; State v. Broadbelt, 89 Md. 565, 45 L. R. A. 433, 43 Atl. 771; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Ellis, 165 U. S. 150, 41 L. ed. 666, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 255; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Matthews, 174 U. S. 96, 43 L. ed. 909, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 609.

Messrs. Tillinghast & Murdock, for defendant:

When the validity of a statute is under consideration, it is always open to the courts to consider whether the regulation has a reasonable relation to some public purpose, or simply aids a particular class in unjust discrimination against another class.

Lawton v. Steele, 152 U. S. 133, 38 L. ed. 385, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 499; Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 30 L. ed. 220, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1064; People v. Marx, 99 N. Y. 377, 52 Am. Rep. 34, 2 N. E. 29.

The act in question must, if sustained, rest upon the police power of the legislature.

To justify a statute passed under the police power, it must have a clear relation to the public health, morals, or safety.

Guthrie, 14th Amendment, pp. 73, 74, 75, 76; 1 Thayer, Cases on Const. Law, p. 693; Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 24 L. ed. 77.

The law under which defendant is prosecuted deprives him of his liberty and property without due process of law, and is therefore in conflict with the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Powell v. Pennsylvania, 127 U. S. 678, 32 L. ed. 253, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 992, 1257; Alleyer v. Louisiana, 165 U. S. 578, 41 L. ed. 832, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 428; People v. Marx, 99 N. Y. 377, 52 Am. Rep. 34, 2 N. E. 29; Re Jacobs, 98 N. Y. 98, 50 Am. Rep. 636; Eaton v. Boston, C. & M. R. Co. 51 N. H. 504, 12 Am. Rep. 147.

This sort of legislation has been attempted before, as there is always a class in the community which flies to the legislature 48 L. R. A.

when any business interferes with them in any way.

People v. Gillson, 109 N. Y. 389, 17 N. E. 343.

A lottery has been defined to be: "A scheme by which, on one's paying money or some other thing of value, he obtains the contingent right to have something of greater value, if an appeal to chance, by lot or otherwise, under the direction of the manager of the scheme, should decide in his favor."

Horner v. United States, 147 U. S. 449, 37 L. ed. 237, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 409; Bishop, Statutory Crimes, 449, § 952; Bouvier, Law Dict. 281.

The method under consideration contains none of the elements of a lottery.

When a state statute interferes, even remotely, with the interstate commerce clause of the Constitution, the court will go to almost any extreme to declare it unconstitutional.

Schollenberger v. Pennsylvania, 171 U. S. 1, 43 L. ed. 49, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 757; Colins v. New Hampshire, 171 U. S. 30, 43 L. ed. 60, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 768; Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. 36, sub nom. Butchers' Benev. Asso. v. Crescent City L. S. L. & S. H. Co. 21 L. ed. 394; Smythe v. Ames, 169 U. S. 406, 42 L. ed. 819, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 418; Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 24 L. ed. 77; Bartemeyer v. Iowa, 18 Wall. 129, 21 L. ed. 929; Boston Beer Co. v. Massachusetts, 97 U. S. 25, 24 L. ed. 989; Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623, 31 L. ed. 205, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 273; Powell v. Pennsylvania, 127 U. S. 678, 32 L. ed. 253, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 992, 1257.

If the defendant's business is not ruined, but his profits are decreased even by one cent because of this legislation, he has the same right to complain as though a million were involved.

Guthrie, 14th Amendment, 39, 40; Sentell v. New Orleans & C. R. Co. 166 U. S. 698, 41 L. ed. 1169, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 693; Long v. State, 74 Md. 565, 12 L. R. A. 425, 22 Atl. 4.

The act in question is unconstitutional because it deprives the defendant of the equal protection of the laws.

Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Ellis, 165 U. S. 150, 41 L. ed. 666, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 255; Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 27, 28 L. ed. 923, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 357; Holden v. Hardy, 169 U. S. 366, 42 L. ed. 780, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 383; Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 24 L. ed. 77; Railroad Commission Cases, 116 U. S. 307, sub nom. Stone v. Farmers' Loan & T. Co. 29 L. ed. 636, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 334, 388, 1191; State v. Loomis, 115 Mo. 307, 21 L. R. A. 789, 22 S. W. 350; Fraser v. People use of School Fund, 141 Ill. 171, 16 L. R. A. 492, 31 N. E. 395; State v. Brown & S. Mfg. Co. 18 R. I. 16, 17 L. R. A. 856, 25 Atl. 246; Holden v. Hardy, 169 U. S. 366, 42 L. ed. 780, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 383; Orient Ins. Co. v. Daggs, 172 U. S. 557, 43 L. ed. 552, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 281.

Tillinghast, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On the 13th day of November, 1899, the defendant was arraigned before the district court of the eighth judicial district upon a complaint and warrant charging "that on the 28th day of October, 1899, with force and arms, Benjamin Dalton, of Johnston, did sell to one Frederick W. Perkins certain articles of merchandise, to wit, three pieces of tobacco, and did then and there give and distribute to said Frederick W. Perkins three stamps, commonly called 'trading stamps,' which said stamps did then and there entitle the said Frederick W. Perkins to demand and receive certain articles of merchandise from Sperry & Hutchinson, at their store; said Sperry & Hutchinson being persons other than the vendor of said three pieces of tobacco." The defendant filed a motion that the complaint be quashed, for the following reasons: (1) Because chapter 652 of the Public Laws of the state of Rhode Island, and especially the 1st section thereof, on which said complaint is founded, is in conflict with the 1st section of the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, because it deprives the defendant of his liberty and property without due process of law. (2) Because said chapter further conflicts with the 1st section of the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, because it deprives the defendant of the equal protection of the laws, in this: That stamps or coupons redeemable in money and merchandise or property, given by the vendor as a bonus in addition to the article purchased, are not included within the prohibition of the chapter; and (3) because said act is in conflict with article 1, § 10, of the Constitution of the state of Rhode Island. This motion was overruled by the court. The defendant thereupon pleaded, "Not guilty," but was adjudged probably guilty, whereupon the case was certified to this court upon the question of the constitutionality of the act under which said complaint was made. Said act reads as follows:

"Sec. 1. It shall be unlawful for any person or corporation to sell, give, or distribute any stamp, coupon, or other device which shall entitle the purchaser of property to demand or receive from any person or corporation other than the vendor any article of merchandise other than that actually sold to said purchaser; and for any person or corporation other than the vendor to deliver to any person any article of merchandise other than that actually sold upon presentation of any such stamp, coupon, or other device; provided, however, that this act shall not affect any existing contract.

"Sec. 2. Whoever shall violate any provision of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and for each offense shall be punished by a fine of not less than one hundred dollars nor more than five hundred dollars, or by imprisonment for a term not exceeding three months."

It is contended on the part of the state that the act in question is sustainable as a valid exercise of the police power of the state, and also that the Constitution of the United States does not limit the state in the exercise of such power.

It would be presumptuous for any court to attempt to formulate an exact definition of the term "the police power of the state." Legal definitions do not sum themselves up in single sentences. They are, and of necessity must be, more or less general and elastic, in order that the courts may apply them to the infinite variety of circumstances which may arise in the relations and affairs of mankind in civilized society. But for all practical purposes the police power of the state may be shortly defined to be the power of the legislature to make such regulations relating to personal and property rights as appertain to the public health, the public safety, and the public morals. In Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 27, 28 L. ed. 923, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 357, it is referred to as the "power to prescribe regulations to promote the health, peace, morals, education, and good order of the people, and to legislate so as to increase the industries of the state, develop its resources, and add to its wealth and prosperity." Further and more elaborate definitions may be found in State v. Fitzpatrick, 16 R. I. 54, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 713, 11 Atl. 767; Harrington v. Providence, 20 R. I. 233, 38 L. R. A. 305, 38 Atl. 1; Lawton v. Steele, 152 U. S. 136, 38 L. ed. 388, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 499; Stone v. Mississippi, 101 U. S. 818, 25 L. ed. 1079; Com. v. Alger, 7 Cush. 53. Under these general and comprehensive definitions, it is evident that the general assembly is clothed with very large powers, and may exercise a broad discretion in the passage of laws pertaining to the internal affairs of the state. But, while the power is large, it is not without limit, and like all other powers of the general assembly, must be so exercised as not to violate the constitutional rights of the people. In People v. Gillson, 109 N. Y. 389, 17 N. E. 343, the court, in referring to the police power, says that it "has never yet been fully described nor its extent plainly limited, further, at least, than this: It is not above the Constitution, but it is bounded by its provisions; and if any liberty or franchise is expressly protected by any constitutional provision, it cannot be destroyed by any valid exercise by the legislature or the executive of the police power." See also Re Jacobs, 98 N. Y. 107, 50 Am. Rep. 636; Guthrie on the Fourteenth Amendment, 76-89, and note by Prof. Thayer; Stemeyer v. Charleston, 53 S. C. 259, 31 S. E. 322. Again, when the validity of a statute of this sort is under consideration, it is always open to the court to consider, among other things, whether the act bears any reasonable relation to the public purpose sought to be accomplished, and a forced or strained relation is not enough. Thus, in Lawton v. Steele, 152 U. S. 136, 38 L. ed. 388, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 499, Mr. Justice Brown, in delivering the opinion of the court, said: "To justify the state in thus interposing its authority in behalf of the public, it must appear—First, that the interests of the public generally, as distinguished from those of a particular class, require such interference; and, second, that the means are reasonably necessary for the accomplishment of the purpose, and not unduly oppressive upon individuals. The legislature may not, under the guise of protecting the public interests, arbitrarily interfere with private business, or impose unusual or unnecessary restrictions upon lawful occupations. In other words, its determination as to what is a proper exercise of its police powers is not final or conclusive, but is subject to the supervision of the courts." See United States ex rel. Kerr v. Ross, 5 App. D. C. 249. And then, after instancing various enactments which have been held not to be within the police power of the states, the court further says: "In all these cases the acts were held to be invalid, as involving an unnecessary invasion of the rights of property, and a practical inhibition of certain occupations, harmless in themselves, and which might be carried on without detriment to the public interests." See also Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 30 L. ed. 220, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1064; People v. Mars, 99 N. Y. 377, 52 Am. Rep. 34, 2 N. E. 29. Of course, it is always to be presumed that all acts of the general assembly are passed in the utmost good faith, and also that they are conformable to the Constitution. Powell v. Pennsylvania, 127 U. S. 678-685, 32 L. ed. 263, 256, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 992, 1257. And it is not until the unconstitutionality of a given act is plainly made to appear that the court is called upon to declare it void. State v. Narragansett, 16 R. I. 424, 3 L. R. A. 295, 16 Atl. 901; Carr v. Brown, 20 R. I. 215, 38 L. R. A. 294, 38 Atl. 9. But after indulging every possible presumption and intentment in favor of the validity of a statute, and being unable to find that it can be sustained as a constitutional exercise of the legislative power, it becomes the duty of the court to declare it void. Taylor v. Place, 4 R. I. 324; Carr v. Brown, 20 R. I. 223, 38 L. R. A. 294, 38 Atl. 9; Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 661, 31 L. ed. 205, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 273; Minnesota v. Barber, 136 U. S. 313, 34 L. ed. 455, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 185, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 862.

We come, then, to the question whether the act before us is one which falls within the police power of the legislature; for, if it is not, it is clearly an unlawful interference with private right. We will endeavor to test this question by the simple process of elimination. First, then, Does said act look to or in any manner concern the public health? No one claims that it does, and no one could for a moment claim, with any basis of reason, that it has, or was intended to have, even the remotest bearing thereon. Second, Does the act look to or tend to promote the public safety? Nothing of this sort, either, is claimed in its favor, and we fail to see that anything could be, for it bears no relation whatsoever thereto. Having thus eliminated two of the general grounds upon which said act must be supported as being a valid exercise of the police power, we come to the third and last one, which raises the question whether the act relates to or tends to promote the public morals. The counsel in behalf of the state vigorously contends that it does, on the ground that it prohibits schemes which are in the nature of a lottery or gift enterprise, and hence, whether technically a lottery or not, are open to the same objection. He argues, substantially, that it is the element of chance, the hope of getting something for nothing, and the appeal to the gambling instinct, that constitutes the evil of lottery transactions; that it is clear that the scheme contemplated by the act and prohibited therein is, in effect, a lottery; and that, as an inducement to purchase, the promise of a premium to be given by a third person is held out, and the precise nature of the premium and its value are unknown at the time of purchasing, and thus a subtle appeal is made to the gambling instinct; and, moreover, that a demoralizing element is introduced into legitimate business. If this contention is well founded, the act in question is undoubtedly a valid and legitimate exercise of the police power. Is the method of doing business which is prohibited by the act, then, in the nature of a lottery? A lottery is a scheme for the distribution of prizes by chance. Governors of Alms House v. American Art-Union, 7 N. Y. 228; Thomas v. People, 59 Ill. 160. Or, to state it with more fullness, "It is a scheme by which a result is reached by some action or means taken, in which result man's choice or will has no part, and which human reason, foresight, sagacity, or design cannot enable him to know or determine until the same has been accomplished." 2 Bouvier, Law Dict. 281; People v. Elliott, 74 Mich. 264, 3 L. R. A. 403, 41 N. W. 916. "The word 'lottery' embraces the elements of procuring, through lot or chance, by the investment of money or something of value, some greater amount of money or thing of greater value." United States v. Wallis, 58 Fed. Rep. 942. The method of doing business which the act prohibits is the giving by a vendor, in connection with the sale by him of any article or articles, of any stamp or other device which shall entitle the vendee to obtain from some other person some article of merchandise in addition to that actually sold. It is to be observed that the act does not prohibit the vendor himself from giving or "throwing in," as it is sometimes termed, in common parlance, some other article in addition to that sold, but only prohibits the seller from giving anything in the nature of a check or order upon some other person which shall entitle the holder thereof to obtain from such other person some article of merchandise in addition to the thing sold. In other words, the act recognizes the right of a person to give away an article of merchandise in connection with, and as an inducement to the making of, a sale of some other article, but provides, in effect, that the giving of such additional article must be done by him directly, and not through a third person. We fail to see that there is any substantial difference in principle between the two methods, or that either bears any resemblance to a lottery. The element of chance, which is the basal principle of every scheme in the nature of a lottery, is wholly wanting. To illustrate: A buys of B 20 pounds of sugar for a dollar, and is given with the purchase an order, check, stamp, token, or some kind of device,—no matter what,—which, upon presentation to C entitles A to some other specific article of merchandise in addition to the sugar. How does such a transaction differ in principle from one where A receives the premium for making the purchase—for such it really is—directly from B himself? In other words, how is it changed into a gambling transaction by the fact that the premium is received through the agency of C, instead of being received directly from B? We cannot see that it is thus changed. The thing sought to be accomplished by the vendor is the sale of his goods by means of the inducement held out to the purchaser in the form of a premium, and if he may himself give and deliver the premium, as he clearly may, he may also give it through a third person. As to the argument before referred to, that the scheme is in the nature of a lottery because the precise nature and value of the premium are unknown to the purchaser, it is enough to reply that nothing appears in the act or in the record before us to show this. The prohibition is that the purchaser shall not receive from any person other than the vendor "any article of merchandise other than that actually sold to said purchaser;" thereby implying that the parties to the transaction would be dealing with reference to some particular article, or at any rate to some one of a given class of articles in the possession of the third person, the nature and value of which were well understood. To illustrate again: A buys of B a suit of clothes for $20, and receives a check or stamp which entitles him to receive from C a pair of shoes worth $2, a hat worth $2, or a pair of gloves worth $2. It is true that A has not seen these articles at the time of purchasing the clothes, but as he knows that he is to receive one of the articles mentioned, as he may elect, we cannot see that there is anything so uncertain about the transaction as to appeal to the gambling instinct. At any rate, it does not in any real sense partake of the nature of a lottery. It is simply one of the infinite variety of devices which are resorted to by trades people, in these days of sharp competition, to promote the sale of their goods. The complaint in the case before us expressly sets out that the stamps which were given by the defendant in connection with the sale entitled Perkins, the purchaser of the tobacco, to receive "certain articles of merchandise from Sperry & Hutchinson at their store;" thereby showing by a fair inference, we think, that it was well understood between the parties to the transaction what the articles were. It is to be further observed that the act does not prohibit the sale of merchandise, and the giving, in connection with and as an inducement to the purchase thereof, of trading stamps, redeemable in cash by a third person, nor does it prohibit the giving of stamps redeemable by the vendor himself, either in cash or merchandise, so that the use of trading stamps is not prohibited, but only limited. And it would seem that the legislature could not have considered the scheme which the act prohibits as being in the nature of a lottery, for if they had, they would not have exempted the cash-stamp business from the operation of the law.

Referring again to the act in question, our view thereof may be stated thus: The act, as we construe it, prohibits a person from selling a given article, and at the same time, and as a part of the transaction, giving to the purchaser a stamp, coupon, or other device which will entitle him to receive from some third person some other well-defined article in addition to the one sold. This is equivalent to declaring that it is illegal for a man to give away one article as a premium to the buyer for having purchased another; for, as already intimated, it can make no possible difference that the article given away with the sale is delivered to the purchaser by a third person, instead of the seller himself. We think it is clear that such a prohibition is an unwarranted interference with the individual liberty which is guaranteed to every citizen both by our state Constitution and also by the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States. The term "liberty," as used in the Constitution, is a very broad and comprehensive one. It does not mean freedom from physical restraint, simply, but embraces the right of each individual "to be free in the enjoyment of the faculties with which he has been endowed by his Creator, subject only to such restraints as are necessary for the common welfare." In the terse language of Peckham, J., in People v. Gillson, 109 N. Y. 399, 17 N. E. 345, "Liberty, in its broad sense, as understood in this country, means the right, not only of freedom from servitude, imprisonment, or restraint, but the right of one to use his faculties in all lawful ways, to live and work where he will, to earn his livelihood in any lawful calling, and to pursue any lawful trade or avocation." See also Fraser v. People use of School Fund, 141 Ill. 171, 16 L. R. A. 492, 31 N. E. 395; Alleyger v. Louisiana, 165 U. S. 589, 590, 41 L. ed. 836, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 427; Guthrie, on the Fourteenth Amendment, 109. This inalienable right is trespassed upon and impaired whenever the legislature prohibits a man from carrying on his business in his own way, provided, always, of course, that the business and the mode of carrying it on are not injurious to the public, and provided, also, that it is not a business which is affected with a public use or interest. Now, it was certainly within the constitutional right of the defendant in this case to sell tobacco,—it being presumed, of course, that he had obtained the necessary authority to deal in that article; and, as an inducement to people to trade with him, it was also his right to give to each purchaser of a certain quantity of tobacco, either directly or through a third person, some other designated artide of value, by way of premium. The statute in question, however, steps in to prevent him from adopting such a course to procure trade, and from it to secure an income and livelihood; and he is thus restrained in the free enjoyment of his faculties to which he is constitutionally entitled, unless such restraint is necessary for the common welfare, in one of the ways heretofore mentioned, and we cannot see that it is. In other words, the statute says that A shall not sell to B a barrel of flour, and, in connection with and as a part of the contract of sale, give to B a coupon which will entitle him to receive from C a pound of tea, a pitcher, a lamp, a clock, a door mat, or some other specified article of merchandise. If the act had prohibited the giving away of any stamp or device in connection with the sale of an article, which would entitle the holder to receive, either directly from the vendor, or indirectly through another person, some indefinite and undescribed article, the nature and value of which were unknown to the purchaser, there would then be introduced into the prohibited transaction enough of the element of uncertainty and chance to condemn it as being in the nature of a lottery.

But it is further argued in support of the statute that the scheme aimed at is one which is demoralizing to legitimate business, and hence within the police power of the state to prohibit. Just what is meant by this general characterization of the scheme is not clear. If, however, as we presume, the language is intended to refer to the methods employed by trading-stamp companies in their dealings with merchants, as revealed in Lansburgh v. District of Columbia, 11 App. D. C. 512, it is simply another way of saying that the scheme is a gift enterprise, partaking of the nature of a lottery, and hence may be prohibited by the state. But, as already intimated, we fail to see that, even conceding that the scheme which is sought to be prohibited may properly be denominated a "gift enterprise," it partakes of the nature of a lottery, and hence is demoralizing to legitimate business, in the sense of being a scheme to cheat and defraud purchasers. In other words, a gift enterprise is not necessarily a lottery. Long v. State, 74 Md. 565, 12 L. R. A. 425, 22 Atl. 4. In this connection it is pertinent to observe that it is not enough to warrant the state in absolutely prohibiting a given business that it is conducted by methods which do not meet with general approval. There must be something in the methods employed which renders it injurious to the public in some one of the ways before mentioned, in order to warrant the state in interfering therewith. Nor is it enough to bring a given business within the prohibitory power of the state that it is so conducted as to seriously interfere with or even destroy the business of others. Take for illustration the great department-stores in our large cities. By reason of the almost infinite variety of goods which they carry, they furnish greater facilities to customers, and can offer them greater inducements in the way of trade, than can those stores which carry but a single line of goods. The result is, as everybody knows, that very many small traders have been crushed out and obliged to abandon their business entirely, while the owners of the mammoth establishments, which supply almost everything which we eat, drink, wear, use, need, or desire, whether useful or ornamental, are prosperous and successful in a remarkable degree. But, while the result of this method of doing business is injurious to those who employ the more primitive one, can it be said that a law prohibiting a department store would be a valid exercise of the police power? Clearly not. A case decided no longer ago than December last holds that such a law is invalid. We refer to the case of Chicago v. Netcher, 183 Ill. 104, ante, 261, 183 Ill. 104, 55 N. E. 707, in which it was held that an ordinance prohibiting a person, firm, or corporation from exposing for sale or selling any meat, fish, butter, or other provisions in any place of business in the city where dry goods, clothing, or drugs are sold tends in no way to protect the safety, health, or morals of the public, or to accomplish an object falling within the police power. It was also held that such an ordinance contravenes the provisions of both the Constitution of the United States and of the state, insuring to every person liberty and the protection of his property rights, and providing that he shall not be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law. In State ex rel. Wyatt v. Ashbrook (Mo.) 55 S. W. 627, decided in February last, the supreme court of Missouri strongly condemns legislation which attempts to abridge or hamper the right of a citizen to pursue any lawful calling or avocation which he may choose without unreasonable regulation or molestation. It may be demoralizing to legitimate business for two great rival dry-goods houses to cut prices in the attempt to undersell each other or for two competing railway lines to sell tickets at half price in the attempt of each to get an advantage over the other, yet probably no one would claim that such competition could be prohibited by law. "Bargain sales" and "bargain counters" may be demoralizing to business, but probably no one would claim that they can be abolished by law. The invention of labor-saving machinery may be said to demoralize business, and so may numerous other modern innovations in manufacturing and industrial pursuits whereby old methods have to be abandoned and new ones adopted. But whatever demoralization results therefrom is incidental to that principle of evolution which is everywhere manifest in the mercantile and industrial as well as in the physical world. The great law of competition invites and promotes this sort of demoralization, and the remedy for one who is injured by it lies, not in legislation, but in being able to keep pace with the changed, if not always improved, methods.

But it is further argued that the fact that a given scheme has an element of certainty does not operate to purge it of its taint as a lottery, where the element of chance is present; and in support of this contention several cases are relied on, to which we will briefly refer. Dunn v. People, 40 Ill. 465, is widely different from the case at bar. There the evidence showed that the defendant, who was indicted under a statute making the vending of lottery tickets a penal offense, was conducting what he termed a "gift-sale establishment;" that he kept upon his desk a box filled with envelopes, upon each of which was printed an advertisement purporting that it contained valuable recipes and popular songs, and also a card descriptive of some article in an "immense stock of over 250,000 pianos, watches, sewing machines, jewelry, etc., worth $1,500,000, all to be sold for $1 each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to receive." An advertisement was displayed at the store, which gave a list of a great variety of articles, and stated that some of them were represented by the card in the envelope. A card might represent a grand piano or a finger ring, but whatever article the purchaser might find specified upon the card in the envelope bought by him he would be entitled to purchase for $1. The price of the envelope was 25 cents. It was strenuously argued by counsel for the plaintiff in error that the sale of one of these envelopes, with its contents, was not the sale of a lottery ticket, because there was no element of chance in the transaction; that the card or ticket representing an article of merchandise to be bought for $1 conferred simply a right to buy, which the holder could exercise or not, at his option; and that, if he bought, he did so with his eyes open, and with the opportunity of knowing the value of what he purchased. But the court held that, while the element of chance did not lie in what the holder of the envelope might knowingly do with his card after he had purchased the envelope, it did lie in the purchase of the envelope itself, which, it was represented by the advertisement, might contain a ticket that would give him the right to buy for $1 an article worth hundreds of dollars, or it might contain one which would only give him the right to buy something so valueless as not to be worth buying at any price. Such a scheme was very clearly a lottery, within any of the definitions hereinbefore given. Horner v. United States, 147 U. S. 449, 37 L. ed. 237, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 409, was also a case in which the element of certainty went hand in hand with the element of chance, and the court held that the former did not destroy the existence or effect of the latter. Taylor v. Smetten, L. R. 11 Q. B. Div. 207, was a case where the defendant sold packets, each containing a pound of tea, at 2s. 6d. a packet. In each packet was a coupon entitling the purchaser to a prize, and this was publicly stated by the defendant before the sale; but the purchasers did not know until after the sale what prizes they were entitled to, and the prizes varied in character and value. It was held that the transaction amounted to a lottery, under Stat. 42 Geo. 48 L. R. A.

III. chap. 119, § 2. In that case it clearly appears that the purchaser bought the tea, coupled with the chance of getting something of value by way of a prize, but without any knowledge of what the prize might be. "In making his purchase," as said by the court, "he exercised no choice—what he got, he got without any option or action of his own will, but as the result of mere chance or accident." In Reg. v. Harris, 10 Cox, C. C. 352, the element of chance was manifestly present. In State v. Lumsden, 89 N. C. 572, the defendant sold to customers small boxes of candy, of trifling value, for the chance or opportunity of designating one of certain pictures, conveniently arranged in his place of business, behind some of which were small sums of money, and behind others a card on which was the title "C," the purchaser getting either the money or the card, accordingly as he might select; but, if he got a card, he became entitled to another box of candy. This was held, as undoubtedly it should have been, to constitute a lottery. Lynch v. Rosenthal, 144 Ind. 86, 31 L. R. A. 836, 42 N. E. 1103, and Davenport v. Ottawa, 54 Kan. 711, 39 Pac. 708, are cases where the element of chance is so manifestly present and controlling as to require no comment. Lansburgh v. District of Columbia, 11 App. D. C. 512, is more nearly in point than any of the others relied on in support of the act, but is not controlling. The statute under which that case was brought prohibited any gift enterprise in the District, and the court held that dealing in trading stamps in the manner shown by the evidence brought the acts of the defendant within the statutory definition of a gift enterprise. The court suggested, however, that it was possible that the statute might not be operative in a case where the sale of a lawful article was accompanied by a gift of something specific and certain, not attended with any element of chance, and where the gift was not the real object of the sale, in an attempt to evade acts regulating or prohibiting a particular traffic. In so far as the opinion—which is a very vigorous one—condemns the trading-stamp business it describes, we are not disposed to differ therefrom. Humes v. Fort Smith, 93 Fed. Rep. 857, holds that the state may provide that gift enterprises shall be licensed, or may, under the police power, prohibit them altogether. The case is similar to and follows the Lansburgh Case, 11 App. D. C. 512. Among the cases to which we have been referred by defendant's counsel as supporting their contention that the transaction prohibited by the act is not in the nature of a lottery, those of People v. Gillson, 109 N. Y. 389, 17 N. E. 343, Ex parte McKenna, 126 Cal. 429, 58 Pac. 916, and Long v. State, 74 Md. 565, 12 L. R. A. 425, 22 Atl. 4, are most nearly in point, and, on principle, sustain the position we have taken.

Having thus come to the conclusion that the act cannot be sustained as being a valid exercise of the police power, it becomes unnecessary to consider the other point taken by the defendant, namely, that the act is obnoxious to the 14th Amendment, as being class legislation.

In order that we may not be misunderstood in the position which we feel compelled to take regarding the case before us, we deem it proper to say that we do not approve of the trading-stamp business, as some of the cases above referred to inform us it is conducted, although there is no evidence before us concerning it; nor do we decide that it is not competent for the general assembly to prohibit it. What we do decide is that the statute in question is so broad as to interfere with the right of an individual to deal with his own property in his own way,—that is to say, to make such contracts regarding the sale and disposition thereof as he shall see fit,—so long as he observes the rule that each one shall so use and enjoy his own property as not to injure that of another person, and also the further rule that his use of it shall not be injurious to the community, and hence is not a valid exercise of the legislative power.

Alice S. PITTS et al.

v.

RHODE ISLAND HOSPITAL TRUST COMPANY.

(.....R. L.....)

An allowance necessary for the maintenance of an infant may be ordered by a court of equity out of the income of a trust in the residue of an estate, created by a will giving the trustee discretion to apply a portion of such income to the education of the infant, but making no provision for his maintenance, where the mother of the infant is the only other person entitled to any part of the income, and she joins in a request for the allowance.

(February 9, 1900.)

BILL to obtain an allowance for the maintenance of an infant out of an estate created for his benefit. Granted.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. George T. Brown, for complainants:

The law favors vesting, and if the intention be doubtful, a legacy will, if possible, be held to be vested rather than contingent.

Rogers v. Rogers, 11 R. I. 38; Wengerd's Estate, 143 Pa. 615, 13 L. R. A. 360, 22 Atl. 869.

The fact that the testator allows the child the interest on the general fund for his education at once, in the discretion of the trustee, and the principal thereof when he attains certain ages, and both the principal and interest of the $3,500 fund when he arrives at the age of fourteen, shows he recognizes him as the owner of the whole fund.

Rogers v. Rogers, 11 R. I. 38; Popham v. Banfield, 1 Salk. 236; Albee v. Carpenter, 12 Cush. 382.

Where a gift over of personal estate has been maintained, it is where the gift to the first taker is by the terms of the bequest not exceeding a gift for life.

Jackson ex dem. Brewster v. Bull, 10 Johns. 19.

If an absolute property is given to the first taker by the express or implied terms of the will, the limitation over is void.

Hall v. Palmer, 87 Va. 354, 11 L. R. A. 610; Ramsdell v. Ramsdell, 21 Me. 288; Stowell v. Hastings, 59 Vt. 494, 59 Am. Rep. 748, 8 Atl. 738; Jauretoche v. Proctor, 48 Pa. 466; Ides v. Ides, 5 Mass. 500; Bacon v. Woodward, 12 Gray, 376; Woodrum v. Kirkpatrick, 2 Swan, 218; Atty. Gen. v. Hall, Fitzgibbons, 314; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 1067a.

The gift over is void for uncertainty.

2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 1073.

Messrs. Tillinghast & Tillinghast for respondent.

Matteson, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The purpose of the bill is to obtain an allowance for the maintenance of an infant out of his estate. The case is as follows: Charles F. Pitts died in Providence on September 20, 1894, leaving a will, which was duly admitted to probate. The complainants, Alice S. Pitts and William Franklin Pitts, are, respectively, the widow of the deceased and his only child, now about 6½ years of age, and the former is also guardian of the person and estate of the latter. By the third clause of the will, certain unimproved real estate was devised to the widow, which she has sold, so far as she has been able, and the proceeds of which amount to $1,785. This sum she has expended in the necessary support of herself and child. Besides this unimproved real estate devised to the widow in fee, certain other improved real estate, situated in Providence and Cranston, was devised to her for life, with a remainder in fee to the child. This estate is valued at $12,000, and the income therefrom, when fully rented, amounts to $600 per annum, but by reason of the fact that some of the tenements have been vacant a part of the time, the payment of taxes and water rates, assessments for curbing and concreting of the sidewalks, the laying of drains, plumbing, piping, and other expenses for repairs and improvements on the property, its income has been wholly inadequate for the support of the complainants, and they were unable to pay the taxes assessed against the property in Providence, including an assessment for curbing for the year 1898; and portions of this real estate were in June, 1899, sold for the payment of such tax and the tax assessed against the same for the year 1899, and the water rates for the same year are now in arrears, and the collector of taxes of the city of Providence threatens to levy on the estate, and to cut off the water supply, unless the tax and water rates are paid. The complainants allege that they have exhausted their resources to support themselves and to pay these taxes and expenses, and to this end the said Alice has mortgaged her household furniture, and the mortgagee has threatened to foreclose the mortgage. The respondent, the Rhode Island Hospital Trust Company, was, by the will, appointed trustee of the estate of the minor, except the fee in the real estate, which was subject to the widow's life estate; and under the seventh clause of the will there is now in its hands as trustee the sum of $3,500, and also the net accumulated income to this time, amounting to $374.52, which fund and accumulated interest is directed by the will to be applied from time to time, in the discretion of the president for the time being of the trustee, for the necessary maintenance and proper education of said child after he shall have attained the age of fourteen years. The respondent also holds as trustee the residue of the estate and property given to it by the will, the principal of which, at the present estimated value of the investments thereof, amounts to $16,910.14. The income of this second fund under the provisions of the will may be applied, in the discretion of the trustee, for the education of the child, but there is no provision for its application to his maintenance. From the income of the second fund the trustee has paid over from time to time to the complainant Alice, as guardian of the infant William, $50 annually to be applied to the proper education of the infant, as by the will directed; this sum being, in the discretion of the trustees and officers of the respondent under the trusts of the will, a liberal allowance for the purpose, considering the age of the infant. The respondent and its officers do not consider that it has or they have any right or discretion to apply the income of the second fund to any other purpose than the education of the infant, though, had they deemed that they had such right or discretion, the respondent admits that in the straitened circumstances of the complainants, as from time to time represented to its officers, it and they would have gladly applied the residue of the income of the second fund to the relief of the complainants. The accumulated net income of this portion of the estate now in the possession of the respondent is $528.85. By the eighth clause of the will the principal of the trust estate in the hands of the respondent, except the fund of $3,500, is to be kept intact until distributed as follows: One tenth of the principal, with the accumulations thereof, to the said child when he shall have attained the age of twenty-one years; one tenth when he shall have attained the age of twenty-five years; one tenth when he shall have attained the age of thirty years; and the remainder when he shall have attained the age of thirty-five years. By the third clause of the will, in the event of the decease of the child during the lifetime of the widow, and before attaining the age specified, the entire income of the estate is given to the widow during her natural life. Subject to these dispositions of his estate, the testator, in the event of the death of his son before attaining the specified age of thirty-five, leaving no issue surviving, gives and devises the principal of the residue of his estate to Mabel Ingalls, and, in the event that she has deceased, to his heirs at law. The bill prays that the trustee may be decreed to pay over to the guardian of the infant, for his proper support, maintenance, and education, the total amount of the accrued interest in the estate in its hands, and also to pay over to her such interest as shall accrue in the future, and such portions of the principal of the trust fund for the same purpose as to the court shall seem meet, and for general relief.

NOTE.—For jurisdiction of court of equity to sell infant's lands, see Roche v. Waters (Md.) 7 L. R. A. 533; Wilson v. Hughes (W. Va.) 39 L. R. A. 202; Richards v. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. (Ga.) 45 L. R. A. 712.

For jurisdiction to authorize mortgage of infant's property, see Warren v. Union Bank (N. Y.) 43 L. R. A. 256.
48 L. R. A.

To provide for the maintenance of infants out of their personal and the income of their real estate is an old and well-recognized branch of equity jurisdiction. Maintenance may be allowed, not only in cases in which the will does not authorize an allowance, as in the present instance, but also where it expressly directs an accumulation of the income. It is essential, however, to the granting of the application, that the infant should have such an absolute title or interest in the property or its income that the right of no other person will be affected by the allowance. Unless he has such an interest, the consent of any person entitled in remainder, whose estate may be diminished in value by the allowance, must be had before the application will be entertained. Greenwell v. Greenwell, 5 Ves. Jr. 195; Ex parte Kibble, 11 Ves. Jr. 606; Errington v. Chapman, 12 Ves. Jr. 20; Errat v. Barlow, 14 Ves. Jr. 202; Marshall v. Holloway, 2 Swanst. 432; Macpherson, Infants, *232-234; Beach, Tr. §§ 350, 357; Allowances for Maintenance of Infants, 11 Alb. L. J. 205. In view of these principles, we have reached the conclusion, after some hesitancy, that the bill makes a case for relief in so far as it asks for an allowance for the maintenance of the infant out of the income of the residue of the estate in the hands of the respondent. It was the evident intent of the testator that the income, at least, of this fund should be applied—First, to the benefit of his son, so far as it might be needed for his education; and, second, in case of his death before attaining the ages specified, when he was to receive the principal, the entire income should be paid to the widow, if living, during her life. No one else is entitled to any part of the income; for the gifts over, which are made expressly subject to the prior provisions for the benefit of the son and widow, are limited to the principal of the residue, thereby clearly excluding the accumulations of income. The widow, then, is the only person besides the son whose interest will be affected by any allowance to be made, and she has joined in the bill asking for the allowance. Though the will limits the application of the income of the residue of the estate to the education of the son, it is difficult to see how it can be made available for that purpose unless it be also applied to his maintenance. The other provisions of the will which the testator made for the support of his widow and son not being adequate,—as he doubtless supposed they would be,—this income must be applied to the son's maintenance as well as his education; for, unless he can be properly supported, he will be in no condition to be profited by the education. We will hear the parties further as to the extent of the allowance to be made.

SOUTH DAKOTA SUPREME COURT.

NATIONAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY of Montpelier, Vermont, Appt.,
v.

Corwin D. MEAD, Treasurer of Pierre, Respt.

(.....S. D.....)

1. The issuance of bonds to fund the floating indebtedness of a city, where the electors have voted therefor, is authorized by Laws 1890, chap. 87, art. 5, § 1, authorizing a city council to borrow money on the city's credit for municipal purposes, and issue bonds therefor on a majority vote of the electors.
2. Certificates signed by the mayor, auditor, and attorney of a city, stating what steps had been taken preliminary to the issuing of certain bonds and as to the financial condition of the city, though used by the person who negotiated the bonds, are inadmissible in an action thereon to create an estoppel against the city's asserting that the bonds were in excess of the limit of the city's indebtedness, when the making of such a statement was not within the scope of the official duty of the officers making it.
3. A recital in city bonds as to the amount of indebtedness of the city does not create an estoppel against showing that the indebtedness was greater, when the statutes require the public records of the city to show the amount of the existing indebtedness as well as the amount of the taxable property.
4. Bonds issued for the purpose of refunding an existing indebtedness are not to be regarded as creating any new or additional indebtedness, and should not be considered in determining whether or not a city had reached or exceeded its constitutional debt limit.

(March 2, 1900.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Hughes County in favor of defendant in a mandamus proceeding to compel the payment of certain interest coupons on bonds issued by the city of Pierre. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Horner & Stewart for appellant.

Messrs. Dillon & Sutherland, and Ivan W. Goodner, for respondent:

A purchaser of bonds was charged with the duty of examining the records of indebtedness, in order to ascertain whether the bonds were lawfully issued.

NOTE.—As to change of form of indebtedness as constituting a new debt, see note to Beard v. Hopkinsville (Ky.) 23 L. R. A. on page 407.
48 L. R. A.

Sutliff v. Lake County Comrs. 147 U. S. 230, 37 L. ed. 145, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 318; Brown v. Bon Homme County, 1 S. D. 210, 46 N. W. 173; Swan v. Arkansas City, 61 Fed. Rep. 478.

There must be express authority, granted by the legislature, to issue them, before the city can issue bonds of any character.

Such purposes, and such only, as are germane to the object of the welfare of the municipality, at least such as have a legitimate connection with their objects, are corporate purposes.

People ex rel. Cairo & St. L. R. Co. v. Dupuyt, 71 Ill. 651; People ex rel. Cairo & St. L. R. Co. v. Trustees of Schools, 78 Ill. 136.

Municipal corporations possess only such powers as are expressly given, or implied because essential to carry into effect such as are expressly granted.

Barnett v. Denison, 145 U. S. 135, 36 L. ed. 652, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 819; Ottawa v. Carey, 108 U. S. 121, 27 L. ed. 674, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 361; Leep v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 58 Ark. 407, 23 L. R. A. 264, 25 S. W. 75; Brenham v. German American Bank, 144 U. S. 173, 36 L. ed. 390, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 559; Hill v. Memphis, 134 U. S. 198, 33 L. ed. 887, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 562.

The city is not estopped by the recitals in the bonds.

Doon Twp. v. Cummins, 142 U. S. 366, 35 L. ed. 1044, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 220; Sutliff v. Lake County Comrs. 147 U. S. 230, 37 L. ed. 145, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 318; Lake County v. Graham, 130 U. S. 674, 32 L. ed. 1065, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 654; Hedges v. Dixon County, 150 U. S. 182, 37 L. ed. 1044, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 71; Lake County v. Rollins, 130 U. S. 662, 32 L. ed. 1060, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 651; Dixon County v. Field, 111 U. S. 83, 28 L. ed. 360, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 315; Swan v. Arkansas City, 61 Fed. Rep. 478; Brown v. Bon Homme County, 1 S. D. 216, 46 N. W. 173; Barnett v. Denison, 145 U. S. 135, 36 L. ed. 652, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 819; National Bank of Commerce v. Granada, 10 U. S. App. 692, 54 Fed. Rep. 100, 4 C. C. A. 212; Shaw v. Independent School Dist. 77 Fed. Rep. 277, 40 U. S. App. 475, 23 C. C. A. 169; Litchfield v. Ballou, 114 U. S. 190, 29 L. ed. 132, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 820; Buchanan v. Litchfield, 102 U. S. 279, 26 L. ed. 138; Flagg v. School Dist. No. 70, 4 N. D. 30, 25 L. R. A. 363, 58 N. W. 504.

By the issue of the bonds the debt was increased to the amount of the bonds.

Doon Twp. v. Cummins, 142 U. S. 366, 35 L. ed. 1044, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 220; State ex rel. Marinette, T. & W. R. Co. v. Tomahawk, 96 Wis. 73, 71 N. W. 86; Birkholz v. Dinne, 6 N. D. 511, 72 N. W. 931.

The bonds are not only invalid because they exceed the constitutional limit, but are a nullity also because they are not in the terms of the ordinance upon which they are based.

Risley v. Howell, 57 Fed. Rep. 544.

Even bona fide purchasers of negotiable municipal securities are charged with knowledge of all the requirements of the statute under which the securities were issued.

People ex rel. Kern County v. Baker, 83 Cal. 149, 23 Pac. 364, 1112.

On petition for rehearing.

The indebtedness of the board of education should be included as a part of the city's debt in arriving at the total amount of the city indebtedness.

When the Constitution of a state imposes upon the municipal corporations within it a limitation of their power to incur debts, it is not within the power of the legislature of the state to dispense with that limitation, either directly or indirectly.

Lake County v. Graham, 130 U. S. 674, 32 L. ed. 1065, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 654; Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. § 529a; Hainer, Modern Law of Municipal Securities (1898) § 227; Litchfield v. Ballou, 114 U. S. 192, 29 L. ed. 133, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 821; Doon Twp. v. Cummins, 142 U. S. 366, 35 L. ed. 1044, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 220.

The board of education is a mere incident of the city, and not a separate political entity, exercising the powers of government independently of the city.

State ex rel. Power v. Power, 5 S. D. 627, 59 N. W. 1090; Atchison Bd. of Edu. v. DeKay, 148 U. S. 591, 37 L. ed. 573, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 700; Orvis v. Des Moines Park Comrs. 88 Iowa, 674, 56 N. W. 294; Kelly v. Minneapolis, 63 Minn. 125, 30 L. R. A. 281, 65 N. W. 117; McGurn v. Chicago Bd. of Edu. 133 Ill. 135, 24 N. E. 529; McGovern v. Fairchild, 2 Wash. 479, 27 Pac. 173; Wilcoxon v. Bluffton, 153 Ind. 267, 54 N. E. 110.

Haney, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This proceeding was instituted to compel defendant, as treasurer of the city of Pierre, to pay certain interest coupons. A trial, by the court, of the issues raised by an alternative writ of mandamus and answer, resulted in a judgment of dismissal, and the plaintiff appealed. October 1, 1890, the city, for value received, executed and delivered to various parties 200 funding bonds, each for $500, numbered consecutively from 1 to 200, inclusive, with interest coupons attached, containing the following recitals: "This bond is one of a series of bonds, amounting to one hundred thousand dollars, issued for the purpose of funding the outstanding indebtedness of the city, in pursuance of the general incorporation laws of the state of South Dakota, approved March sixth, 1890, adopted by said city, and an ordinance of said city of Pierre entitled 'An Ordinance to Issue Bonds for the Purpose of Funding and Paying the Outstanding Indebtedness of the City of Pierre,' approved August fifth, 1890, and a vote of the electors in favor of issuing said bonds, by a majority of the legal votes cast at a special election duly held in said city on the sixteenth day of September, 1890."

October 1, 1891, the city, for value received, executed and delivered to various parties 300 funding bonds, each for $500, numbered consecutively from 1 to 300, inclusive, with interest coupons attached, containing the following recitals: "This bond is one of a series of bonds amounting to one hundred and fifty thousand dollars, issued for the purpose of funding and paying the outstanding indebtedness of the city, in pursuance of the general incorporation laws of the state of South Dakota and an ordinance of said city of Pierre entitled 'An Ordinance to Issue Bonds for the Purpose of Funding and Paying the Outstanding Indebtedness of the City of Pierre, South Dakota,' approved July twenty-eighth, 1891, and a vote of the electors in favor of issuing said bonds, by a majority of the legal votes cast at a special election duly held in the said city on the eighth day of September, 1891."

Plaintiff is the bona fide holder of coupons cut from bonds belonging to both issues. Collection is resisted on the ground that the city was without power to issue funding bonds, and that when these were issued the city debt exceeded the constitutional limit. The statute referred to in the bonds gave the city council power: "To borrow money on the credit of the corporation for corporate purposes, and issue bonds therefor, in such amounts and forms, and on such conditions as it shall prescribe, but shall not become indebted in any manner or for any purpose to any amount including existing indebtedness, in the aggregate to exceed five (5) per centum on the value of the taxable property therein, to be ascertained by the last assessment for state and county taxes previous to the incurring of such indebtedness; and before or at the time of incurring any indebtedness, shall provide for the collection of a direct annual tax sufficient to pay the interest on such debt as it falls due, and also to pay and discharge the principal thereof within twenty years after contracting the same: provided, no bonds shall be issued by the said city council under the provisions of this act either for general or special purposes unless at an election after twenty days' notice in a newspaper published in the city, stating the purpose for which said bonds are to be issued and the amount thereof, the legal voters of said city by a majority shall be determined in favor of issuing said bonds." Laws 1890, chap. 37, art. 5, § 1.

It will be observed that this law gives express power to borrow money by issuing bonds for corporate purposes. Did this confer power to issue bonds for the purpose of funding floating indebtedness? An affirmative answer to this inquiry is supported by the following decisions: Morris v. Taylor, 31 Or. 62, 49 Pac. 660; Huron v. Second Ward Sav. Bank, 57 U. S. App. 593, 86 Fed. Rep. 272, 30 C. C. A. 38; Portland Sav. Bank v. Eunsville, 25 Fed. Rep. 389. The authorities cited by defendant's counsel do not sustain a different view. In Brenham v. German American Bank, 144 U. S. 173, 36 L. ed. 390, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 559, there was only express power to borrow for corporate purposes, and a majority of the court held that power to issue negotiable bonds could not be implied. So, in Hill v. Memphis, 134 U. S. 198, 33 L. ed. 887, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 562, express power to issue bonds was wanting, and the court decided that the power did not exist by implication. Here, however, the statute expressly makes the power to issue bonds coextensive with the power to borrow money. Either may be exercised for any corporate purpose; and the payment of legal municipal debts is clearly a corporate purpose. If a city has power to borrow money by issuing bonds, for the purpose of lighting its streets, it clearly has power to borrow money in the same manner to pay an indebtedness incurred for the same purpose. Had the legislature contemplated there would be no floating indebtedness under any circumstances, cities would have been authorized to borrow only for the purpose of paying outstanding bonds. We think the city was authorized to issue bonds for the purpose of funding its indebtedness.

Evidence was received upon the trial tending to prove that the person employed by the city to dispose of these bonds was furnished with certain statements of fact, or certificates, concerning its action preceding their execution, and its financial condition at that time, signed by its mayor, auditor, and attorney. This evidence was properly disregarded by the trial court in making its decision. If such statements or certificates were used, the city would not be estopped from pleading an indebtedness in excess of the statutory or constitutional limitation, because the execution of such certificates was without the line of official duty and beyond the scope of official authority. The certificate of a public officer not authorized by law to make it has no more effect than that of a private person. Meyer v. School Dist. No. 31, 4 S. D. 420, 57 N. W. 68. The distinction between bonds which contain no reference to the Constitution, or any statement that the constitutional requirements were observed, and those which expressly recite that its limitation of indebtedness has not been passed, has been plainly pointed out by the United States Supreme Court. Lake County v. Graham, 130 U. S. 674, 32 L. ed. 1065, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 654; Chaffee County v. Potter, 142 U. S. 355, 35 L. ed. 1040, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 216. The bonds in this case contain no reference to the Constitution, but they do recite that they are issued "in pursuance of"—that is, in accordance with—"the general incorporation laws approved March sixth, 1890," the limitations of which, as to indebtedness, are as broad as the limitations of the Constitution. Therefore the recitals are in legal effect equivalent to a representation, on the part of the city officers, that the indebtedness incurred, including that then existing, did not exceed the 5 per centum prescribed by both the statute and Constitution (Laws 1890, supra; Const. art. 13, § 4; Buchanan v. Litchfield, 102 U. S. 278, 26 L. ed. 138); and it becomes proper to determine to what extent the city is estopped by such recitals, as against a purchaser in good faith and for value. The rule is well settled that a purchaser of negotiable municipal bonds is held to know the constitutional and statutory provisions and restrictions bearing on the authority to issue them; also the recitals of the bonds he buys; while, on the other hand, if he act in good faith and pay value, he is entitled to be protected by the recital of any fact the existence of which the officers who executed them were authorized and required to ascertain and determine before issuing the bonds. Dixon County v. Field, 111 U. S. 83, 28 L. ed. 360, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 315; Lake County v. Graham, 130 U. S. 674, 32 L. ed. 1065, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 654; Sutliff v. Lake County Comrs., 147 U. S. 230, 37 L. ed. 145, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 318; Gunnison County Comrs. v. E. H. Rollins & Sons, 173 U. S. 255, 43 L. ed. 689, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 390. Applying this rule to the issue of 1890, the plaintiff, although a purchaser in good faith and for value, was bound to know that the city was without power to become indebted in any manner, or for any purpose, to any amount, including existing indebtedness, in the aggregate to exceed 5 per centum on the value of the taxable property therein; he was also bound to know from the recitals of each bond that the entire issue aggregated $100,000; and he was bound to know the value of taxable property in the city, as ascertained by the 1890 assessment, for state and county taxes. Dixon County v. Field, 111 U. S. 83, 28 L. ed. 360, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 315; Laws 1890, supra. The amount of bonds and the assessed value of taxable property being known, the ratio between the two is fixed by an arithmetical calculation, and the only remaining factor is the amount of existing indebtedness. Although the territorial boundaries of the city and school districts are coincident, the debts of the latter cannot be included in determining whether the debts of the former exceed the statutory or constitutional limit. Wilson v. Huron Bd. of Edu. (S. D.) 81 N. W. 952. Five per centum on the value of the taxable property in the city was $161,144.40; therefore the bonds did not in themselves exceed the limit. Construing the bonds as in effect reciting that there was not sufficient existing indebtedness to make the aggregate exceed the limitation, the question arises whether defendant is estopped thereby from showing the amount of actual existing indebtedness. The number of cases, involving the law of recitals in municipal bonds, which constantly reach the courts of last resort, both state and Federal, indicate that the principles applicable to such paper have not, so far, been determined with satisfactory certainty. An examination of the adjudications will show that one of the chief causes of contention has resulted from the failure or inability of the courts to clearly define the distinction between those facts of the existence of which the person must take notice and those the existence of which is conclusively established by recitals. The doctrine announced in Dixon County v. Field, 111 U. S. 83, 28 L. ed. 360, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 315, a leading case on the subject, has been frequently reaffirmed by the Federal Supreme Court, and followed by state courts in numerous decisions. It is not modified by Chaffee County v. Potter, 142 U. S. 355, 35 L. ed. 1040, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 216, because in that case the statute, in terms, gave to the commissioners the determination of the amount of indebtedness. Gunnison County Comrs. v. E. H. Rollins & Sons, 173 U. S. 255, 43 L. ed. 689, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 390. In Sutliff v. Lake County Comrs. 147 U. S. 230, 37 L. ed. 145, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 318, where the statute made it the duty of the county commissioners to publish and to cause to be entered on their records, open to the inspection of the public, semiannual statements exhibiting in detail the debts, expenditures, and receipts of the county for the preceding six months, and striking the balance, so as to show the amount of any deficit, and the balance in the treasury, the Federal Supreme Court says: "In those cases in which this court has held a municipal corporation to be estopped by recitals in its bonds to assert that they were issued in excess of the limit imposed by the Constitution or statutes of the state, the statutes, as construed by the court, left it to the officers issuing the bonds to determine whether the facts existed which constituted the statutory or constitutional condition precedent, and did not require those facts to be made a matter of public record. Marcy v. Oswego Twp. 92 U. S. 637, 23 L. ed. 748; Humboldt Twp. v. Long, 92 U. S. 642, 23 L. ed. 752; Dixon County v. Field, 111 U. S. 83, 28 L. ed. 360, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 315; Lake County v. Graham, 130 U. S. 874, 882, 32 L. ed. 1065, 1067, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 654; Chaffee County v. Potter, 142 U. S. 355, 363, 35 L. ed. 1040, 1043, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 216. But if the statute expressly requires those facts to be made a matter of public record, open to the inspection of everyone, there can be no implication that it was intended to leave that matter to be determined and concluded, contrary to the facts so recorded, by the officers charged with the duty of issuing the bonds."

The statute under which the bonds in suit were issued provides that the city auditor shall keep regular books of account, in which he shall enter all indebtedness of the city, which shall at all times show the financial condition of the city, the amount of bonds, orders, certificates, or other evidences of indebtedness issued by the city council; the amount of all bonds, orders, certificates, or other evidences of indebtedness which had been redeemed, and the amount of each outstanding; that he shall countersign all bonds, orders, or other evidences of indebtedness of the city, and keep accurate accounts thereof, stating to whom and for what purpose issued, and the amount thereof; that he shall report to the city council on the first days of March and September of each year the receipts and expenses and financial condition of the city, which report shall be published within thirty days thereafter in the official paper of the city, or such other paper as the council may direct; that the books so required to be kept shall be open to the inspection of all parties interested. Therefore, in the case at bar, as in Sutliff v. Lake County Comrs. 147 U. S. 230, 37 L. ed. 145, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 318, there were two facts required by the statute to be entered on the public records of the city, of which all the world is bound to take notice, and as to which the city cannot be concluded by any recitals in the bonds, namely, the value of the taxable property and the amount of existing indebtedness. As found by the trial court, the existing indebtedness on October 1, 1890, exclusive of school debt and bonds issued on that day, consisted of the following items: Bonds issued September 1, 1885, $5,000; bonds issued June 1, 1889, $15,000; bonds issued July 1, 1889, $25,000; and warrants $178,000,—aggregating $223,000. But plaintiff contends that whereas, the bonds in suit were issued for the purpose of funding and paying existing indebtedness, no new or additional debt was incurred, and that therefore such bonds are valid. Regarding the disposal of the 1890 bonds the court below finds that they were made, executed, and delivered to various parties, for value received, on the day they bear date. As the burden of proof was upon defendant to show illegality, we should infer that they were exchanged for an equal amount of outstanding indebtedness, if such inference is required to sustain their validity; "delivery to various parties for value received" being entirely consistent with such a conclusion. But, as it might appear upon a retrial that they were not disposed of in that manner, it is proper to consider the other and more frequent method of funding existing indebtedness. It has been held by the courts of last resort in Wyoming, Montana, California, Kansas, Maine, Indiana, New York, and perhaps other states, that, where bonds are sold for the purpose of applying the proceeds to the payment of pre-existing indebtedness, there is merely a change in the evidences of such indebtedness and no increase thereof. Miller v. School Dist. No. 9 (Wyo.) 39 Pac. 879; Palmer v. Helena, 19 Mont. 61, 47 Pac. 209; Los Angeles v. Teed, 112 Cal. 319, 44 Pac. 580; Marion County Comrs. v. Harvey County Comrs. 26 Kan. 181; Opinion of the Justices, 81 Me. 603, 18 Atl. 291; Powell v. Madison, 107 Ind. 106, 8 N. E. 31; Poughkeepsie v. Quintard, 136 N. Y. 275, 32 N. E. 764. On the other hand, the Supreme Court of the United States distinguishes the two methods, and holds that, where the bonds are sold for the purpose of applying the proceeds, there is an increase of indebtedness to the extent of the new issue. Justices Brown, Harlan, and Brewer dissenting. Doon Twp. v. Cummings, 142 U. S. 366, 35 L. ed. 1044, 12 Sup. Ct.

Rep. 220. North Dakota follows this decision, while California expressly declines to do so, and the United States circuit court of appeals in the eighth circuit says: "The distinction seems to be more nice than real, and, in view of the vigorous dissent which is recorded with the opinion, we may be permitted to doubt whether it will ever be made again." Huron v. Second Ward Sav. Bank, 57 U. S. App. 593, 86 Fed. 272, 30 C. C. A. 38; Los Angeles v. Teed, 112 Cal. 319, 44 Pac. 580; Birkholz v. Dinnie, 6 N. D. 511, 72 N. W. 931.

Doubtless the constitutional provision under discussion was designed to confine municipal indebtedness within prescribed limits, but it could hardly have been intended or expected to prevent embezzlement or misappropriation of public funds. In ascertaining its scope and purpose, courts are not required to assume that municipal officers are always, or even usually, dishonest. The contrary should be presumed. Where the proceeds of funding bonds are properly applied, the transaction may in form be a borrowing of money, but in substance it is not different from what it would be had there been an exchange of bonds for other evidences of debt. The contemplated purpose and actual result are the same. The municipal liability is not increased, but merely suffered to remain. Poughkeepsie v. Quintard, 136 N. Y. 275, 32 N. E. 764. The argument that the indebtedness is instantly increased by the delivery of funding bonds, unless an equal amount of outstanding obligations is thereby extinguished, is without force where, as in this jurisdiction, available resources or assets may be considered in determining when additional indebtedness is created. Re State Warrants, 6 S. D. 518, 62 N. W. 101; Western Town-Lot Co. v. Lane, 7 S. D. 599, 65 N. W. 17. The delivery of funding bonds, when sold at par, operates as an exchange of paper promises to pay for an equal amount of money instantly available for the extinguishment of an equal amount of other promises to pay. Assuming that this money remains in the treasury until used for the purpose intended, there is no moment of time when the financial condition of the city is in any substantial manner affected. Notice to holders of matured obligations stops the running of interest, and the city, with the proceeds of its funding bonds on hand, is in as good position as it would be if in possession of the evidences of its paid obligations duly canceled. If the proceeds be misapplied, of course the debt will be increased, provided the bonds be held valid. May not the other method produce equally serious consequences? Should the officer authorized to exchange new for old bonds, disregarding his official duty, accept money instead of outstanding obligations, and should the bonds thus placed upon the market fall into the hands of bona fide purchasers, the city debt would be increased or innocent parties made to suffer. Extravagant or corrupt officers may successfully employ either method to increase taxation or defraud bona fide creditors. Such creditors should never be made to suffer by reason of the misappropriation of funds actually received by officers of the municipality. The legitimate object of issuing funding bonds is to meet the demands of creditors entitled to payment, or to reduce the interest on fundable obligations. By terms of such obligations the city may have a right to pay, but cannot compel an exchange for bonds bearing a less rate of interest, and where the constitutional limit has been reached or passed, if the exchange method only is permitted, a reduction of interest is impossible. Although the proposition is not free from difficulty, we are inclined to hold that the issuing of funding bonds should not be regarded as creating any new or additional indebtedness, within the meaning of the statutory or constitutional limitation applicable to this action. While the decision of this court in Mitchell v. Smith (S. D.) 80 N. W. 1077, does not extend so far as we go in this case, the result reached therein is in harmony with the views now expressed, after a more careful and thorough examination of the questions involved. Assuming, as we must, from the record in this case, that the city was owing legal, fundable debts to an amount in excess of the bonds issued October 1, 1890, it having authority to issue such bonds for the purpose of funding such indebtedness, and the issuing of such bonds not having created any new or additional indebtedness, within the meaning of the statutory or constitutional limitation, the conclusion follows that such bonds are valid; and the defendant, having sufficient funds on hand collected for that purpose, should be commanded to pay the amount due to plaintiff upon his coupons cut from the 1890 bonds. The bonds of 1891 contained substantially the same recitals, and were issued under the same authority, and negotiated in the same manner as those of 1890. On October 1, 1891, 5 per centum on the value of taxable property within the city was $301,104.20. The indebtedness, exclusive of school debt, consisted of these items: Bonds issued September 1, 1885, $5,000; bonds issued June 1, 1889, $15,000; bonds issued July 1, 1890, $25,000; bonds issued October 1, 1890 (heretofore considered), $100,000; and warrants $212,128.48,—making a total indebtedness of $357,128.48. As the city had authority to fund its floating indebtedness, as it does not affirmatively appear that any of the outstanding warrants were illegal, as the amount of such warrants exceeded the amount of bonds issued on that day, and as the bonds then issued did not create any new or additional indebtedness, within the meaning of the statutory or constitutional limitation, it follows that such bonds are valid; and the defendant, having on hand sufficient funds collected by taxation for that purpose, should be commanded to pay the amount due plaintiff upon his coupons cut from such bonds.

The judgment of the Circuit Court is reversed, and a new trial ordered.

Opinion adhered to after rehearing.

UTAH SUPREME COURT.

UNION REFRIGERATOR TRANSIT COMPANY, Appt., v.Stephen H. LYNCH, Treasurer of Salt Lake County, Respnt.

(18 Utah, 378.)

- *1. Railway cars owned by a Kentucky corporation having no place of business in this state, leased to various shippers, but coming into or passing through, and doing business in, this state, have, for the purposes of taxation, a situs in this state.
- *2. Section 2, art. 13, of the state Constitution, and §§ 1, 55, and 56 of an act of the legislature approved April 5, 1896 (Sess. Laws 1896, p. 423), authorize a tax upon such property found within the jurisdiction of this state; and, although the cars may have been employed in interstate commerce, the tax is not a regulation of interstate commerce, and is not prohibited by the Constitution or laws of the United States.
- *3. The true meaning and intent of a statute are to be ascertained from the whole purview, and, to ascertain such meaning and intent, the court will punctuate, or disregard punctuation, as may be necessary.

(December 10, 1898.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the District Court for Salt Lake County in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover back money paid under protest as taxes assessed against plaintiff's property. Affirmed.

Statement by Bartch, J.:

This action was brought by the Union Refrigerator Transit Company against the collector of taxes for Salt Lake county to recover a certain sum of money paid him, as tax, under protest; the company claiming that the tax was illegal. It was alleged in the complaint that the plaintiff is a corporation organized under the laws of the state of Kentucky, having its principal office and place of business in the city of Louisville, in that state, and engaged exclusively in the business of furnishing to shippers refrigerator cars for the transportation of perishable freight over various lines of railroad throughout the United States; that its cars have not been, during any of the time in which it has been engaged in business, let, leased, run, or furnished under contract with any railroad company or carrier of freight, or run on any particular lines of railroad, or confined to any particular routes or trains, or at any specified or agreed times, but have been run indiscriminately over the lines of railroad which the consignors of freight shipped in them chose to route them in shipping; that the business in which the cars were engaged was exclusively interstate commerce; that the plaintiff has not, and had not at any time, an office or place of business within the state of Utah; that all the freight transported in the cars into and through this state was transported from points in another state, within the United States, to points within this state, or vice versa, or between points none of which were within the state of Utah, the cars merely passing through this state; that the cars were in this state at no regular intervals and in no regular number, and when within this state were only within it in transit, except to load and unload freight shipped from within out of the state, or coming into the state from places without the same, or in the transportation of freight entirely through or across it; that at all such times said cars were only transiently present for the said purposes, having at no time had a situs within this state; that the plaintiff has not at any time had other property of any description located within the state of Utah; that, notwithstanding these facts, the board of equalization of the state of Utah for the year 1897 assessed and valued ten cars, the property of the plaintiff, for taxation, the aggregate assessment thereof being $2,600, and also apportioned said assessment between the several counties in this state through which the lines of railroad pass, and through which the cars might be transported; that the board apportioned to Salt Lake county, of the said aggregate assessment, the sum of $210; that taxes were levied upon the assessed valuation of the property so apportioned to said Salt Lake county aggregating $5.76; that said tax is illegal and void; that to avoid the seizure and sale of its property, and to prevent incurring the penalties provided by law, the plaintiff on the 18th day of November, 1897, paid said taxes under protest to defendant, as treasurer of said county and collector of taxes; and that, at the time of payment, notice was given defendant of the plaintiff's claim that the taxes were illegal, and that suit would be brought to recover the same. To this complaint a general demurrer was interposed, which, upon hearing, was sustained by the court; and, the plaintiff electing to stand upon its complaint, and refusing to amend, the action was dismissed. This appeal is from the judgment of dismissal.

Mr. Parley L. Williams, for appellant:

Personal property follows the person of its owner, and is taxable only at the owner's domicil.

Property such as is described in the complaint, and used only as therein stated, when present within the borders of this state under such circumstances as are set forth, is only transiently here, merely by virtue of such use in interstate commerce, and cannot and does not thereby acquire a situs within the state.

*Headnotes by BARTCH, J.

NOTE.—As to situs of railroad rolling stock for taxation, see Atlantic & P. R. Co. v. Le-sueur (Ariz.) 1 L. R. A. 244; Bain v. Richmond & D. R. Co. (N. C.) 8 L. R. A. 299; Cleveland C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Backus (Ind.) 18 L. R. A. 729.
48 L. R. A.

Crandall v. Nevada, 6 Wall. 35, 18 L. ed. 745; Moore v. Wilkins, 10 N. H. 452; Robinson v. Longley, 18 Nev. 71, 1 Pac. 377.

A state cannot tax property not being located or having a situs within its limits.

McCulloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 429, 4 L. ed. 607; State Freight Tax, 15 Wall. 232, sub nom. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 21 L. ed. 146; Coe v. Errol, 116 U. S. 517, 29 L. ed. 715, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 475; Connecticut River Lumber Co. v. Columbia, 62 N. H. 286; Morgan v. Parham, 16 Wall. 471, 21 L. ed. 303; Hays v. Pacific Mail S. S. Co. 17 How. 596, 15 L. ed. 254; St. Louis v. Wiggins Ferry Co. 11 Wall. 423, 20 L. ed. 192; Pullman Southern Car Co. v. Nolan, 22 Fed. Rep. 276; Pickard v. Pullman Southern Car Co. 117 U. S. 34, 29 L. ed. 785, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 635; Central R. Co. v. State Bd. of Assessors, 49 N. J. L. 1, 7 Atl. 306; Bain v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 105 N. C. 363, 8 L. R. A. 299, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 149, 11 S. E. 311.

The tax imposed is a regulation of interstate commerce.

Bain v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 105 N. C. 363, 8 L. R. A. 299, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 149, 11 S. E. 311; Philadelphia & S. S. S. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 122 U. S. 326, 30 L. ed. 1200, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 308, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1118; Corfield v. Coryell, 4 Wash. C. C. 371, Fed. Cas. No. 3,230; Erie R. Co. v. State, 31 N. J. L. 531; Central R. Co. v. State Bd. of Assessors, 49 N. J. L. 20, 7 Atl. 306; Passenger Cases, 7 How. 459, 12 L. ed. 776.

No appropriate provision of law has been enacted authorizing a tax upon this property.

Adams Exp. Co. v. Ohio State Auditor, 166 U. S. 221, 41 L. ed. 977, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 604.

It is a strained and unnatural construction of the language used by the legislature to attempt to apply it to cars used only as those of the appellant.

Marye v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 127 U. S. 117, 32 L. ed. 94, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1037.

Messrs. Waldemar Van Cott, Graham F. Putnam, and Ray Van Cott, for respondent:

Counsel for appellant seriously errs in not distinguishing between a tax on commerce and a tax on property employed in commerce.

Adams Exp. Co. v. Ohio State Auditor, 165 U. S. 194, 41 L. ed. 683, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 305; Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. Pennsylvania, 141 U. S. 18, 35 L. ed. 613, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 595, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 876; Marye v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 127 U. S. 117, 32 L. ed. 94, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1037; Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. Board of Assessors, 55 Fed. Rep. 206; Hall v. American Refrigerator Transit Co. 24 Colo. 291, 51 Pac. 421.

The tax imposed is not a regulation of interstate commerce.

Philadelphia & S. S. S. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 122 U. S. 326, 30 L. ed. 1200, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 308, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1118; Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. Pennsylvania, 141 U. S. 25, 35 L. ed. 617, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 48 L. R. A.

595, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 876; Hall v. American Refrigerator Transit Co. 24 Colo. 291, 51 Pac. 421.

Bartch, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellant has challenged the power of the state to levy and collect the tax in question, in the first instance, upon the ground that the cars, being only transiently within the state from time to time, acquired no such situs within its borders as to give it jurisdiction over them for the purposes of taxation.

The power to tax is founded in necessity. It is an incident of sovereignty, possessed by the government, even though not expressly conferred by the people. A tax is a contribution imposed by the government upon the people for the service of the state. In return for such contribution the state affords protection to life, liberty, and property; and this is essential to civilization, and the very existence of the state. The assessment and collection of taxes, therefore, are among the highest acts of the supreme power of the government. The power of taxation is a legislative power, and no principle of law is better settled than that such power extends to all property, whether real or personal, tangible or intangible, within the borders of the state, not exempt under the Constitution and laws of the United States; and, except so far as the comity of the state permits, such property, for the purposes of taxation, is not affected by the laws of any other state. Therefore, in order that property may be subjected to taxation, it is not a requisite that the owner should reside in the state; and this is true as to personal property, tangible or intangible, as well as to real. Regardless of where the owner's domicile may be, it is the duty of the state to furnish protection to his property; and, in turn, the property must bear a just proportion of the burdens of the government. The ancient rule indicated by the maxim, Mobilia sequuntur personam, that personal property is to be regarded as subject to the lex domicilii, has never been of universal application in this country, and in modern times has seldom interfered with the power to levy taxes upon such property. The origin of that doctrine dates from an ancient time, when jewels and gold principally constituted the movable property, and that could be taken by the owner from one place to another; but such has not been the case in recent times, since, in the continued progress of the world, the accumulated wealth consists in large proportions of personal property, including, not only jewels and gold, but also a great variety of other personal property, much of which is intangible, as franchises, privileges, etc., but nevertheless property representing value, and none of which is immediately connected with the person of the owner, yet over all of which it is incumbent upon government to extend its protection. The constantly increasing variety of such property, perceptible and imperceptible, tangible and intangible, has caused the ancient rule expressed in the maxim to yield more and more to the lex situs; and while it is true that, for many purposes, personal property is subject to the law of the place of the owner's domicile, still the law is well settled that for the purposes of taxation, and for other purposes, such property has its actual situs where it has been brought and used by its owner, and is subject to the law of that place. Hence, if the owner reside in one state, and his movables are taken to another, and used there, they may become the subject of taxation in the latter state. Such property may be separated from its owner, and he may be taxed because of it at the place where it is found, although not the place of his domicile.

In his Commentaries on the Conflict of Laws (§ 550), Mr. Justice Story, discussing jurisdiction as regards property, observed that, "although movables are for many purposes to be deemed to have no situs, except that of the domicile of the owner, yet, this being but a legal fiction, it yields whenever it is necessary for the purpose of justice that the actual situs of the thing should be examined. A nation within whose territory any personal property is actually situate has as entire dominion over it while therein, in point of sovereignty and jurisdiction, as it has over immovable property situate there." Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. Pennsylvania, 141 U. S. 18, 35 L. ed. 613, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 595, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 876. The power to tax being inherent in the government, the state unquestionably has the right, through the legislature, to exercise that power over all property which may be found within its borders, whether brought there temporarily or otherwise, for the purposes of business or for trade or convenience, unless restrained or limited by constitutional provision; and courts cannot control the exercise of such power, except when it conflicts with constitutional limitations. In McCulloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 316, 429, 4 L. ed. 579, 607, Mr. Chief Justice Marshall, delivering the opinion of the court, after defining the nature and extent of the original right of taxation which remains with the states, said: "It may be objected to this definition that the power of taxation is not confined to the people and property of a state. It may be exercised upon every object brought within its jurisdiction. This is true. But to what source do we trace this right? It is obvious that it is an incident of sovereignty, and is coextensive with that to which it is an incident. All subjects over which the sovereign power of a state extends are objects of taxation, but those over which it does not extend are, upon the soundest principles, exempt from taxation. This proposition may almost be pronounced self-evident. The sovereignty of a state extends to everything which exists by its own authority, or is introduced by its permission." So, in Wheeling, P. & O. Transp. Co. v. Wheeling, 99 U. S. 273, 25 L. ed. 412, Mr. Justice Clifford, delivering the opinion of the court, after citing authorities to the proposition that the power to tax for the support of the state government extends in the state independently of the national government, and that it may well be assumed that where there is no cession of contradictory or inconsistent jurisdiction in the United States, nor any restraining compact in the Constitution, the power in the states to tax for the support of the state authority reaches all the property within the state which is not properly regarded as the instruments or means of the Federal government, observed: "Beyond question, these authorities show that all subjects over which the sovereign power of a state extends are objects of taxation, the rule being that the sovereignty of a state extends to everything which exists by its own authority, or is introduced by its permission, except those means which are employed by Congress to carry into execution the powers given by the people to the Federal government, whose laws, made in pursuance of the Constitution, are supreme."

From the foregoing considerations, it is clear that the power of this state to tax the personal property in question herein is not affected by the fact that the Union Refrigerator Transit Company is a creature of another state, in which it has its domicile, nor because of the fact that the cars were only transiently in this state, or were furnished for transportation of perishable freight over various lines of railroad throughout the United States. It is therefore evident that this state has power to tax such cars, when brought within its territory or jurisdiction, and found there; but whether, by apt legislation, it has exercised its authority in this case, is a question to be hereinafter determined.

Counsel for the appellant has cited numerous cases to support the contention respecting the question of situs above considered. Crandall v. Nevada, 6 Wall. 35, 18 L. ed. 745, the first case cited, was one where a statute providing for the levy of a "tax of $1 upon every person leaving the state by railroad, stage coach, or other vehicle" engaged in the business of transporting passengers, was held unconstitutional and void. Moore v. Wilkins, 10 N. H. 452, simply decides that an individual is to be taxed in the place where he is residing, and not in another town, where he has gone for a temporary purpose only; both places being in the same state. So, in Robinson v. Longley, 18 Nev. 71, 1 Pac. 377, it was held that a traveling circus and menagerie, owned by a nonresident, and brought into the state, to be exhibited at various places, and then taken into and through other states for the same purpose, was not subject to taxation in the state of Nevada. McCulloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 316, 4 L. ed. 579, was a case where a tax imposed by the state of Maryland on a branch of the Bank of the United States located in that state was held unconstitutional; but clearly that case does not militate against the principles hereinbefore considered, the tax imposed being on property over which the United States had jurisdiction. In the case of the State Freight Tax, 15 Wall. 232, sub nom. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 21 L. ed. 146, it was held that a statute of a state imposing a tax upon freight taken up within the state and carried out of it, or taken up without the state and brought within it, is repugnant to the Constitution of the United States; a tax upon freight transported from state to state being a regulation of commerce among the states. In Coe v. Errol, 116 U. S. 517, 29 L. ed. 715, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 475, it was decided that goods on their way through a state, from a place outside thereof to another place outside thereof, are subjects of interstate or foreign commerce, and are not taxable by the state through which they pass. In Connecticut River Lumber Co. v. Columbia, 62 N. H. 286, it was held that logs temporarily in a river, awaiting transportation from one state to another, were exempt from state taxation. Pullman Southern Car Co. v. Nolan, 22 Fed. Rep. 276, is a case where the state of Tennessee attempted by statute to impose a "privilege tax" on sleeping cars in the transportation of interstate passengers, and the court held that the cars had no situs in that state for such purpose. This was not a tax based on value, but was an arbitrary, fixed charge on the business, without regard to the articles employed. Likewise as to Pickard v. Pullman Southern Car Co. 117 U. S. 34, 29 L. ed. 785, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 635, which holds the same act of Tennessee void so far as it applies to the interstate transportation of passengers.

Reliance is also placed by the appellant, to sustain the proposition that the cars in question had no situs in this state for the purpose of taxation, upon Morgan v. Parham, 16 Wall. 471, 21 L. ed. 303; Hays v. Pacific Mail S. S. Co. 17 How. 598, 15 L. ed. 254; and St. Louis v. Wiggins Ferry Co. 11 Wall. 423, 20 L. ed. 192. But those are cases where ships or vessels were engaged in interstate or foreign commerce upon the high seas, and were registered at their home ports under the laws of the United States, at the owner's domicile, and were therefore held not to be subjects of taxation in another state, at whose ports they temporarily touched for the purpose of delivering or receiving passengers or freight. The distinction between ships and vessels, having their situs fixed by Congress, sailing on the high seas, only temporarily and incidentally touching ports, and cars and other vehicles not having their situs so fixed, and used for transportation on land only, is marked and obvious. Mr. Justice Bradley, in Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Maryland, 21 Wall. 456, 22 L. ed. 678, speaking of transportation on land and water, observed: "Commerce on land between the different states is so strikingly dissimilar, in many respects, from commerce on water, that it is often difficult to regard them in the same aspect in reference to the respective constitutional powers and duties of the state and Federal governments. No doubt, commerce by water was principally in the minds of those who framed and adopted the Constitution, although both its language and spirit embrace commerce by land as well. Maritime transportation requires no artificial roadway. Nature has prepared to hand that portion of the instrumentality employed. The navigable waters of the earth are recognized public highways of trade and intercourse. No franchise is needed to enable the navigator to use them. Again, the vehicles of commerce by water being instruments of intercommunication with other nations, the regulation of them is assumed by the national legislature. So that state interference with transportation by water, and especially by sea, is at once clearly marked and distinctly discernible. But it is different with transportation by land. This, when the Constitution was adopted, was entirely performed on common roads, and in vehicles drawn by animal power. No one at that day imagined that the roads and bridges of the country (except when the latter crossed navigable streams) were not entirely subject, both as to their construction, repair, and management, to state regulation and control."

So, it will be noticed, upon examination, that the case at bar may be distinguished from each of the cases cited by the appellant on the question of situs, and thus far considered. Each one presented different facts and different questions, and none of them can be regarded as authority here. There have been cited, however, on this same point, the cases of Central R. Co. v. State Bd. of Assessors, 49 N. J. L. 1, 7 Atl. 308, and Bain v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 105 N. C. 363, 8 L. R. A. 209, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 149, 11 S. E. 311; and these, it must be admitted, support the contention of the appellant, and some of the cases above distinguished are therein cited as authority. We do not think those decisions are in harmony with the weight of authority, and they are clearly opposed to the latest decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States upon this subject, as appears from the cases of Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. Pennsylvania, 141 U. S. 18, 35 L. ed. 613, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 595, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 876; Adams Exp. Co. v. Ohio State Auditor, 165 U. S. 194, 41 L. ed. 683, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 305, and 166 U. S. 185, 41 L. ed. 965, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 604. We conclude that the cars in question had, for the purposes of taxation, a situs in this state.

Nor do we think the tax imposed is a regulation of interstate commerce. It is not a tax on persons or freight in transit through this state to other states or countries, nor on the right of transit or transportation; nor is it a license or privilege tax, or tax on business or occupation, or on property of the United States located in this state. It is essentially a tax on property found and used in this state, and valued, for the purpose of taxation, like other personal property within the jurisdiction of the state; and, although the cars may have been employed in interstate commerce, the state is not prohibited by the Constitution or laws of the United States from taxing them as other personal property within its jurisdiction. This has been so declared by the Supreme Court of the United States. In Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. Pennsylvania, 141 U. S. 18, 35 L. ed. 613, 3

Inters. Com. Rep. 595, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 876, where the question was whether Pullman cars could be taxed in Pennsylvania,—the corporation being a creature of the state of Illinois, having its home there, and itself not operating any railroad, but merely furnishing cars to the various railroad lines, which cars were simply run into Pennsylvania, and out again, in the ordinary course of business,—Mr. Justice Gray delivering the opinion of the court, after stating that, for the purposes of taxation, it had been repeatedly affirmed by that court that personal property might be separated from its owner, and that he might be taxed, on its account, at the place where it was, although not in the place of his own domicile, and even if he were not a resident of the state imposing the tax, said: "It is equally well settled that there is nothing in the Constitution . . . which prevents a state from taxing personal property employed in interstate or foreign commerce like other personal property within its jurisdiction." Again he observed: "The cars of this company within the state of Pennsylvania are employed in interstate commerce; but their being so employed does not exempt them from taxation by the state, and the state has not taxed them because of their being so employed, but because of their being within its territory and jurisdiction. The cars were continuously and permanently employed in going to and fro upon certain routes of travel. If they had never passed beyond the limits of Pennsylvania, it could not be doubted that the state could tax them, like other property, within its borders, notwithstanding they were employed in interstate commerce. The fact that, instead of stopping at the state boundary, they cross that boundary in going out and coming back, cannot affect the power of the state to levy a tax upon them. The state, having the right, for the purposes of taxation, to tax any personal property found within its jurisdiction, without regard to the place of the owner's domicile, could tax the specific cars which at a given moment were within its borders. The route over which the cars travel extending beyond the limits of the state, particular cars may not remain within the state; but the company has at all times substantially the same number of cars within the state, and continuously and constantly uses there a portion of its property." In Adams Exp. Co. v. Ohio State Auditor, 165 U. S. 194, 41 L. ed. 683, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 305, Mr. Chief Justice Fuller, speaking for the court, said: "Although the transportation of the subjects of interstate commerce, or the receipts received therefrom, or the occupation or business of carrying it on, cannot be directly subjected to state taxation, yet property belonging to corporations or companies engaged in such commerce may be; and, whatever the particular form of the exaction, if it is essentially only property taxation, it will not be considered as falling within the inhibition of the Constitution. Corporations and companies engaged in interstate commerce should bear their proper proportion of the burdens of the governments 48 L. R. A.

under whose protection they conduct their operations, and taxation on property, collectable by the ordinary means, does not affect interstate commerce otherwise than incidentally, as all business is affected by the necessity of contributing to the support of government." So, in Adams Exp. Co. v. Ohio State Auditor, 165 U. S. 185, 41 L. ed. 965, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 304, Mr. Justice Brewer, delivering the opinion of the court on rehearing, said: "Again and again has this court affirmed the proposition that no state can interfere with interstate commerce through the imposition of a tax, by whatever name called, which is in effect a tax for the privilege of transacting such commerce. And it has as often affirmed that such restriction upon the power of a state to interfere with interstate commerce does not in the least degree abridge the right of a state to tax at their full value all the instrumentalities used for such commerce." Postal Tele. Cable Co. v. Adams, 155 U. S. 688, 39 L. ed. 311, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 1, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 268, 360; Marye v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 127 U. S. 117, 32 L. ed. 94, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1037; Western U. Tele. Co. v. Atty. Gen. of Massachusetts, 125 U. S. 530, 31 L. ed. 790, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 961; Maine v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 142 U. S. 217, 35 L. ed. 994, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 807, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 121, 163; Massachusetts v. Western U. Tele. Co. 141 U. S. 40, 35 L. ed. 628, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 889.

We come now to the remaining question,—whether there are any provisions of law which authorize a tax upon such property when found within the jurisdiction of the state. The appellant, it seems, contends that our laws respecting taxation were only intended to apply to car lines, or car companies owning and operating car lines, within this state, and to such property connected with such lines as abides and has its actual situs within the state, and that there is no language employed in any of the provisions of law which contemplates the taxation of cars belonging to an owner residing in a foreign state, and used in interstate commerce, although in such use such cars may for a portion of the time be within the jurisdiction of this state. In § 2 of article 13 of the state Constitution it is provided: "All property in the state, not exempt under the laws of the United States, or under this Constitution, shall be taxed in proportion to its value, to be ascertained as provided by law." This is an express constitutional provision, and is adequate to impose a tax upon all property which has a situs within the state for such purpose, except property exempt under the laws of the United States or under the Constitution of this state. It is therefore apparent that there is an apt provision in the fundamental law under which the appellant's cars could be taxed; they, as we have seen, having a situs in the state for such purpose, and not falling within the exemption. Substantially the same provision is contained in § 1 of the act of the legislature approved April 5, 1896 (Sess. Laws, p. 423); and what has been said respecting the constitutional provision above quoted, in the main, applies with equal force to that section of the statute. The value of all property, however, for the purposes of taxation, is "to be ascertained as provided by law." The manner of ascertaining the value being thus referred to the legislature, it in the same act (Sess. Laws 1896, § 55) provided: "The president, secretary, or managing agent, or such other officer as the state board of equalization may designate, of any corporation, and each person or association of persons owning or operating any railroad, street railway car, telegraph or telephone line or railway depot in this state, must, on or before the first Monday in March in each year, furnish the said board a statement signed and sworn to by one of such officers, or by the person or one of the persons forming such association, showing in detail for the year ending on the first Monday in March in each year; all the property, real, personal, or otherwise, owned by said corporation, person, or association of persons in the state, including a statement of mileage in each county, as valued on the first Monday of March of the same year and such other information as the board may require. Any officer of a railroad company, street railway, telegraph or telephone line, railway depot, or car company, failing on demand to furnish the statement required of him, shall be subject to the penalty provided in subdivision 2, § 18, of this act." This section makes it incumbent upon certain officers of railway, car, telegraph, and telephone lines to furnish the state board of equalization statements of property as therein provided, and, for failure to do so subjects them to certain penalties. These statements were doubtless intended as a convenience for the board in making the assessment which is expressly provided for in § 56, as follows: "The state board of equalization must meet at the state capitol, or at such other places in the state as the board may determine, on the second Monday in July, and continue in open session from day to day, Sundays and legal holidays excepted, until the third Monday in August, and later, if the business of the board requires it. At such meetings the board must assess all property and franchises of railroad, car, street railway, railway depot, telephone and telegraph companies, but franchises derived from the United States must not be assessed. All such property must be assessed in the name of the person, corporation, or association owning, leasing, or using the same. Between the first and third Mondays of August, the board must apportion the total assessment of all property and franchises of such companies to the several counties in proportion to the value of such property in each county." This section authorizes, as will be observed, the assessment by the board of all the property referred to in the preceding section, and declares that all such property shall be assessed in the "name of the person, corporation, or association owning, leasing, or using the same." The manifest intention of the legislature in the enactment of these provisions of statute was that all such property should be taxed, whether owned by a resident of this state or not, if the same was used within the state by the owner, or by some person or corporation to whom the owner intrusted it for such use. Counsel for the appellant, however, called attention to the fact that in § 55 there is no punctuation between the words "street railway" and "car," while the word "car" is punctuated by a comma in § 56, and insists that the real intention of the legislature was to treat the owners of car lines the same as owners of railroads, street railways, telegraph, or telephone lines, and that, where it used the word "car" in each section, it meant car lines or car companies having, owning, operating, and using such car lines within the state,—in other words, that a "car line" means a physical line, or a line having a physical unity, as the realty composing a line of railroad between definite places; that, in order for the state to tax such property, there must be a physical unity, instead of a unity of use and management, as was the case in respect to the cars in question. We cannot assent to this contention. The question of punctuation cannot be allowed to control in the construction of these provisions of the statute, against, as we think, the manifest intent of the legislature. It would be a most fallible standard by which to construe them. In the interpretation of statutes the true meaning of the lawmaker must be ascertained from the whole purview, and when that is manifest from a judicial inspection the court will not permit punctuation to change it. To ascertain the real intention and meaning of the statute, the court will punctuate, or disregard punctuation, as may be necessary. Punctuation may, when the meaning is uncertain, furnish some indication of it, and in such case may even decide what the meaning is; but, when the intention of the legislature is apparent from a reading of the statute, such intention must prevail, regardless of punctuation. Sutherland, Stat. Constr. § 232. In this case we think the statute should be read with a comma between the words "street railway" and "car," and, when so read, the terms used mean "street railway line," "car line," etc.; and "car line," in the sense employed in the several enactments, may mean a considerable number of cars operated by a car company, as a car line, without, as in the case at bar, the actual realty, over which the rolling stock runs, being owned by the owner of the cars. Evidently such line has a unity of use and management, and the several constitutional and statutory provisions are adequate to tax the cars when so employed and found within the jurisdiction of the state. The same question here involved was, under similar legislation, before the supreme court of Colorado in Hall v. American Refrigerator Transit Co. 24 Colo. 291, 51 Pac. 421, where Mr. Justice Goddard, delivering the opinion of the court, said: "It is clearly manifest that the purpose of these constitutional and statutory provisions is to subject all property owned or used by a railway or other corporation within the territorial limits of the state to taxation according to its value, regardless of the domicile of its owner; and in so doing they exercise a well-recognized function of legislation." Legislation which is claimed to grant immunity from taxation will be strictly interpreted against the exemption. "In such cases the rule of strict construction applies, and, in order to relieve any species of property from its due and just proportion of the burdens of the government, the language relied on as creating the exemption should be so clear as not to admit of reasonable controversy about its meaning, for all doubts must be resolved against the exemption. The power to tax rests upon necessity, and is essential to the existence of the state." Judge v. Spencer, 15 Utah, 242, 48 Pac. 1097; Sutherland, Stat. Constr. § 364. Counsel for the appellant has cited, on this question, Marye v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 127 U. S. 117, 32 L. ed. 94, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1037; but that case cannot be regarded as controlling authority in this, because the legislation therein considered was entirely different from that considered herein, the same applying to domestic corporations only.

No point is made in this case concerning the apportionment of the tax among the several counties of the state. We are of the opinion that the tax in question is lawful, and that the court properly dismissed the action.

The judgment is affirmed, with costs.

Zane, Ch. J., and Miner, J., concur.

Affirmed by Supreme Court of United States April 9, 1900.

MINNESOTA SUPREME COURT.

Lewis H. OLSON, Resp't.,
v.

MINNEAPOLIS & ST. LOUIS RAILROAD COMPANY, Appt.

(76 Minn. 149.)

*From the evidence in this action it appeared that on arriving at a terminal yard as a brakeman on one of defendant's incoming freight trains, plaintiff, in accordance with a well-established custom among brakemen, changed his clothing, leaving his working suit in the caboose or way car, although he knew that it was not at all probable that said caboose would be attached to the outgoing train to which he would next be assigned for duty. Assuming that because of such custom plaintiff would have a right, as a licensee, to return to the yard and to the caboose for the purpose of obtaining his clothes, it is held that this licensee would not justify him in going upon a caboose attached to a moving train, in search of his clothing, or in jumping from one of the platforms of said caboose, when through with the search. While engaged in these acts he was not in the service of defendant in the line of his employment, nor was he acting within the scope of his license. He had no cause of action against defendant for an injury caused by his coming in contact with a defectively constructed switch stand when jumping from the caboose.

*Headnote by COLLINS, J.

(May 2, 1899.)

NOTE.—Liability for injuries received by the servant in the performance of duties outside the scope of his original contract.

- I. Introductory.
- II. No recovery where servant undertakes new functions proprio motu and without master's acquiescence.
- III. When negligence is predicated of a command to do work outside the scope of the original contract.
- IV. Risks of work outside scope of employment, when deemed to be assumed.
- V. Doctrine of common employment qualified as regards servants working outside the scope of their employment.
- VI. Contributory negligence as a defense.
- VII. Absence of compulsion, an essential element of assumption of risks and contributory negligence.
 - a. Generally.
 - b. Protest or objection by servant.
 - c. Fear of losing position.

I. Introductory.

The risks of servants which most commonly come in question fall into two categories, viz., those ordinarily incident to the employment, and those which are extraordinary in the sense that they would not have existed if the master had not been derelict in regard to his specific duties to furnish reasonably safe appliances and see that they are used according to a proper system. In the present note it is intended to collect the decisions relating to injuries caused by another class of extraordinary risks, viz., those which fall under that category, for the reason that, being incident to work which was not within the scope of the original contract of hiring, they are not among those which he expected to encounter.

The hazards incident to the new work may be considered extra hazardous as being outside of the regular employment, and additional to the risks thereof. Consolidated Coal Co. v. Haenni (1898) 146 Ill. 614, 35 N. E. 162.

That the element of non-anticipation is the connecting link between cases involving this and the other classes of extraordinary risks is clearly brought out in the arguments of several cases. See, especially, Union P. R. Co. v. Fort (1873) 17 Wall. 553, 21 L. ed. 739, as quoted infra; Northern P. Coal Co. v. Richmond (1893) 15 U. S. App. 262, 58 Fed. Rep. 756, 7 C. C. A. 485.

It should be noted that the doctrines developed in the cases cited in this note have no application where the duties in which the servant was engaged, at the time of the accident, were being performed under a contract entirely distinct from that under which he first entered the employment. The same general reasons as those which are deemed to justify the doctrine of the assumption of the ordinary risks of an employment necessarily require the inference APPPEAL by defendant from an order of the District Court for Hennepin County denying a motion for new trial after verdict for plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Albert E. Clarke for appellant.

Messrs. Jackson & Lancaster for respondent.

Collins, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Appeal from an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial in a personal-injury action. Taking plaintiff's statement as true (and the jury must have so found), the only facts which we deem important in disposing of the case are as follows: Plain-that the servant cannot recover for injuries due to the ordinary risks of such work although they may be greater than those which he incurred in his former capacity. Rooney v. Carson (1894) 161 Pa. 26, 28 Atl. 996 (one employed as a weaver had been laid off until a new mill was started up, and was meantime employed to assist in moving into the new mill and making alterations).

II. No recovery where servant undertakes new functions proprio motu and without master's acquiescence.

That a servant who is acting as a mere volunteer in undertaking duties not originally contracted for cannot claim an indemnity if he is injured, is well settled. This doctrine may be referred to the conception that a servant who voluntarily and without directions from the master, and without his acquiescence, goes into hazardous work outside of his contract of hiring, may be regarded as putting himself beyond the protection of his master's implied undertaking. Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Adams (1886) 105 Ind. 151, 5 N. E. 187.

In Goff v. Chippewa River & M. R. Co. (1893) 86 Wis. 237, 58 N. W. 465, the court, in holding that a neglect of the duty to furnish a safe place of work could not be relied upon as a ground of action where the servant, without the knowledge, authority, privity, or consent of his employer, and of his own volition, occupied an unsafe and dangerous place, even though the same service had been performed at other times by other employees for the employer in the same place, said: "The employer is responsible only for his express or implied direction to an employee to work in an unsafe or dangerous place. The work of the employer is to be under his own control, and under the responsibility which the law places upon him; and it is for him or his lawful agent to give such orders or directions as he may judge discreet in respect to the place where his employees shall work, having in view their skill, prudence, and experience. He, or his rightful agent, may assume the risk in any given case, but the employee cannot of his own mere unauthorized motion take the risk, and hold the employer responsible for disastrous consequences. The liability does not exist unless the employer or his agent knows, or has good reason to believe, that the employee is serving him in a dangerous place or position; for, without such knowledge, the duty of warning or protecting the employee does not arise, and 48 L. R. A.

tiff had been in defendant's service as a brakeman upon freight trains for over one year when the injuries were received. There were two freight train yards at Minneapolis, the northern terminus of the road,—one known as the "Cedar Lake Yard," where outgoing trains were made up, and from which they started; and the other, about 40 rods southerly, called the "Kenwood Yards," the end of the trip for all incoming freight trains. On the day in question plaintiff came into the yard last mentioned as a brakeman on train numbered 57 (conductor, Williams), arriving at 2:50 P. M., or within one hour thereafter. Just before the train reached the yard, plaintiff changed his clothes, leaving, as seems to have been a custom among brakemen, his working suit in the caboose or way car. He left the train at or near the yard, and, after going to his will not exist, for the plain reason that the liability is not absolute, but relative, and is founded solely on the employer's negligence, which cannot be affirmed without knowledge or notice of duty in the particular instance, such as would warn the employer and afford him a fair opportunity to discharge it."

See also McMahon v. O'Donnell (1891) 82 Neb. 27, 48 N. W. 824 (girl, hired to do household work, undertook to work a straw cutter).

A similar situation exists where a person who has never been in the service of the person charged with negligence undertakes to do work for him, and is injured. See note to Everts v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. (Minn.) 22 L. R. A. 663, on assumption of risks of service by volunteer.

Or his conduct may be viewed as betokening contributory negligence. Honor v. Albrighton (1880) 93 Pa. 475 (plaintiff went on an errand wholly outside the servant's line of duty at the call of a co-servant); Sears v. Central R. & Pkg. Co. (1875) 53 Ga. 630 (conductor of freight train negligent if he couples or uncouples cars except in case of a pressing emergency, of the existence of which the jury must judge); Central R. & Pkg. Co. v. Chapman (1895) 96 Ga. 769, 22 S. E. 273 (servant undertook to operate a defective machine outside the scope of his regular employment; no emergency to justify it); Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Hall (1894) 105 Ala. 599, 17 So. 176 (brakeman voluntarily, and without orders from anyone having authority over him, undertook to perform the duties of a fireman).

See also Indiana Car Co. v. Parker (1885) 100 Ind. 181 (arguendo, p. 198); Daley v. American Printing Co. (1891) 152 Mass. 581, 26 N. E. 135.

The inference of negligence is, of course, conclusive, where the change of duties was in direct violation of orders. Brown v. Byroads (1874) 47 Ind. 435 (catcher in stove factory undertook to act as sawyer, and was struck by piece of a band-wheel which broke).

Or his contractual assumption of the new risks may be inferred.

In Kirk v. Atlanta & C. Air-Line R. Co. (1886) 94 N. C. 625, 55 Am. Rep. 621, the contention that the defense of coservice was not available was thus disposed of: "Nor do we give force to the argument that places the plaintiff's service in the duty of the inspector, outside of those which he assumed as a carpenter. He made no objection to the service, had a dozen times before, as he himself states, undertaken it as incident to his employment, and voluntarily. He therefore stands upon the boarding house, near by, visited the train master's office, to see if he had been bulletined for his next trip. He found no orders, went away, and about 7 P. M. returned to the office. He then asked for a pass to Albert Lea, his home, to be used upon passenger train No. 6, which left Minneapolis that evening, his object being to go home on business. The train master stated that his next trip out would be at 5:20 next morning, on No. 34, but if he would go out and find another brakeman, by the name of Gilson, and induce him to go out on No. 34, next morning, the pass would be furnished, and he could go to Albert Lea. Plaintiff returned in a short time with Gilson, but meantime the train master had been informed of the sickness of a brakeman who was bulletined to go out at 10:40 P. M. on train No. 32 (conductor, Campbell), and therefore declined to issue the pass. After some conversation it was agreed that plaintiff should go to Albert Lea that night as a brakeman on No. 32, while Gilson should go out next morning on No. 34. During this conversation plaintiff stated to the train master that he was tired and sleepy, having been on duty the previous night, and before going out would have to get his working clothes out of Conductor Williams's caboose, which, as he well knew, had, in accordance with the custom, been moved up into the Cedar Lake yard. At this the train master informed plaintiff that he could go out to the yard and sleep in Conductor Campbell's caboose until the train started, and for this purpose gave him a note to the other brakeman, there being at least two on each train, which required the latter to do certain preparatory work so that plaintiff could "sleep in the ca-same footing as if this service was within the scope of his agreement. One who volunteers to act with other employees becomes one himself, so far as to introduce between them the same rule of legal responsibility."

Lastly (though no decisions to this effect have been found by the present writer), it seems manifest, upon general principles, that the servant under such circumstances would bring himself within the operation of the doctrine expressed in the maxim, Volenti non fit injuria. See note to O'Maley v. South Boston Gaslight Co. (Mass.) 47 L. R. A. 161.

The scope of a servant's duties for the purpose of this rule is to be defined by what he was employed to perform, and by what, with the knowledge and approval of his employer, he actually did perform, rather than by the mere verbal designation of his position. Ruimell v. Dilworth (1885) 111 Pa. 343, 2 Atl. 355 (verdict finding servant not to be a mere volunteer, upheld).

When there is evidence that servants used an elevator as they had occasion; that there was no one to take charge of it; that the belt by which it was operated was liable to come off; that various employees were in the habit of putting it on; and that there were no rules of the employer forbidding or regulating the putting on of the belt,—it cannot be said, as a matter of law, that an employee injured while putting on the belt in the usual manner was acting negligently and without the scope of his employment, and that the employer was free from negligence. Daley v. American Printing Co. (1891) 152 Mass. 581, 26 N. E. 135.

An employee required to remove work from a mangle as it comes through, who is directed by her employer, as he sees her standing idle, to assist in putting wet clothes through the machine, is not a volunteer in subsequently putting dry clothes through the machine while the one employed for that purpose is absent. Fitzhenry v. Lamson (1897) 19 App. Div. 54, 45 N. Y. Supp. 875.

Nor will the fact that an injured servant was engaged in other than his regular work at the time of injury destroy the employer's liability for such injury, when it is shown that work other than the regular assigned duties was customary among servants of such employer. East Line & R. River R. Co. v. Scott (1887) 68 Tex. 604, 5 S. W. 501.

III. When negligence is predicated of a command to do work outside the scope of the original contract.

When a servant of mature years, and of ordinary intelligence and experience, is directed to do a temporary work outside of the business he had engaged to do, and consents to do such work, without objection on account of his want of knowledge, skill, or experience in doing such work, no negligence on the part of the employer can be predicated upon that state of facts alone. Cole v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. (1888) 71 Wis. 114, 37 N. W. 84. This case was approved in Hogan v. Northern P. R. Co. (1892) 53 Fed. Rep. 519, which was followed in Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Finley (1894) 25 U. S. App. 16, 63 Fed. Rep. 228, 12 C. C. A. 595. See also Gavigan v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. (1896) 110 Mich. 71, 67 N. W. 1097, where the rule of the Wisconsin case is quoted, arguendo.

In Reed v. Stockmeyer (1896) 34 U. S. App. 727, 74 Fed. Rep. 186, 20 C. C. A. 381, the court said that the proposition of plaintiff's counsel, that there was liability because the vice principal, acting for the master, directed the servant to engage in an employment other than that for which he was engaged, and which was more hazardous, and therein there was a breach of positive duty by the master, could not be sustained in the broad language in which it was asserted, and that the liability did not arise from the direction, but from failure to give proper warning of the risks attendant upon the employment.

In Jones v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. (1883) 49 Mich. 573, 14 N. W. 551, it was laid down that where a servant signs a contract which binds him to obey all orders, rules, and regulations, but in which the general language applies equally to all classes of employees, the agreement to obey all orders must be construed to apply to all which are issued to him in the line of duty in which he is employed, and that it does not empower the company to assign him to other duties wholly disconnected therewith and differing therefrom.

This ruling may, perhaps, be regarded as specifically based upon an application of the maxim, Expressio unius est exclusio alterius, to the special agreement under construction. Otherwise it is difficult to reconcile it with the other decision in the same state, referred to infra, which seems to require some additional element over and above the mere order itself, before the master can be held liable as for a breach of duty.

The same remark is applicable to Harrison v. Detroit, L. & N. R. Co. (1890) 79 Mich. 409, 7 L. R. A. 623, 44 N. W. 1034, where it was said, arguendo, that when the offending servant, having general power and authority to boose as long as possible,—till leaving time.” Taking this note, plaintiff, accompanied by Gilson, went to one or two places in the city, and then to the Cedar Lake yard, where they found the caboose which was to go out on No. 32 (conductor, Campbell), and delivered the note to the other brakeman, Tyler, to whom it was addressed. It should be stated here that all freight-train men were shifted about from train to train, but that each conductor retained his own caboose; so that it was very improbable that plaintiff, or any other brakeman, would go out with the conductor in charge when he came in, and of course equally as improbable that the caboose attached to the outbound train would be that brought in with the incoming train. The plaintiff understood this thoroughly, for he had changed conductors and cabooses, as well as trains, nearly every trip during his term of service. Plaintiff and Gilson left the caboose which was to go out with No. 32, to search for the one in which the clothes had been left. It was then dark. They went to several without finding the one they were looking for. Finally the plaintiff saw a train moving out of the yard,—No. 58,—which was due to leave at 8:45 p. m., and, thinking that the caboose attached might be the one he was looking for, stepped up on the rear platform, and entered, with Gilson. It was not the Williams caboose. After exchanging a few words with one of the trainmen, who happened to be in the caboose, plaintiff passed out upon the front platform, and attempted to step down upon the ground. According to his version of the affair, his foot caught under the throw bar of a switch, negligently located near the track and improperly constructed. He was thrown employ and discharge servants, and having authority to direct and control the injured servant, orders him to do an act not within the scope of the injured servant's employment, whereby he is exposed to danger not contemplated in his contract of service, and he is injured in so doing, the master is held liable for injuries received while acting under the order of the superior servant.

In Indiana a doctrine has been laid down which subjects the master to a rule of liability even more stringent than that rejected in the text, by making him virtually an insurer of the servant's safety. Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Adams (1886) 105 Ind. 151, 5 N. E. 187.

Compare Cincinnati, H. & I. R. Co. v. Madden (1893) 134 Ind. 402, 34 N. E. 227, where negligence seems to be implied from the mere giving of an order to perform new duties. The position of the court apparently is that the extra risks are not assumed, and this fact of itself implies that the act of the master which was the immediate occasion of the servant's being exposed to them must have been negligent. This view is plausible, but the theory of the courts which favor the opposite view, however, obviously is that the relations of the master and servant, at the time when the direction to undertake the new duties is given, are virtually the same as if a new contract of hiring were being proposed to the servant which he has the right to accept or reject as he pleases. The antagonistic conceptions of the master's liability cannot be reconciled as long as this radical difference of standpoints stands behind them.

To enable the servant to recover on this ground, there must be evidence showing that the transfer of the servant to the new duties was imprudent for some specific reason.

In Galveston Oil Co. v. Thompson (1890) 70 Tex. 235, 13 S. W. 60, it was held proper to charge the jury “that the plaintiff would be entitled to recover if the superintendent ordered plaintiff to perform a service which was dangerous, not within the purview of his employment, if in this the superintendent did not use due care, provided plaintiff was injured while attempting, in the exercise of due care, to obey the command.”

The question of the master's negligence must depend upon the circumstances in the particular case, where a servant is ordered into a service which he did not undertake to perform (Consolidated Coal Co. v. Haenni (1893) 146 Ill. 614, 35 N. E. 162, affirming (1892) 48 Ill. App. 115; Cole v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. (1888) 71 Wis. 114, 37 N. W. 84), as where the servant, to the knowledge of the master, or of the servant who gives the order, is unfitted, by reason of his tender years, physical or mental weakness, or lack of experience, for the work to be done.

If the particular work ordered to be done is of a dangerous character, and one which requires particular skill in its performance, and the person directed to perform such work has not the requisite knowledge or skill for doing the work with safety, and such want of skill or knowledge is known, or might be reasonably supposed to be known, to the employer, in that case the direction of the employer to do the work might be justly held to be a violation of a duty which he owes to his employee, even though the employee undertook to do the work without objection or protest upon his part. None of the cases go further than this, and we can see no reason for holding a stricter rule. Cole v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. (1888) 71 Wis. 114, 37 N. W. 84.

For cases in which the servant's action was sustained, for the reason that the person giving the order understood, or ought to have understood, the unfitness of the servant to do the work required, see Union P. R. Co. v. Fort (1873) 17 Wall. 553, 21 L. ed. 739 (foreman ordered a young, inexperienced boy who had previously worked as a helper at a moulding machine, or a common hand on the floor of a railway shop, to ascend a ladder and adjust displaced machinery while a shaft close by was rapidly revolving); Jones v. Old Dominion Cotton Mills (1886) 82 Va. 140 (boy of thirteen years hired to “sweep, carry water, and fill buckets with quills,” ordered to mend a broken belt, in a position which required him to stand on a step-ladder near four belts in rapid motion); Lalor v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. (1869) 52 Ill. 401, 4 Am. Rep. 616 (laborer known to be inexperienced was ordered to couple cars—company held liable); Foley v. California Horseshoe Co. (1896) 115 Cal. 184, 47 Pac. 42 (boy of fourteen years, employed to operate a punching machine, ordered to assist in screwing on a misplaced nut, had his sleeve caught in a cog-wheel); Erickson v. Milwaukee, L. S. & W. R. Co. (1890) 83 Mich. 281, 47 N. W. 237 (common laborer ordered to uncouple cars, and injured by the fireman's negligence in letting off brakes without warning); Orman v. Mannix (1892) 17 Colo. 564, 17 L. R. A. 602, 30 Pac. 1037 (gang boss negligent in ordering a boy fourteen or fifteen years of age to run and throw away an ignited stick of giant powder); Brazill Block Coal Co. v. Gaffney (1889) 119 Ind. 455, 4 L. R. A. 850, 21 N. E. 1102 (in-against the switch stand, and from there upon the ground in such a position that the rear wheels of the caboose ran over his left arm.

We shall assume, for the purposes of this case, that if, on these facts, plaintiff is entitled to recover, there exists no other ground for a reversal of the order appealed from, and the verdict in plaintiff's favor cannot be set aside. We shall also assume that the evidence as to the custom prevailing among brakemen to change clothing as they approach terminals, and to leave their working clothes in the cabooses at the end of trips was of such a nature as to warrant the jury in finding that such brakemen were licensed by defendant to do this very thing,—to leave their clothing in any caboose which happened to be attached to the train on which they had made a trip, and without regard to what was almost a certainty that with the next train to which they were assigned there would be another conductor, and a different caboose. Assuming this, it would seem to be true that these brakemen had the right to subsequently visit these cabooses for the purpose of obtaining their clothing, and in so doing again became licensees. Counsel for defendant concedes this. But it does not follow from the fact that they were licensed to remove their clothing from the cabooses that the right could be exercised at all times and under all circumstances, or that an unreasonable use of this license could be made. It is elementary that the defendant company owed no duty to plaintiff if he was not, when injured, engaged in serving it in the line or within the scope of his employment. Although he was in its general service, the defendant could not be liable for experienced boy of ten years ordered to leave his ordinary work and assist in switching coal cars; Kehler v. Schwenk (1892) 151 Pa. 519, 25 Atl. 130 (boy of fourteen, employed as slate picker, ordered, against his will, to drive a dump car).

A trial judge in a Federal court charged the jury that a higher degree of care is required of the master in the case of a minor employee than in the case of an adult, especially in seeing that he does not assume risks without the scope of his employment. Robertson v. Cornelison (1888) 34 Fed. Rep. 716.

In Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Bayfield (1877) 37 Mich. 205, the court upheld an instruction to the effect that, if they found that the deceased, at the time he was employed by the defendant, was a lad of seventeen or eighteen years of age, inexperienced in the handling of brakes, and that he was unfitted for that work by reason of his unskillfulness, inexperience, and youth, and this was known to Smith, his foreman, and that he was employed at the time of his death and for some months previous thereto in the capacity of a common laborer only, and was ordered by the foreman to brake on said train out of the line of his duty as such common laborer, and that, while attempting to obey such order, he fell from the cars and was killed, without negligence on his part, the case of the plaintiff was established.

Or where the superior who gives the order directly augments, by a wrongful act amounting to an abuse of his power, the perils of the new duties.

In Rodman v. Michigan C. R. Co. (1884) 55 Mich. 57, 54 Am. Rep. 348, 20 N. W. 788, the court was equally divided upon the question whether a brakeman could recover for an injury caused by the conductor's undertaking to manage an engine in the absence of the engineer. This division of opinion was due simply to a divergence of views as to the principle which should control the case, and not to any difference of opinion concerning the doctrine stated in the text. Champlin, J., took the ground that it was implied, as part of the contract between the plaintiff and defendant, that the engine should be operated by a competent engineer, and that the plaintiff did not assume the risk which would be incident to the employment in case the engine should be operated by a person without the requisite skill and experience, as this would put him in a position of greatly increased peril. The learned judge then proceeded thus: "In this case it is alleged in the declaration that the conductor was the agent of defendant, and had charge of 48 L. R. A.

the train and command of the other employees of defendant on the train, including the plaintiff. He was put, therefore, by the defendant in his place to discharge the duty which the defendant owed to the plaintiff, to see that the employees of the defendant were discharging the respective duties required of them, and in the discharge of this duty the conductor was not a coservant, but the representative of the defendant, who in that respect is bound by the act or omission of the conductor the same as though such acts had been done or omitted by defendant personally. And the defendant having placed the conductor in a position of authority over the plaintiff and other servants, and made them subject to his direction and control, while the defendant is not chargeable for the consequences of directions given by such superior officer within the scope of the general employment, he is chargeable to plaintiff for an abuse of such authority as much as he would be to a stranger. . . . Suppose the conductor had ordered a day laborer or an entire stranger to take the place of the engineer during his temporary absence, and through his negligence, carelessness, and want of skill plaintiff had received the injury complained of without fault on his part, it would have constituted such an abuse of authority as to render the defendant liable. It was likewise an abuse of his authority in the conductor to order the brakeman to couple the cars in the absence of the engineer, while he himself, being a person unfit, incompetent, and lacking the requisite skill and experience, attempted to manage and operate the locomotive engine in making such coupling. By the exercise of his authority the conductor ordered the plaintiff to perform services of increased peril not contemplated by his contract with defendant. The case is no different from what it would have been had the defendant been a natural person, and, without possessing the requisite skill and experience and being wholly unfit and incompetent, had himself undertaken to run and manage the engine, and had at the same time ordered the plaintiff to couple the cars, and the injury had resulted in consequence of the want of fitness, competency, skill, and experience of defendant. The defendant is equally liable for the acts of his agent, the conductor, as if they were his own, when such acts are an abuse of his authority, or where he stands in place of the defendant." Cooley, Ch. J., referring to the case of Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Bayfield (1877) 37 Mich. 205, which had been cited as conclusively showing the right of the plaintiff to recover, said: "That case injuries received while plaintiff was engaged in an enterprise foreign to his employment. If Olson was acting for himself when he got on the way car, or when he got off and encountered the switch, and was not exercising his right as a licensee in a reasonable manner, the defendant did not fail in the performance of its obligation, was not derelict, and is not liable for the unfortunate result; for it was only bound to exercise reasonable care while plaintiff was acting within and under his license, not when he went beyond, and was upon its trains or on its premises without justification. And defendant duly performed its duty when it furnished safe appliances and a safe place for plaintiff while he was engaged in the line of his duty. It was not negligent if at the time and under the circumstances it owed him no duty. We have stated the manner in which plaintiff's injuries were received, and it is clear that he was licensed, not only to go to Williams's caboose to get his clothing, but also to Campbell's caboose, that he might obtain a few hours' sleep before the train started and his labors began; and while so occupied in a reasonable manner he would be acting within the scope and line of his employment. If, while sleeping in the caboose, a collision had occurred involving defendant's negligence, and plaintiff had been injured, it is quite probable that under the doctrine of Rosenbaum v. St. Paul & D. R. Co. 38 Minn. 173, 36 N. W. 447, damages could have been recovered. And probably, had he been run down in a negligent manner while in the yard, without fault of his own, an action could have been maintained. But the present case is altogether different, and to support this verdict we seems to us altogether different from this. There a common laborer on a railroad was ordered by his superior to perform the duties of a brakeman, and while doing so was injured. He was ordered into a different service to any in which he had ever engaged and the order was plainly wrongful. But in this case the plaintiff was put to no new or different service, and the only complaint is that in the very service he agreed to perform he was exposed to a risk not properly belonging to it, and therefore not contemplated by his contract of service. The risk was certainly unusual, and probably not in the minds of either party when the plaintiff was employed; but that fact would not of itself determine the responsibility.

Accidental injuries are often, perhaps most generally, the results of unexpected causes; but if these causes arise in the course of a servant's employment, he must be deemed to have assumed their risks. And the only question there can be in this case is, whether the plaintiff was ordered to do something which under the circumstances was outside of his employment, so that, had he been inclined to do so, he might rightfully have refused obedience to the order. And this, as it seems to us, must depend upon whether, when the contingency appears to the conductor to render it necessary, that official may for the occasion take charge of the engine, and at the same time require the brakeman to continue to perform his service. That contingencies may and do arise in which the conductor should take charge of the engine for the time, is undoubted. The necessity may sometimes be as urgent as it is plain; and lives may depend upon it. This might happen from injury to the engineer, or sudden illness; and when to leave the train where the disability of the engineer occurs would endanger some other train. But there might be other reasons for the engineer leaving his post, for which the company would not be in fault, and the conductor, with the train in his charge and under obligation to avoid other trains, must act in the emergency as the necessities of the case shall require. His highest and plainest duty in some circumstances will be to take possession of the engine and operate it; and it cannot be possible that, when such is his duty, the brakeman may rightfully prevent its performance by refusing to remain at his post. . . . If under any circumstances the conductor may rightfully take charge of the engine, this suit must fail, as there is no allegation in the declaration to show that in this case he was not justified. And he, being the person responsible for the safety and management of the train, must be allowed a certain discretion in deciding upon emergencies, and the presumption must favor his action. And when he acts rightfully, it is contemplated in the employment of his subordinates that they, within their several spheres, shall assist him."

Or where the dangerous conditions are known to the master's superintendent and not to the servant. Rettig v. Fifth Ave. Transp. Co. (1893) 6 Misc. 328, 26 N. Y. Supp. 896; Gavigan v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. (1896) 110 Mich. 71, 67 N. W. 1097 (arguendo).

In Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Bayfield (1877) 37 Mich. 205, one of the grounds upon which it was denied that the risk was not on the servant's shoulders was that, although it was apparent to him that the service was more hazardous than that which he engaged for, this must have been better understood by the master's agent.

The liability in this instance is sometimes placed upon the specific ground that the servant was not cautioned as to the unknown dangers. Palmer v. Michigan C. R. Co. (1891) 87 Mich. 231, 49 N. W. 613.

In the following cases the omission to warn the servant was noted as an element of the master's culpability: Leary v. Boston & A. R. Co. (1885) 139 Mass. 580, 52 Am. Rep. 733, 2 N. E. 115; Union P. R. Co. v. Fort (1873) 17 Wall. 553, 21 L. ed. 739; Gavigan v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. (1896) 110 Mich. 71, 67 N. W. 1097; Walker v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. (1895) 104 Mich. 606, 62 N. W. 1032; Camp v. Hall (1897) 39 Fla. 535, 22 So. 792; Mary Lee Coal & R. Co. v. Chambliss (1892) 97 Ala. 171, 11 So. 807.

In Mann v. Oriental Print Works (1875) 11 R. I. 132, the following instruction was affirmed: "If the fireman, although employed only for a fireman, was placed under the orders of the engineer, and was by him suddenly called upon to assist in throwing on a belt, out of his own sphere, but within the sphere of duty of the engineer, and was thus subjected to a risk with which he was not acquainted, or to a peculiar and greater risk at that time and of which he was not informed or cautioned, the defendants would be liable."

Even proof that the servant to whom the order was given was young and inexperienced will not of itself support an averment of negligence. It must also be shown that the circumstances were such as to render the giving of the order negligence in relation to the servant coming under that description. See Mary Lee Coal & R. Co. v. Chambliss (1892) 97 Ala. 171, should be obliged to hold that, having a license to go to one caboose to get his clothes, he had the right in the night-time to go all over the yard, and finally to jump upon another, attached to a moving train, make search for his clothing, and then, with the train still in motion, to jump off in the darkness in a yard filled with side tracks, switches, and other necessary appliances, to say nothing of switching engines and moving freight cars. Some of the reported cases have gone quite far in sustaining verdicts where the question was a close one with respect to the line of duty when the accident occurred, but not one of these approaches this on the facts. The plaintiff was not acting within the line of his duty, nor within the scope of his employment, when jumping from the caboose, nor was he within his license.

Reference has been made to the Rosenbaum Case, and plaintiff's counsel insists that it warrants the verdict here. There is no ground for this view. Rosenbaum was rightfully on the train, and it was the duty of the company to provide a safe track. Here plaintiff was wrongfully upon a moving train. Nor was he injured by anything which happened to the train, but by the act of jumping off. Counsel for plaintiff urge 11 So. 897 (railroad company which directs a minor servant to perform some duty outside of his employment does not thereby become an insurer that its "ways, works, and machinery" are absolutely safe—fireman of seventeen years ordered to throw a switch which had a tendency to fly back), disapproving of the rule thus laid down in Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Adams (1886) 105 Ind. 151, 5 N. E. 187: When a servant is put at work outside of his employment, and is injured by reason of defective machinery, railroad tracks, etc., without his fault, the master is liable, regardless of the care he may have exercised to keep the machinery, railroad tracks, etc., in a safe condition. When a servant is thus ordered to work at a particular place, or with particular machinery outside of his employment, the master impliedly assures him, not only that he has exercised reasonable care to have the place, machinery, etc., in a safe condition, but also that they are in a safe condition and fit for the business for which they are used.

The Alabama court said: "We think the rule declared in the case cited . . . imparts into the contract of employment an obligation not within the contemplation of the parties, and one which no prudent employer would assume. . . . A railroad owes no higher duty to a passenger than that here imposed upon the master to his servant. Does not the master fully discharge his obligation in this respect to all his employees when he exercises reasonable care and diligence in seeing that the ways, works, and machinery are such as are in general use by well-regulated railroads, and that they are kept in proper condition? We know of no sound principle of law which exacts a higher degree of care and diligence on the part of the master to his employee than reasonable care and diligence. . . . Where the evidence shows that the employment is more dangerous than that within the scope of his employment, or that the servant is called to use machinery which requires skill not possessed by the servant and not in use in the regular course of his service of employment, the law very properly holds the master liable, under proper circumstances, for such injuries as may result from the increased danger; but the liability here rests upon different principles from those which would make the master an insurer that the ways, works, and machinery were absolutely perfect. It cannot be said that the master has exercised reasonable care and diligence for the safety of his servant, when, by his orders, the servant is exposed to greater peril than that which by his contract of employment he assumed, or when the master exposes his servant of immature years, or one inexperienced and unskilled without proper instruction and warning as to the peril of machinery or ways and works dangerous in their use."

48 L. R. A.

The passage cited from the Indiana case undoubtedly lays down the rule too strongly against the master. That the implied "assurance of safety" deduced from a specific order is merely an assurance of safety so far as reasonable care can attain it has, we think, never been denied as regards risks within the scope of the employment, and there is no apparent reason why such an assurance should bear a different meaning where the risk is one outside the scope of the employment.

In Anderson v. Morrison (1875) 22 Minn. 274, the contention was rejected that a cause of action arises in favor of a minor who is injured in consequence of being set at more dangerous work, whether this change in his duties was negligent or prudent. The court said: "The plaintiff claims that upon being injured in consequence of being set at more dangerous work a cause of action arises, whether setting him at the more dangerous work was, under the circumstances, a negligent or a prudent thing to do. This proposition is wrong, and the charge of the court correct. If an employer should set an adult, who had capacity to take care of himself, and who knew the risks, to do a dangerous work, of course the employer would not be liable for an injury occurring to the employee in doing the work. And it would be the same if the employee were a minor, but of sufficient capacity to avoid the danger, and who knew of the danger to be avoided. There could be no greater wrong in putting such a minor to do a work accompanied with risk than in setting an adult to do it; and when it would be proper to put a minor to do such work must necessarily depend upon the particular circumstances of each case, upon the character and degree of the danger, and the capacity of the minor to comprehend and avoid it. Putting the minor to do the work becomes a matter of discretion and care, to be exercised with reference to such circumstances, and the employer can be held liable only where he does not exercise such discretion and care—that is, where he is negligent. The case of Union P. R. Co. v. Fort (1873) 17 Wall. 553, 21 L. ed. 739, proceeds upon the proposition that the setting the minor in that case to do the perilous work for which he had not been employed was an imprudent act, and not on the ground merely that the work was perilous and the employee a minor."

A simple finding of a jury that the plaintiff did not comprehend the dangers incident to the work will not render the master liable. It must also be shown that this lack of comprehension was, or ought to have been, known to the master. Cole v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. (1898) 71 Wis. 128, 37 N. W. 84.

in their brief, that their client was in fact acting under defendant's orders at the time of the injury, and calls attention to the testimony found in folios 91 to 97, Paper Book. An examination of the testimony, which is the conversation between plaintiff, Gilson, and the train master at the latter's office at the time it was agreed that plaintiff should go out on No. 32, pretty conclusively shows that, if he had obeyed the train master's directions or orders, there given, he would have been asleep in Conductor Campbell's caboose when the accident happened, not far from 9 P. M., instead of pursuing a train in motion, and jumping on and off the platforms of the attached caboose as it moved through the yard. No injuries would have been received if the train master's directions had been promptly followed.

The verdict is set aside, and, as defendant's counsel moved for a verdict before the case was submitted to the jury, which motion should have been granted, and subsequently moved for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, the court below is ordered to cause judgment to be entered in defendant's favor on the remanding of the case.

Under the general principle of the law of agency, the master cannot escape responsibility on the plea that the superior servant who gave the negligent order should not have given it. Union P. R. Co. v. Fort (1873) 17 Wall. 553, 21 L. ed. 739.

To let in the application of the special principles appropriate to this class of cases, it must, in any event, appear that the order really did take the servant outside the scope of his original employment, and not merely direct the performance of duties somewhat different to those which were required from him in the regular course of his work.

In Curran v. Merchants' Mfg. Co. (1881) 180 Mass. 374, 39 Am Rep. 457, it was contended that the case was taken out of the ordinary line of cases in which the servant is an adult by the fact that the plaintiff, who was fourteen and a half years of age, and had worked in the mill two and a half years, was of tender years, and was set to work in an unusual place, doing what he was not accustomed to do. This argument was rejected on the ground that the evidence was that the work he was doing was precisely what he had been accustomed to do from time to time during the whole term of his employment by the defendant, and that his injury did not proceed from the fact that he was working in dangerous proximity to other machinery over which he had no control.

A father recovered damages for the death of a minor son through the negligence of a fellow servant, while he was engaged in work which, although it was outside the scope of his regular employment, he had sometimes done before with the knowledge of the father. Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Hammersley (1867) 28 Ind. 371. A complaint alleging that the injury was received while the servant, a tunnel repairer, was traveling on a train from one tunnel to another under the order of the superintendent, does not show a wrongful transfer from his general line of employment. Copper v. Louisville, E. & St. L. R. Co. (1885) 103 Ind. 305, 2 N. E. 749.

IV. Risks of work outside scope of employment, when deemed to be assumed.

The mere fact that a servant yielded obedience to an order which required him to undertake duties different from those covered by the agreement under which he entered the employment will not justify the inference that he assumed the risks accompanying the performance of the new duties. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Bayfield (1877) 37 Mich. 205; Union P. R. Co. v. Fort (1873) 17 Wall. 553, 21 L. ed. 739; Leary v. Boston & A. R. Co. (1885) 139 Mass. 580, 52 Am. Rep. 733, 2 N. E. 115; Northern P. Coal Co. v. Richmond (1893) 15 U. S. App. 262, 8 Fed. Rep. 756, 7 C. C. A. 485 (boy employed as "trapper" in mine directed to assist drawers of cars); Helm v. O'Rourke 48 L. R. A.

(1894) 46 La. Ann. 178, 15 So. 400 (workman killed by the bursting of a boiler while it was being tested, he having been called away from his regular duties); Michael v. Roanoke Mach. Works (1894) 90 Va. 492, 19 S. E. 261 (boiler maker's helper temporarily removed to another department); Consolidated Coal Co. v. Haenni (1893) 146 Ill. 614, 35 N. E. 162, Affirming (1892) 48 Ill. App. 115 (blacksmith directed to assist in raising a smoke-stack).

The servant's implied assumption of risks is confined to the particular work and class of work for which he is employed. There is no implied undertaking except as it accompanies and is a part of the contract of hiring between the parties. On the other hand, if the servant, by the orders of the master, is carried beyond the contract of hiring, he is carried away from his implied undertaking as to risks. If the master orders him to work temporarily in another department of the general business, where the work is of such a different nature and character that it cannot be said to be within the scope of the employment, and where he is associated with a different class of employees, he will not, by obeying such orders, necessarily assume the risks incident to the work, and the risks of negligence on the part of such employees. Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Adams (1886) 105 Ind. 151, 164, 5 N. E. 187.

The following from a well-known text book has been judicially approved: "It has been often—and very justly—remarked that a man may decline any exceptionally dangerous employment, but if he voluntarily engages in it he should not complain because it is dangerous. Nevertheless, where one has entered upon the employment and assumed the incidental risks, it is not reasonable to hold that other risks which he is directed by the master to assume are to be left to rest upon his shoulders, merely because he did not take upon himself the responsibility of throwing up the employment instead of obeying the order." Cooley Torts, 555, quoted in Brasil Block Coal Co. v. Hoodlet (1891) 129 Ind. 327, 336, 27 N. E. 741.

Knowledge of the danger the material point.

Such an assumption must be established by the same evidence as is required in the case of other kinds of extraordinary risks. It is absolutely negatived by proof that the servant was excusably ignorant of the risk to which his obedience exposed him. Palmer v. Michigan C. R. Co. (1891) 37 Mich. 281, 49 N. W. 613 (section man upon a railroad does not assume the risks incident to loading rails upon a moving train in an unusual manner); Walker v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. (1895) 104 Mich. 606, 62 N. W. 1032 (section foreman killed by the recoil of a trolley wire which he was ordered by the roadmaster to cut. Grant, J., dissented on the ground that this consequence was a patent risk, as well as on the more general ground that no negligence on the part of the company was established in regard to the supply of improper tools for the work).

As where the summons to undertake the unfamiliar duties has to be obeyed promptly, and the servant neither knows the danger nor how to guard against it. Mann v. Oriental Print Works (1875) 11 R. I. 152 (one hired as a fireman suddenly called on to assist the engineer in throwing a belt).

Or where the servant, by reason of his youth or inexperience, is incapable of understanding the hazards to be encountered.

On the other hand, the responsibility for such injuries as may result from obedience to the order will be held to have been accepted by the servant under any circumstances which would have justified that inference, where the extraordinary risk was one within the scope of the original contract.

In Fort Smith Oil Co. v. Slover (1893) 58 Ark. 168, 24 S. W. 106, the following instruction was disapproved: "The servant's implied assumption of risk is confined to the particular work or class of work for which he is employed. There is no implied undertaking of risks, except such as accompany, and are part of, the contract of hiring between the parties. If the servant, by the express or implied authority of the master, is carried beyond the contract of hiring, he is carried away from his implied undertaking as to risks. If the master orders him to work temporarily in another department of the general business where the work is of such a different nature and character that it cannot be said to be within the scope of the employment, and where he is associated with a different class of employees, he will not, by obeying such orders, assume the risks incident to that service, or assume the risks of the negligence of such class of employees, but would be entitled to recover, if injured by reason of the negligence of such class of employees; provided he himself was not guilty of contributory negligence."

He assumes, therefore, all the ordinary risks of the new duties. Millar v. Madison Car Co. (1895) 130 Mo. 517, 31 S. W. 574 (the court remarked that by its ruling it did not mean that the servant assumed the risk of a defective appliance of which he knew nothing, or dangers which were not viable, but the risks that ordinarily attended the working of a reasonably safe appliance of the same character).

So far as he is competent to apprehend them. Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Adams (1886) 105 Ind. 151, 5 N. E. 187.

Whether he be a minor or an adult. See the passage cited in III. supra, from the opinion in Anderson v. Morrison (1875) 22 Minn. 274.

So far as the language goes, Foley v. California Horseshoe Co. (1896) 115 Cal. 184, 47 Pac. 42, seems to be contra as regards minors; but the case is one of those in which the phrase "assumption of risks" is improperly used to express a want of care.

The risks thus presumed to be accepted are those susceptible of being described by the same words that are employed to describe extraordinary risks within the scope of the original employment; as "apparent." Walker v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. (1895) 104 Mich. 606, 62 N. W. 1032.

Or "obvious." Feely v. Pearson Cordage Co. (1894) 161 Mass. 426, 37 N. E. 368; Leary v. Boston & A. B. Co. (1885) 139 Mass. 580, 52 Am. Rep. 733, 2 N. E. 115 (for facts, see VII. b. infra); Wormell v. Maine C. R. Co. (1887) 79 Me. 397, 10 Atl. 49; Gavigan v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. (1896) 110 Mich. 71, 67 N. W. 48 L. R. A.

1097 (experienced section hand engaged with others in relaying a spur track during the progress of which it became necessary to move cars, was climbing at the command of the section boss upon one of the cars to set the brakes thereon and injured by the act of the other hands in violently bumping said car with another).

Or so "open and manifest" that an ordinary man, under the same circumstances, would have ascertained them by the exercise of reasonable diligence. East St. Louis Ice & Cold Storage Co. v. Sculley (1896) 63 Ill. App. 147.

So, also, no action is maintainable, where the servant had, as compared with the master, a better opportunity to see and know the extent of the danger. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Fowler (1882) 56 Tex. 452 (employee killed by derailment due to a wash-out while traveling on a relief train).

Or an equal opportunity. Thus, the fact that an employee in a quarry was called from a safe employment to that upon which he was engaged at the time of the accident will not enable him to recover for injuries from the fall on him of the stone under which he was drilling, such fall being due to seams in the stone, and the hammering by the foreman upon the wedges at the top, where such employee was experienced in quarry work, knew the existence of seams and the danger therefrom, and had an equal opportunity with the master and foreman of ascertaining whether there were seams in the particular stone. Reed v. Stockmeyer (1896) 34 U. S. App. 727, 74 Fed. Rep. 186, 20 C. C. A. 381.

This rule, of course, contemplates a comprehension of the danger, and not merely a knowledge of the material conditions. Northern P. Coal Co. v. Richmond (1893) 15 U. S. App. 262, 58 Fed. Rep. 756, 7 C. C. A. 485, (boy of fourteen injured through stumbling over a lump of coal near a track in a mine, he being aware that it was there—for jury to say whether he appreciated the risk).

According to several decisions in Indiana, the fact that the risk involved was as open to the observation of the servant as of the master will not warrant the inference that it was assumed, as in cases where the work was within the scope of the employment, the theory being that the master's order operates as an implied assurance of safety which precludes him from raising any defense but that of contributory negligence. The doctrine so formulated, it will be observed, makes the specific order the controlling factor, and brings this class of cases within the range of the same principle as those developed in the note to McKee v. Tourtelotte (Mass.) ante, 542; Nall v. Louisville N. A. & C. R. Co. (1891) 129 Ind. 260, 28 N. E. 183, 611 (employee called out to avert the threatened destruction of a bridge by a freshet); Louisville, E. & St. L. Consol. R. Co. v. Hanning (1892) 131 Ind. 528, 31 N. E. 187 (car repairer directed by his superior to repair a car on a switch track, instead of on the tracks provided for that special purpose and upon which no trains are run or switched).

The position of the court is thus explained in Brazil Block Coal Co. v. Hoodlet (1891) 129 Ind. 327, 27 N. E. 741 (servant who usually worked above ground as a blacksmith injured while passing round an unprotected shaft the condition of which was obvious, after he had completed some work in it).

"When a master orders a servant to do something which involves encountering a risk not contemplated in his employment, although the risk is equally open to the observation of both, it does not necessarily follow that the servant either assumes the increased risk, or is aggent in obeying the order. If the apparent danger is such that a man of ordinary prudence would not take the risk, the servant acts at his peril. But unless the apparent danger is such as to deter a man of ordinary prudence from encountering it, the servant will not be compelled to abandon the service, or assume all additional risk, but may obey the order, using care in proportion to the risk apparently assumed, and if he is injured the master must respond in damages." See also Arcade File Works v. Juteau (1896) 15 Ind. App. 461, 40 N. E. 818, 44 N. E. 326.

The effect of this theory is that the master becomes an insurer of the safety of the servant. Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Adams (1886) 105 Ind. 151, 5 N. E. 187. Yet the case expressly recognizes the doctrine that risks, if comprehended, are assumed.

Even where an assumption of the risk may be inferred, the servant may still recover if it appears that the master, by his failure to discharge his continuing duty to keep the appliances safe, has exposed the servant to additional risks after the new work has been undertaken. Nail v. Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. (1891) 129 Ind. 260, 28 N. E. 183, 611.

As in all cases of extraordinary risks, the question whether the servant appreciated the risks of new duties is primarily for the jury. Foley v. California Horseshoe Co. (1896) 115 Cal. 184, 47 Pac. 42.

V. Doctrine of common employment qualified as regards servants working outside the scope of their employment.

An important exception to the doctrine of common employment is created by the rule that the giving of an order which requires the servant to perform duties not included in the original contract constitutes actionable negligence where such servant is plainly unfitted for the new duties.

The nature and extent of this exception may be stated thus: The principle that the master is not precluded from relying on the defense of common employment by the mere fact that the plaintiff's injury was received in consequence of his complying with an order given by a superior coservant having the right to control him as to the manner of doing his work, is not applicable in cases where that order requires the performance of duties outside the scope of the plaintiff's original contract. Under these circumstances the sole question to be determined, in so far as the master's liability depends upon the representative character of the delinquent coservant, is whether the order which occasioned the injury was one which he had authority to give.

In Union P. R. Co. v. Fort (1873) 17 Wall. 553, 21 L. ed. 739, affirming (1871) 2 Dill. 250, Fed. Cas. No. 4,952, the court, after stating the rule as to common employment, said: "This rule proceeds on the theory that the employee, in entering the service of the principal, is presumed to take upon himself the risks incident to the undertaking, among which are to be counted the negligence of fellow servants in the same employment, and that considerations of public policy require the enforcement of the rule. But this presumption cannot arise where the risk is not within the contract of service, and the servant had no reason to believe he would have to encounter it. If it were otherwise, principals would be released from all obligations to make reparation to an employee in a subordinate position for any injury caused by the wrongful conduct of the person placed over him, whether they were fellow servants in the same common service or not. Such a doctrine would be subversive of all just ideas of the obligations arising out of the contract of service, and withdraw all protection from the subordinate employees of railroad corporations. These corporations, instead of being required to conduct their business so as not to endanger life, would, so far as this class of persons were concerned, be relieved of all pecuniary responsibility in case they failed to do it. A doctrine that leads to such results is unsupported by reason, and cannot receive our sanction. . . . If the order had been given to a person of mature years, who had not engaged to do such work, although enjoined to obey the directions of his superior, it might with some plausibility be argued that he should have disobeyed it, as he must have known that its execution was attended with danger. Or, at any rate, if he chose to obey, that he took upon himself the risks incident to the service. But this boy occupied a very different position. How could he be expected to know the peril of the undertaking? He was a mere youth, without experience, and not familiar with machinery. Not being able to judge for himself he had a right to rely on the judgment of Collett, and, doubtless, entered upon the execution of the order without apprehension of danger."

One of the grounds on which the decision in Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Bayfield (1877) 37 Mich. 205, rested, was thus stated by Cooley, Ch. J.: "We also think that where the superior servant, by means of an authority which he exercises by delegation of the master, wrongfully exposes the service, and in consequence he is injured, the master must respond. It is only where the risks properly pertain to the business, and are incident to it, that the master is excused from responsibility; and, a risk of this nature not being one of the kind, the general rule applies, and he must answer for the misconduct of his agent."

The court adopted the broad contention of the plaintiff that, if the master wrongfully sends his servant into a dangerous place, or exposes him to a risk not connected with the service and in consequence he is injured, the rule which exempts the master from responsibility has no application, because the risk is not one which the servant has assumed; and that if, instead of being sent by the master in person, the servant is thus wrongfully exposed to danger by one whom the master has placed over him, and to whose orders he is subjected, the responsibility is the same; the wrongful act of this superior being in law the wrongful act of the master himself.

This case was followed in Walker v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. (1895) 104 Mich. 606, 62 N. W. 1032, and by two judges in Rodman v. Michigan C. R. Co. (1884) 65 Mich. 57, 54 Am. Rep. 348, 20 N. W. 788.

In Hayes v. Colchester Mills (1894) 69 Vt. 1, 37 Atl. 269, the court argued as follows: If this service was beyond the plaintiff's capacity, and so outside the scope of his employment, he did not assume the risks attendant upon it. A person of mature years might have been held to have assumed them by consenting to do the work; but the rights of a child are not permitted to depend upon his ability to discriminate promptly as to the work required of him, or to refuse obedience to the command of his superior. This limitation of the plaintiff's risk renders the doctrine of fellow servant inapplicable. In entering the defendant's service, the plaintiff assumed only such risks arising from the negligence of his coemployees as might be incurred within the scope of his employment. So it is not necessary to determine whether the nature and extent of Sturgis's authority over the plaintiff were such as to exclude him from the relation of fellow servant. The effect of his authority over the plaintiff is to be considered without reference to that relation. The defendant assigned Sturgis to the care of the machinery, and placed the plaintiff under his orders. If Sturgis, acting within the sphere of his own duty, required of the plaintiff a service which was outside his employment, and which a prudent master would not have imposed upon a person of his years, strength, and judgment, the defendant is liable for the consequences of the improper order.

In Brazil Block Coal Co. v. Gaffney (1889) 119 Ind. 455, 4 L. R. A. 850, 21 N. E. 1102, the court, in holding that a mine boss who directed a ten-year-old boy to leave his own work and undertake more dangerous duties, was not a fellow servant of the boy, said: "Nor do we rest our conclusion upon the maxim Respondet superior. Mushett (if not Haines) under the circumstances of this case, was the agent of the appellant, and the superior of the appellee. It was his right to command, and the appellee's duty to obey, and, considering the immature age of the appellee, we must assume that he obeyed the commands of his superiors, supposing that it was his duty so to do, without regard to the dangers or hazards that he would encounter, and without a knowledge thereof."

See also Jones v. Old Dominion Cotton Mills (1886) 82 Va. 140 (order given by foreman); Mann v. Oriental Print Works (1875) 11 R. I. 152 (order given by engineer to fireman); Orman v. Mannix (1892) 17 Colo. 564, 17 L. R. A. 602, 30 Pac. 1037 (order given by gang foreman); and the cases cited, passim, in note.

In nearly all the cases in which this aspect of the master's liability has come under consideration the injured servant has been a minor, and language has sometimes been used which indicates that the benefit of this qualification of the doctrine of common employment can only be claimed by minors.

Mann v. Oriental Print Works (1875) 11 R. I. 152, was a case of an adult, so far as appears.

In Randall v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. (1883) 109 U. S. 483, 27 L. ed. 1005, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 322, Gray, J., said that the principle of Union P. R. Co. v. Fort (1873) 17 Wall. 558, 21 L. ed. 739, was that, the servant "being a minor, he was performing, by direction of his superior, work outside of and disconnected with the contract which his father had made for him with the defendant."

In Leary v. Boston & A. R. Co. (1885) 130 Mass. 580, 52 Am. Rep. 733, 2 N. E. 115, also, it was remarked that the controlling factor was that plaintiff was a minor.

But with all deference to the eminent judges who have taken this view, the present writer ventures to express an opinion that it is neither consistent with the reason of the qualification nor sustained by the authorities, not excepting even the case commented upon. One of the grounds upon which the Supreme Court of the United States upheld the servant's right of action in Union P. R. Co. v. Fort (1873) 17 Wall. 558, 21 L. ed. 739 (as will be seen by reading the extract from the opinion in note), was that he "had no reason to believe he would have to encounter" the risk which caused his injury. Manifestly this element of nonanticipation is of precisely the same evidential import in the case of adults as in the case of servants, in so far as it operates prima facie to negative that knowledge which is supposed to exist with regard to the ordinary risks of work within the scope of the employment. Up to this stage of the inquiry, therefore, adults and minors stand on the same footing.

The second question involved is that which is discussed in the latter part of the opinion in Union P. R. Co. v. Fort, viz., whether this presumption of excusable ignorance is overcome by the specific evidence which is relied upon to prove actual or constructive notice of the risk. This question is wholly distinct from the other, and, in considering it, the minority of the servant undoubtedly becomes material, for exactly the same reasons as where the extraordinary risk is one within the scope of the servant's employment. To this extent, therefore, and no further, it is submitted, the tender age of the plaintiff is a controlling factor in the cases which established this limitation of the doctrine of common employment. Minority, in short, makes it more difficult for the master ultimately to prevail on the ground of an assumption of the risks of new duties, but this is only because the general inference of a nonassumption of those risks which is drawn from the servant's nonanticipation is more readily rebutted by specific evidence in the case of adults than in the case of minors.

VI. Contributory negligence as a defense.

In obeying orders generally.

The general rule, as formulated by an eminent judge, is that, where a master commands a servant to go outside of his regular employment to do a work which is attended with special danger, and the servant, in response to the specific commands of his master, goes and does the work in the way and at the time directed, the fact that the servant knew that it was dangerous renders him, as matter of law, guilty of contributory negligence, unless the character of the danger be so patent and so extreme that no one but a foolhardy, reckless man would attempt it. English v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (1885) 24 Fed. Rep. 908, per Brewer, J. A similar principle holds where the order was given by a superior servant, clothed with authority to direct the servant who brings the action.

In Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Bayfield (1877) 37 Mich. 205, it was agreed that, even if the superior servant who gave the order represented the company ad hanc vicem, the act of the plaintiff in obeying was his own voluntary act, and that the case was the ordinary one of contributory negligence. This contention did not prevail. Cooley, Ch. J., said: "When one person engages in the employment of another, he undertakes to obey all lawful orders, and he subjects himself, for any failure to do so, to the double liability of being expelled from the employment and of being required to pay damages. It is true the master had no right to direct him to do anything not contemplated in the employment; but when one thus contracts to submit himself to the orders of another, there must be some presumption that the orders he receives are lawful, the giving of the orders being of itself an assumption that they are lawful; and the servant who refused to obey would take upon himself the burden of showing a lawful reason for the refusal. This of itself is sufficient reason for excusing the servant who declines the responsibility in any case in which doubts can possibly exist. He should assume that the order is given in good faith and in the belief that it is rightful; and if, in his own judgment, it is unwarranted, it is not for the master to insist that the servant was in the wrong in not refusing obedience. Respect for the master, as well as a consideration for his own interest, may very properly induce him to waive his own judgment for that of his superior, and, instead of engaging in disputes, and being, perhaps, ejected from his employment, to leave questions of doubt for future settlement. Now, although we think on the facts, as the jury has found them, there was no authority to send Williams to handle the brakes, yet the point was not so clear but that serious question was made of it on the trial, and it would be grossly unjust to compel the servant at his peril to decide correctly on the validity of an order presumptively lawful when the consequences of even a correct decision might be apparent insubordination, and perhaps difficulty and litigation. It is perfectly just under such circumstances to leave upon the master the responsibility he assumed in giving an unwarranted order, and to hold that the servant is not blamable in yielding obedience to his superior."

See also Galveston Oil Co. v. Thompson (1890) 76 Tex. 235, 13 S. W. 60; Clark County Cement Co. v. Wright (1897) 16 Ind. App. 630, 45 N. E. 817 (complaint not demurrable because it shows undertaking of new and more dangerous duties); Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Adams (1886) 105 Ind. 151, 5 N. E. 187 (arguendo).

In Frandsen v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. (1873) 36 Iowa, 872, it was argued that if it was negligence for a foreman of a repair gang to order his men to enter the railway cutting with a handcar which was run down, it was negligence on the part of plaintiff to go upon it, and that he should have refused. But the court said: "A judicial sanction to such insubordination would breed an infinity of accidents. Although the train was behind time, this would not justify the boss and men, who constitute the repairing force, in setting off their hand car and awaiting the train. It might not arrive for hours, or possibly might itself be awaiting the arrival of the hand car with men, tools, and materials to repair a breach or remove obstructions which stayed its progress. The repairing force, then, should move on, both prudently and obediently, to the discharge of its full duty."

See also Kehler v. Schwenk (1892) 151 Pa. 519, 25 Atl. 130; Orman v. Mannix (1892) 17 Colo. 564, 17 L. R. A. 602, 30 Pac. 1037; Camp v. Hall (1897) 39 Fla. 585, 22 So. 792.

Special reasons for not imputing negligence exist, where the servant's excusable ignorance of the danger to be encountered is a reasonable inference from the fact that he had no time for reflection or choice. Rush v. Missouri P. R. Co. (1887) 36 Kan. 129, 12 Pac. 582; Dowling v. Allen (1881) 74 Mo. 13, 41 Am. Rep. 298 (boy of seventeen ordered to stop an engine, such work not being a part of his duty, and to hurry, was caught by an uncovered set-screw); Hale Elevator Co. v. Trude (1891) 41 Ill. App. 253 (servant in hasty response abandoned his regular work to add his strength to that of other employees to overcome a present emergency).

A boy of fourteen who suddenly receives an order from his foreman to pick up and throw away a stick of giant powder which has caught fire is not, as matter of law, negligent in obeying, as he has neither time for the close weighing of chances nor the opportunity to comprehend fully the danger of the service to which he is assigned. Orman v. Mannix (1892) 17 Colo. 564, 17 L. R. A. 602, 30 Pac. 1037.

Or where, by reason of his youth and inexperience he was incapable of determining whether the work required is within the scope of his employment. Hayes v. Colchester Mills (1894) 69 Vt. 1, 37 Atl. 269. 48 L. R. A.

Or believes himself bound to render obedience to the order. Mary Lee Coal & R. Co. v. Chambliss (1892) 97 Ala. 171, 11 So. 897 (minor of seventeen years, employed as a fireman, was ordered to throw a switch).

Or does not comprehend the danger of the new work to which he is assigned.

The fact that a boy of fourteen, injured in a mine by stumbling over a piece of coal lying upon the track while endeavoring, in pursuance of directions of the superintendent directing him to a service outside of the duty of his regular employment and without the knowledge of his parents, to throw off the brake upon a coal car, had seen such piece of coal before he was injured, does not render him, as matter of law, guilty of contributory negligence, since it does not follow, as a conclusion of law, that his judgment had reached such maturity that he was apprised of the danger of running alongside the tracks or setting or removing the brakes under such circumstances. Northern P. Coal Co. v. Richmond (1893) 15 U. S. App. 262, 58 Fed. Rep. 756, 7 C. C. A. 485.

Of course, even a minor who fully understands the risks of using an appliance which he is not hired to operate will be held liable for a failure to use the care appropriate to the circumstances for the prevention of injury. Michael v. Stanley (1892) 75 Md. 464, 23 Atl. 1094.

A servant is not required to weigh nicely the question whether any particular order is one which his superior has a right to give. Orman v. Mannix (1892) 17 Colo. 564, 17 L. R. A. 602, 30 Pac. 1037.

Nor will a servant who is charged with various duties be held, upon uncertain and refined distinctions, to have been negligent when in good faith he performed a service outside of the line of his duty. Grannis v. Chicago, St. P. & K. C. R. Co. (1890) 81 Iowa, 444, 46 N. W. 1007 (finding upheld that a wiper in a roundhouse injured while attempting to couple an engine to a car in assisting to take the engine out of the roundhouse, was acting in the line of his duty while making the coupling, the proof being that the plaintiff, although he had never attempted to do such work before, was a man of all work, and required to assist in taking engines into and bringing them out of the roundhouse, and it is shown that other wipers coupled cars).

But clearly he can never be justified in obeying an order which takes him outside his regular duties, where he has been expressly instructed to obey the orders of the superior servant only in so far as they relate to his own department. Mann v. Oriental Print Works (1875) 11 R. I. 152, where it was also held that, unless the plaintiff fireman had been instructed not to obey the engineer except in the line of the fireman's employment, the engineer was authorized to call upon him for assistance in any matter within the engineer's department, and the defendant would be liable, even if there was another person who might more properly be called upon.

A servant who is sent to do a piece of work with a machine with which he is not familiar is bound to inquire as to the method of its operation. The failure to seek this information will debar him from recovering for an injury caused by operating it, if it is free from defects. Millar v. Madison Car Co. (1895) 130 Mo. 517, 31 S. W. 574.

Where the particular manner in which the new duties are to be performed is left to the discretion of the servant, he cannot recover if he performs them in a way obviously calculated to cause the injury complained of. Wormell v. Maine C. R. Co. (1887) 79 Me. 397, 10 Atl.

49 (workman whose ordinary duties were in a car shop injured while coupling cars, under the direction of his foreman. Hand placed where servant could not help seeing it must be caught by the buffer).

Or fails to take the precautions against accident which would have suggested themselves to a prudent man. English v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (1885) 24 Fed. Rep. 906 (servant was ordered to repair a water tank, and fell from a narrow, ice-covered platform on which he stood).

Or to exercise that measure of skill which he possesses. Boettger v. Scherpe & K. Architectural Iron Co. (1894) 124 Mo. 87, 27 S. W. 466 (one hired as a common laborer not required to possess such skill in choosing lumber for a scaffold as will debar him from recovery for injuries received through the breaking of a piece of timber used in erecting the structure).

VII. Absence of compulsion, an essential element of assumption of risks and contributory negligence.

a. Generally.

As in cases of injuries from other kinds of extraordinary risks, neither an assumption of risks outside the scope of the original employment, nor contributory negligence in encountering those risks, can be predicated, unless it is shown that the work was undertaken voluntarily.

Actual compulsion will readily be inferred where the servant is a minor.

In Kehler v. Schwenk (1892) 151 Pa. 505, 25 Atl. 130, one of the elements of liability which was held to warrant a verdict for the plaintiff, a boy of fourteen, was that he was urged into the new service against his will.

An action is unavailing upon a complaint which alleges that a minor was not engaged in the service which he was hired to perform, but that he was "compelled" by the fellow servant to labor at a business much more perilous, and was injured while so engaged. The court said: "There was then no opportunity to adjust the compensation with a view to the risk. There was no consent to perform the service on any terms. It was a compulsory service; and under such circumstances neither justice nor policy requires that the master shall be acquitted of responsibility." Chicago & G. E. R. Co. v. Harney (1867) 28 Ind. 30, 92 Am. Dec. 282.

The rights of a child are not permitted to depend upon his ability to discriminate promptly as to the work required of him, or to refuse obedience to the command of his superior. Hayes v. Colchester Mills (1894) 69 Vt. 1, 37 Atl. 269.

See also Patnode v. Warren Cotton Mills (1892) 167 Mass. 283, 32 N. E. 161 (servant fourteen years of age, and of less than ordinary intelligence, injured while obeying peremptory orders, given with an oath, to assist in operating a machine at which he was not employed to work, the danger attending which was partially concealed from his view, held not negligent, as matter of law).

But, where he is an adult, compulsion is surmised only under exceptional circumstances. See, however, the extracts from the opinion in Brazil Block Coal Co. v. Hoodlet (1891) 129 Ind. 327, 27 N. E. 741 (work done under orders volenti non fit).

b. Protest or objection by servant.

The principle that the failure of the servant to protest against the maintenance of abnormally dangerous conditions due to the master's negligence is a circumstance which points strongly, and even conclusively, to the inference that the servant was willing to assume the resulting risks, is equally applicable where the peril is extraordinary in the sense with which we are now concerned.

A brakeman engaged with the distinct agreement that he is not to couple cars except with a stick, and is under no circumstances to go between cars having an engine attached, cannot recover for injuries received in going between the cars by direction of the engineer, on the ground that the duty was outside the scope of his employment, where he makes no objection. Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Finley (1894) 25 U. S. App. 16, 12 C. C. A. 595, 63 Fed. Rep. 223. To the same effect, see Cole v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. (1888) 71 Wis. 114, 37 N. W. 84.

The evidential import of a protest actually made depends, both upon the defense which has been raised, and upon the views of the court as to the economic social principles discussed in note to O'Maley v. South Boston Gaslight Co. 47 L. R. A. 165, Volenti non fit injuria, as a defense to actions by injured servants. If the defense is an assumption of the risks, the general principle which is almost universally held in the United States, that the servant cannot countervail the effect of his appreciation of the risk by showing that he entered a protest before undertaking his duties, is considered to be equally applicable whether the work to be done is within or outside the scope of the original employment. Accordingly we find it laid down that a servant of full age and adequate experience cannot cast upon the master all the risk of accident in the performance of new duties by simply protesting against being called upon to perform those duties. Under such circumstances he has the choice of either leaving the employment, or to remain and assume all the risks incident to the work he knows that he is expected to do. Wheeler v. Berry (1893) 95 Mich. 250, 54 N. W. 876, distinguishing Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Bayfield (1877) 37 Mich. 205, as being a decision based on the youth, weakness, and inexperience of the servant. To the same effect, is Leary v. Boston & A. R. Co. (1885) 139 Mass. 580, 52 Am. Rep. 733, 2 N. E. 115 (freight truckman, acting temporarily as fireman, was thrown off the foot board of a switching engine by a jolt caused by the passage of the engine over a frog). The court said: "While a person who engages for a particular service agrees to encounter only the dangers of that service, he may, perhaps, in the first instance, assume that the order given him by his superior is warranted by the legitimate scope of his employment. If, so assuming, he is induced to perform duties which, by his contract, he is not bound to perform, and is thus injured, he should be able to maintain an action for the injury against the employer. But, in the case at bar, the plaintiff knew that the duty of aiding as fireman on the engine was not within his original contract as a laborer. He determined to perform it as a part of his engagement with the defendant, rather than lose his position as a laborer. In so doing, he must be held to have assumed its necessary risks. . . . Morally to coerce a servant to an employment, the risks of which he does not wish to encounter, by threatening otherwise to deprive him of an employment he can readily and safely perform, may sometimes be harsh; but when one has assumed an employment, if an additional and more dangerous duty is added to his original labor, he may accept or refuse it. If he has an executory contract for the original service, he may refuse the additional and more dangerous service, and, if for that reason he is discharged, he may avail himself of his remedy on his contract. If he has no such contract, and knowingly, although unwillingly, accepts the additional and more dangerous employment, he accepts its incidental risks; and while he may require of the employer to perform his duty, he cannot recover for an injury which occurs only from his own inexperience."

On the other hand, in Jones v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. (1883) 49 Mich. 573, 14 N. W. 551, where a brakeman on a passenger train was ordered to do yard work, and after a protest complied with the order and was injured by a projecting load of lumber, it was held that it was competent to introduce evidence of the protest as indicating a want of consent.

In Cole v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. (1888) 71 Wis. 114, 37 N. W. 84, the court referred to, but declined either to affirm or disaffirm, the rule in this case.

c. Fear of losing position.

In some of the cases just referred to it will be noticed that the effect of the servant's protest is considered with reference to the fact that dismissal must always be taken into account as a possible consequence of disobedience, and that the servant is presumed to be influenced by this consideration.

The fact that there was no threat of dismissal in case of refusal to undertake the new duties was emphasized in Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Finley (1894) 25 U. S. App. 16, 63 Fed. Rep. 228, 12 C. C. A. 595, as ground for inferring acceptance of the risks.

Obviously, however, an actual protest is not a necessary or invariable accompaniment of this element, and in some cases its bearing upon the question of the servant's willingness is treated from a more general standpoint, the same disagreement being exhibited by the decisions as in those where objections were made before the servant complied with the master's directions.

In Gavigan v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. (1896) 110 Mich. 71, 67 N. W. 1097, the court rejected the contention that, by consenting to perform the service, the plaintiff did not assume the risk, inasmuch as he might be discharged if he refused to perform the service, or, in other words, that the master is to be considered an insurer of the servant performing extraordinary service by direction of a superior, whenever he chooses to obey a direction of one in charge for fear of discharge. See also Reed v. Stockmeyer (1896) 34 U. S. App. 727, 74 Fed. Rep. 186, 20 C. C. A. 381, where it was said that the master's having demanded services different from those for which the servant was engaged does not create any liability where the latter consents to do the work rather than be discharged, and Dougherty v. West Superior Iron & S. Co. (1894) 88 Wis. 343, 60 N. W. 274, where the same rule was quite broadly laid down.

On the other hand, the supreme court of Indiana has repudiated the theory that the servant is free to quit the service and thus avoid danger, and that, by voluntarily continuing in the service and obeying the command, he consents to take the additional risk. "While in theory the employee, whose master furnishes appliances which both know are defective, is at liberty to quit the service, and refuse to be subjected to the enhanced danger, we cannot close our eyes to the fact that the necessities of the struggle for existence tend strongly to deprive the employee of that theoretical independence and freedom of action. While the service cannot be compulsory in the sense that the employee can be compelled to work against his will, yet the very nature of the relation existing between the parties carries with it the irresistible inference of dependence upon the one side." Brazil Block Coal Co. v. Hoodlet (1891) 129 Ind. 327, p. 334, 27 N. W. 741. To the same effect, see Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Adams (1886) 105 Ind. 151, p. 164, 5 N. E. 187. C. B. L.

WISCONSIN SUPREME COURT.

Virginia C. RUGGLES, Resp't.,
v.

Virginia Cabell TYSON et al., Appts.

(104 Wis. 500.)

1. The owners in being of real estate stand, not only for themselves, but for all that may come after them, for all the purposes of litigation affecting the jurisdiction of the court to deal with the whole title.
2. The interposition of a court of equity to preserve a trust estate from destruction by reason of some circumstances not foreseen and provided for by the creator of the trust cannot extend to any change of the trust scheme further than is necessary for the preservation of the property.
3. The best interest of infant owners of an estate in remainder, requiring an allowance to them of an immediate benefit therefrom for their maintenance and education, will not warrant a court of equity in making an allowance to them from the trust estate during the existence of a life tenancy,

NOTE.—For sale of life estate to pay taxes, see also Defreese v. Lake (Mich.) 32 L. R. A. 744, and note; and St. Paul Trust Co. v. Minter (Minn.) 32 L. R. A. 756.
48 L. R. A.

where the trust not only fails to give any interest to the remaindermen until after the life tenant's death, but also makes their interest contingent by providing that the life tenant may, by her will, in her discretion, distribute the estate among her surviving children and grandchildren, and, in default of her appointment, gives the estate to her surviving children and the descendants of deceased children by right of representation.

On rehearing.

4. The entire property of a trust estate may be laid hold of and administered by a court of equity so as to protect the interests in remainder of infants or persons unknown who are likely to be interested in it, against the danger of destruction by tax and other liens, when the matter is brought before the court in a proceeding instituted by the life tenant to obtain authority to sell a part of the property, although the primary object of the proceeding is to get an adjudication as to the power to authorize a sale which shall bar possible remaindermen, and all the counsel representing the different parties attempt to limit the investigation to a part of the property.

5. Judicial inquiry on a general appeal from a judgment in an equitable action to sell part of a trust estate, presenting the question whether the judgment is proper on the undisputed facts, is not by any means circumscribed by the assignment of errors.

6. Authority to execute a power by will is exclusive of its execution in any other manner.
7. A life tenant of a trust estate to whom is given a power of appointment by will for the distribution of the remainder, at her discretion, among her surviving descendants, in default of which the remainder shall go to her living children and to the descendants of those who are dead by right of representation, though competent to sell her life interest so as to separate it from the power of appointment, has no authority to separate her estate from the estate in remainder, and should not be given that power by a court of equity without some overpowering necessity existing to demand it, because that course would substitute a mere expectancy for a certainty, contrary to the settlor's scheme.
8. On the sale of part of a trust estate to discharge liens which exist by fault of the life tenant, such portion of the proceeds as would go to the life tenant if the value of her life estate were estimated and paid to her may be paid over to her, not as a payment of the value of her interest, but as an investment, if secured by life insurance on her life in reputable level premium companies authorized to do business in the state, and if she adequately secures payment of the premiums, and also secures prompt payment of future taxes on the unsold property by mortgage to the trustee upon her life estate therein, making it a first lien on such estate.

(June 22, 1899.)

APPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Milwaukee County granting authority to sell a portion of a trust estate for the benefit of the life tenant and remainderman. Reversed.

Statement by Marshall, J.:

Equitable action by the owner of a life estate in certain valuable real property in the city of Milwaukee against her minor children, the owners of the estate in remainder subject to some contingencies, to obtain judicial authority to sell a part of such property, including all estates therein, vested or contingent, upon the ground of a necessity so to do in order to prevent a threatened destruction of such estates by tax and other liens thereon. Proper proceedings were taken to give the court jurisdiction of the infant defendants and have them properly represented by a guardian ad litem. The facts set forth in the complaint are covered by the findings of fact, and the prayer for relief by the conclusions of law, filed by the trial court, which are in substance as follows: Plaintiff's father, November 19, 1874, conveyed the property described in the complaint to trustees by deed, upon the following trusts: For the sole use of the grantor during his life; after the death of the grantor, remainder to the sole use of his daughter, the plaintiff, with power to distribute the same by her last will, in her discretion, to her children living at her death and the children of her deceased children, and remainder to such children in case of her failure to exercise the power, the trustees to convey in fee in accordance with such execution if it shall take place, otherwise to plaintiff's children living at her death and the children of any deceased child, the latter to form a class to take the share of their deceased parent by right of representation; in case of the death of plaintiff without leaving children or grandchildren, remainder to her mother for life, and remainder over, after death of the mother, in fee to the heirs at law of the grantor. The grantor died soon after the making of the trust deed. In 1883 plaintiff was married to Benjamin H. Tyson, with whom she lived till 1895, when she was legally separated from him. There were born to plaintiff, by said marriage, defendants Virginia C. Tyson and Juliet C. Tyson, both under the age of fourteen years at the date of the findings. After the divorce plaintiff was married to George H. Ruggles, with whom she now resides at Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, and by whom she has one child, the infant defendant Anna C. Ruggles. Plaintiff is the sole lineal descendant of her father, and there are no collateral heirs so far as known. Plaintiff's mother has duly quitclaimed her interest in the property to plaintiff. Plaintiff came into possession of the property in 1882, at which time it yielded revenue sufficient to pay the taxes and support her. In 1883, soon after plaintiff's marriage with Tyson, he was permitted to take absolute control of the property and that situation continued down to 1891, during which period, through plaintiff's inexperience, poor health, living so far from the property, and confidence in Tyson, she confided the entire management thereof to him. He was an extravagant, improvident person, and so managed the property as to encumber plaintiff's life estate with leases made in such a way as to secure to himself as much immediate cash as possible, without regard to the interests of the life tenant or the owners of the estate in remainder. Some of the leases were made to run as late as 1916, the entire rental being obtained by Tyson in advance and squandered. Since 1891 plaintiff has managed the property, during which time the taxes have so increased that she has been obliged to, and has, encumbered her life estate to obtain money to pay them and to maintain herself and children, with the result that the income from the property is now only about sufficient to pay the interest on such encumbrances. The proceeds of all such encumbrances have been used to pay taxes on the property and to support herself and her children; and there are yet unpaid taxes of about $4,000 which plaintiff has no means to pay, she having exhausted her life estate in the manner indicated, and also exhausted every other resource within her reach. The value of the fee of the property is about $150,000. The owners of the estate in remainder have no property out of which they can be maintained, or out of which the taxes on the property can be paid. There is no way to save plaintiff's life estate, or the interests of those in remainder, vested and contingent, except by a sale of some part of the property, which cannot be made to advantage unless the entire title can be conveyed to the purchaser. Plaintiff has paid out upwards of $5,000 in maintaining and caring for her children and she has no resources out of which to continue such care. Lots 4, 6, and 7, in block 127, and lot 15 of block 120, are the most available portions of the property for an immediate cash sale. Such lots have a salable value of about $40,000; the remaining property is worth about $110,000. The court has jurisdiction of the entire title to the property, and of all persons interested therein, or that may be interested, whether as owners of precedent or dependent, vested or contingent estates, for the purposes of this action. Plaintiff owns a life estate in the property and the defendants a vested estate in remainder, subject to be opened to admit future children of plaintiff, and subject to be divested by the execution of plaintiff's power to devise the property in fee to her children in her discretion, and subject further to be divested by the death of all plaintiff's children without living issue. It is not known whether there are persons to take the estate in case the contingency shall arise upon which it will go to the heirs at law of plaintiff's father, nor is it necessary that the facts in that regard should be known in order that the court may control the entire title. The court has power to direct a sale and conveyance of any part of the property that may be necessary for the benefit and protection of the estate, in such manner as may be deemed best, conveying to the purchaser the entire title. Plaintiff should have judgment for the sale of lots 4, 6, and 7 in block 127, in the second ward of the city of Milwaukee, and lot 15 in block 120 of such ward, for the purposes of this action. A person should be appointed trustee to make the sale under the direction of the court, and convey the property to the purchaser. The expenses, costs, charges, and disbursements, past and future, in any way connected with the action, should be paid out of the general fund. The value of the plaintiff's life estate should be computed according to standard annuity tables, out of which the trustee should see that all tax claims of every nature are paid. The value of plaintiff's life estate, less the disbursements for tax liens and $5,000 for past care and maintenance of the two oldest minor children, should be paid to the plaintiff. The balance of the fund should be invested for the defendants according to their interests therein, Virginia C. and Juliet C. Tyson being each charged with $2,500 paid to plaintiff. The sums so invested for the benefit of the defendants should be disbursed, principal and interest, as the court may from time to time direct. Judgment was entered accordingly with appropriate details for carrying out its provisions.

48 L. R. A.

Mr. Edward S. Bragg, with Mr. Rollin B. Mallory, for appellants:

The presence of the present estate in remainder, as party defendant in an action in equity, is a sufficient representation of the possible future estate which may vest upon the happening of the expiration of the present life estate in possession, leaving no heirs, or issue of heirs, surviving the plaintiff.

Calvert, Parties, 48 et seq.; Mitford, Ch. Pl. 200, *173; Cooper, Ch. Pl. *36; 1 Dan. Ch. Pr. *490, 265; Giffard v. Hort, 1 Sch. & Lef. 407; Lloyd v. Johns, 9 Ves. Jr. 63; Cockburn v. Thompson, 16 Ves. Jr. 325; Reynoldson v. Perkins, Ambl. 564; McArthur v. Scott, 113 U. S. 340, 28 L. ed. 1015, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 652; Eagle F. Ins. Co. v. Cammet, 2 Edw. Ch. 127; Williamson v. Field, 2 Sandf. Ch. 563; Nordine v. Greenfield, 7 Paige, 548, 34 Am. Dec. 363; Mead v. Mitchell, 17 N. Y. 213, 72 Am. Dec. 455; Clemens v. Clemens, 37 N. Y. 70; Brevoort v. Brevoort, 70 N. Y. 140.

Messrs. Quarles, Spence, & Quarles, for respondent:

The question involved is governed by—

Bofil v. Fisher, 3 Rich. Eq. 2, 55 Am. Dec. 627; Gavin v. Curtin, 171 Ill. 640, 40 L. R. A. 776, 49 N. E. 523; Hale v. Hale, 146 Ill. 260, 20 L. R. A. 247, 33 N. E. 858; Loring v. Hildreth, 170 Mass. 328, 40 L. R. A. 127, 49 N. E. 652; Kent v. Church of St. Michael, 136 N. Y. 18, 18 L. R. A. 331, 32 N. E. 704; 2 Spence, Eq. Jur. 707; Wills v. Slade, 6 Ves. Jr. 498; Gaskell v. Gaskell, 6 Sim. 643; Harrison v. Wallton, 95 Va. 721, sub nom. Harrison v. Turnbull, 41 L. R. A. 703, 30 S. E. 372; Giffard v. Hort, 1 Sch. & Lef. 386; Faulkner v. Davis, 18 Gratt. 651, 98 Am. Dec. 698.

Marshall, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

There does not appear to be any serious, if any, controversy between the parties to this cause. While the attitude of counsel for appellants and respondent is in form adversary, all appear in fact to contend for a declaration by this court that the judgment appealed from is right and binding upon all persons interested in the property and that a sale of it made pursuant to such judgment will entitle the purchaser to an absolute title in fee simple thereto. No question seems to be raised by the learned counsel who appears as guardian ad litem for the infant defendants, but that the judgment rendered was proper, but he deems it important that a final adjudication by this court should be had as regards the binding force of the decree upon persons not before the court otherwise than as represented by those in whom the immediate estate in remainder is vested, in order that the property may be sold under such circumstances that the price obtained will not be affected by any suspicion as to whether the purchaser will take a full title thereto. In that counsel for respondent agree. Notwithstanding the harmony indicated, in view of the fact that the defendants are infants and the title vested in them, in whole or in part, may go over to persons not now in being, the examination of the result in the court below must include the subject of whether the proper judgment was rendered on the facts found, both as to its binding force on all persons having vested or contingent interests in the property, and as to the disposition of the proceeds of the proposed sale.

As to whether the judgment acts on the whole title, it is considered that the owners in being of real estate, for all the purposes of litigation affecting the jurisdiction of the court to deal with the whole title, stand, not only for themselves, but for all that may come after them. The rule is universal, and, generally speaking, persons in being having only contingent interests are deemed to be represented by the owners of the precedent estate of inheritance, for the purposes of litigation. To that general rule there are some exceptions not necessary to be noted in this opinion, as they do not apply to this case. The owner of the life estate here, and the owners of the estate in remainder, all being parties, the judgment of the court and its execution will act upon the whole title to the property, binding all persons having vested or contingent interests therein, present or future. It is often said that such is the rule as a matter of convenience or necessity, but suffice it to say that it is a rule of law as inflexibly binding upon property in lands as any principle that has received judicial sanction so long as not to be open to question. Calvert, Parties to Suits in Equity, 48; Mitford, Ch. Pl. 173; 2 Spencer, Eq. Jur. 707; 1 Smith, Ch. Pr. 92; Story, Eq. Pl. Redf. ed. 144; Barbour, Parties to Actions, 488; Nodine v. Greenfield, 7 Paige, 544, 34 Am. Dec. 363; Mead v. Mitchell, 17 N. Y. 210, 72 Am. Dec. 455; McArthur v. Scott, 113 U. S. 340, 28 L. ed. 1015, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 662; 11 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 728; Hale v. Hale, 146 Ill. 227, 20 L. R. A. 247, 33 N. E. 858; Gavin v. Curtin, 171 Ill. 640, 40 L. R. A. 776, 49 N. E. 523; Kent v. Church of St. Michael, 136 N. Y. 10, 18 L. R. A. 331, 32 N. E. 704; Kirk v. Kirk, 137 N. Y. 510, 33 N. E. 552.

As to whether the judgment improperly disturbs the suspension of the power of alienation as to the property in question, the creator of the life estate for plaintiff, and the estate in remainder for her children, had an undoubted right to place the title to his property beyond the power of any person acting for the owners of the estate in remainder, to prevent its going to them in specie, and his wishes in that regard must be carried out so far as possible. It is not doubted but that the powers of a court of equity are ample to prevent the destruction of the estate in remainder under the circumstances of this case. Rather than that the scheme of the creator of such estate shall entirely fail by reason of some circumstance not foreseen by him and provided for, the court may intervene, but only for the purpose of, and so far as necessary to, preserve the property. If it cannot be preserved in the form intended, it may be preserved in its equivalent. It is not the interests of those in remainder, as such interests may appear to the court, that are to be considered and conserved, but their interests as the creator of the estate in remainder provided for them. So the fact, if it be a fact, that it would be for the best interests of the infant owners of the estate in remainder to allow them an immediate benefit therefrom to maintain and educate them, does not warrant a disturbance of the scheme intended to postpone such benefit to a later time. It is the necessity that something shall be done to guard against the danger that the title in remainder may be prevented from reaching defendants in possession at all, which calls into activity the equity power of the court.

In Bofill v. Fisher, 3 Rich. Eq. 1, 55 Am. Dec. 627, upon which much reliance is placed by respondent's counsel, whether the court possessed equity powers to act under such circumstances as we have in this case, was considered and decided in the affirmative. True, it appears by the statement of the case and some things said in the opinion, that in adjudging the sale in the court below and affirming the judgment on appeal the interests of the life tenant and of the owners of the estate in remainder, as regards immediate enjoyment of the subject of the suit, was considered; but the sole question presented and decided on appeal was whether the court possessed power to bar, by its decree, the unborn and absent contingent remaindermen. No question as to the proper distribution of the fund arising from the sale was considered or decided.

In Hale v. Hale, 146 Ill. 227, 20 L. R. A. 247, 33 N. E. 858, the court decided, in effect, that for the purpose of preserving the estate for those ultimately entitled thereto, the court could authorize the conversion of property of one kind into that of another, and the holding of the latter as the equivalent of the former. In Gavin v. Curtin, 171 Ill. 640, 40 L. R. A. 776, 49 N. E. 523, also cited by respondent, a case quite similar to the one before us, the court directed a sale of the property for the purpose of preserving the estate of the life tenant and that of the remaindermen as well, from being devested by tax liens and a mortgage to which both estates were subject, it appearing that the income from the property was not sufficient to keep down the interest and taxes, and that the improvements were likely to go to waste for want of necessary repairs. The power of equity to furnish an adequate remedy to meet the necessities of the situation was held to be beyond reasonable controversy, but that the remedy in such case should be adapted to the preservation of the property and be limited to that. In such an emergency the court is required to stand in the place of the creator of the estates, and do what he would have authorized had he anticipated the exigencies rendering some change in his scheme necessary in order to prevent the loss of the subject of it.

Probably no case can be found that goes farther than those referred to. The rule they recognize, being one of necessity, its scope is obviously limited by the purpose which calls for its application, that of preserving the subject and title of the estate. For that purpose the scheme of the creator of the estates may be invaded and varied by changing property which in one form is liable to be lost, into another form not subject to that danger, the property in its new form to be devoted to the same use and to go in the same line, upon the same contingencies, as that for which it was taken in exchange,—not to be distributed and consumed. No necessity of preservation calls for such a remedy as consumption of the property and entire annihilation of the grantor's scheme.

It follows that the judgment appealed from, so far as it goes beyond providing for the sale of a part of the property to create a fund out of which to guard against those dangers that now menace the title in remainder, and to make such investments of the residue of the fund and such disposition of the property unsold, as will prevent a recurrence of such dangers, and as far as practicable remedy the impairment of the estate caused by the improvident management by the life tenant, it must be modified. There is no justification for distributing the proceeds of a sale as was attempted by the judgment appealed from. By such judgment the interest of the life tenant is to be computed and paid to her, whereas the scheme of her father entitles her to the income of the whole property for life, subject to those duties in respect to keeping up repairs and keeping down taxes as devolve upon a life tenant by law. The judgment authorizes the division of the remainder of the fund, after deducting the expenses of the litigation, and the value of plaintiff's life estate into three parts, and the immediate payment of $5,000 out of two of the shares to discharge a supposed equitable claim of the plaintiff for the past support of the oldest children. It was not intended that either of the defendants should have any part of the corpus of the property till it should reach them under the will of their mother or by reason of her death without devising the property. What part of the property either of the defendants will finally have is uncertain. Each has a vested interest, but it is subject to be divested by the will of the mother or be diminished by the future birth of children. To compute the value of the estate in remainder, as represented by the proceeds of the sale of the property, and make a present division of it, would be erroneous in the extreme.

Just what, from an equitable and business standpoint, looking only to the purpose to be conserved, should be done under the circumstances of this case, is by no means clear; but it is plain that nothing should be done for the purpose of a present distribution and enjoyment of the property, since it was designed to be kept in solido till the time for distribution fixed by plaintiff's father. The fact that she has imprudently so handled the property as to prejudice her interests and those of the defendants as well cannot change her father's scheme in law or in equity so as to give anything more to her than he designed she should have, or give her that in a different way than he designed she should receive it, to the prejudice of the estate in remainder. She was entitled to the income of the property during her life, and was bound, out of such income, to preserve the property from loss by taxes or want of repairs. Having put it out of her power to perform such duty, and demonstrated most clearly that the interests of those to come after her should be guarded by a stronger hand, the necessity of fortifying against the recurrence of the present difficulty is quite as important as overcoming such difficulty. Before the commencement of this action plaintiff encumbered her life estate to such an extent that the interest on the mortgage indebtedness absorbed the entire income from the property, leaving nothing with which to pay the taxes. If she used the income to keep down taxes she was liable to lose her life estate by the enforcement of the mortgages; if she used the income to keep down interest on the mortgages, and let the taxes go, she was liable to sacrifice the whole estate. In meeting that situation it is deemed best that the mortgages on the life estate should be controlled by investing so much of the fund as may arise from any sale that may be made as shall be necessary to buy them in for the benefit of all persons interested in the estate, the amount so used to be returned to the fund as fast as can be from future income from the property, the end to be attained being to preserve the property in solido till the termination of the life estate. The entire fund created by the sale of any part of the property, so far as practicable, should be preserved in lieu of such part. The necessary use of some of the fund to pay such expenses of the litigation as plaintiff ought to pay, or to pay the taxes, should be returned to the fund as fast as practicable out of the income, keeping in view that such fund should be held to the same use and subject to the same final distribution as the benefactor intended. It is considered that the end which the decree should aim to secure can be most certainly accomplished by vesting the title in fee, and the control of all the property, that to be sold and that not to be sold as well, in a suitable trustee, to be hereafter administered under the direction of the court; that the trustee should be required to give a suitable bond to secure the faithful performance of his duties, as indicated in the judgment appealed from; that the property directed to be sold by such judgment, should be sold as therein indicated; that out of the proceeds of the sale there should be paid appellants' costs, disbursements, and expenses in this litigation, such part as are taxable costs against respondent to be charged to her by the trustee to be subsequently repaid as hereafter indicated; that there should also be paid and charged to plaintiff, to be returned as hereafter indicated, all outstanding tax claims against the property; that any lien or lienable claim on the estate in remainder should be paid from the fund, permanently reducing it to that amount; that the balance of the fund should be invested, first, by buying in for the benefit of the fund the mortgage encumbrances placed on respondent's life estate before this action was commenced, with the indebtedness secured thereby; and that the residue of the fund should be invested in good interest-bearing securities subject to the approval of the court. The trustee should disburse the income from the invested fund, and the rents from the remaining realty, first, by paying current expenses of administering the trust, and taxes and insurance; second, by adding to the invested fund the amount of the charges against plaintiff for taxes and other matters paid for her account; third, by freeing the invested fund of the indebtedness of plaintiff, secured by the mortgages on her life estate; fourth, by paying the balance to respondent. The result will be that after the invested fund shall have been increased to the amount paid for plaintiff's account, and be freed from her indebtedness secured on her life estate, the entire income from the invested fund, and the remaining real estate as well, less sufficient to keep up repairs and taxes and pay for administering the trust, will go to the respondent. She will have the benefit of the entire income from all the property, as was originally designed, but such income will be devoted to the discharge of her obligations to the property till they shall be extinguished.

The judgment of the Circuit Court is reversed, and the cause remanded with directions to render judgment in accordance with this opinion.

A rehearing having been granted, Marshall, J., on November 7, 1899, delivered the following additional opinion:

A rehearing was granted in this case on one question, namely, What is the most practicable and just method, from a business standpoint, conformable to the law as settled in the decision rendered, of saving the estate from loss without unnecessarily varying the plan of the grantor under which all parties claim? It needs but little attention to the language of the question to discern that the result of the motions for a rehearing was to leave the legal principles, upon which the decision of the court was grounded, irrevocably closed. Nevertheless counsel for appellants assumed the privilege of going into the whole case in the reargument, and were permitted to do so; and while what we may say now outside of the question for consideration cannot affect the result, because of the importance of the subject, reference will be made to some of the learned counsel's contentions.

It is said that the only property involved in the action was four lots, not the whole property constituting the estate; that the primary object of the action was to obtain an adjudication respecting the power of the 48 L. R. A.

court to authorize a sale of real estate circumstanced like that in question, so as to bar possible remaindermen; that the remainder, after the expiration of the life estate, is vested in the appellants; that if they were of age they could sell such remainder without the aid of the court, and that the life tenant can do the same; hence the court went beyond the scope of the action in laying hold of the entire property and administering it.

In the first place the court is by no means bound by the object or objects in view in instituting an action, except so far as such objects are legitimate from a legal standpoint. If there be one object which is legitimate, and it be sought for the purpose of carrying out others not legitimate, however praiseworthy be the motives from a philanthropic or moral standpoint, especially if such other objects affect the interests of infants or persons unknown who are liable, on the happening of a possible contingency, to be interested, it is not only proper, but it is the duty of the court, to so guard its decree upon the primary question, that the effect of it will be in all respects legitimate. It is not within the power of counsel for one party, or both acting together, to tie the hands of the court in the exercise of its equity powers to effect justice as to any question coming within the scope of any subject presented for consideration and decision.

In the second place, the subject of the action, not any particular object counsel may have had in view, fixed the limits of the field which the court had to investigate. What was that subject? The sale of any particular lots or lots? Certainly not. Obtaining money to satisfy the personal necessities of the respondent and her children? Certainly not. The power of the court to sell real estate of minors and use the proceeds for their maintenance? Not that. Yet the several questions mentioned have been repeatedly pressed upon our attention, both to support the judgment appealed from and obtain a change of the directions of the court as to the proper decree. The subject of the action was the necessity of a change in the form of property the title and use of which was vested for life in one person who appeared as plaintiff, and the residue of the title was vested in other persons, made defendants as representing such residue for all parties who might on any contingency be entitled thereto upon the termination of the particular estate. Concurrent action of the parties in whom the title was vested, without the aid of the court, could not pass a full marketable title to the property; and that seemed to be necessary in order that a part of it at least might be sold for a full value and sufficient of the proceeds used to pay off liens which jeopardized the interests of all parties. The complaint spread before the court the condition of the estate, confessing, but excusing, so far as intentional wrongdoing was concerned, guilt of waste by the life tenant, setting forth the dangers which her management had created and which threatened to take the estate away from all interested under the common benefactor, and her inability, unaided by the court to successfully cope with the situation. The court was asked to exercise its extraordinary powers by taking hold of the entire property and applying an effective remedy. Specific methods of relief were suggested and prayed for, going more to the use of the property so as to remedy the necessities of the unfortunate plaintiff and her children than that of saving the estate from destruction. The court was by no means bound to grant relief by adopting such methods, or dismiss the action, even in the absence of a general prayer for relief. The preservation of the entire property was the subject to be dealt with, so the life tenant, in her bill, prayed, among other things, that the court might do what in its judgment might seem meet and agreeable to equity. That expressly placed the entire title to the property under the control of the court, as it was anyway, from the very nature of the action and of the facts. While the principle, that the court has power, by an action in rem, to preserve property under such circumstances, disregarding the mere form of it when that appears to be necessary, was invoked, that special jurisdiction seems to have been entirely lost sight of in the effort to convert the property into money and use the proceeds to alleviate, in part, the pressing necessities of the parties to the action.

In the third place, it is not true that if the appellants were of age they could sell the estate without the aid of the court. They could sell their interests in the estate, that is all. Such interests may never ripen into an absolute title or property the appellants will be entitled to enjoy. That does not seem to have been appreciated, hence the pressing necessities of the respondent, in fact of all the parties to the action, have been urged as a justification for disturbing the scheme of the settlor of the estates by taking property for the benefit of the appellants, and of the respondent as well, which does not now, and may never, belong to either of them. Who can now point to the person who will ultimately be entitled to the estate in remainder? What can justify such judicial proceedings as that of taking and using part of it for the benefit of a mere trustee of the title, who, by the happening of any one of several possible contingencies, may be divested of such title and it be vested in another with absolute power of enjoyment and disposal? This court has no such power. It may bar remaindermen as to the particular thing, but cannot extinguish their rights in the equivalent of the property. This is not an action for the adjudication of the rights of either party, represented before the court, in the title to the property, but an action to authorize the preservation of it in the form of an equivalent of property of some other form.

If it were true that if the plaintiffs were of age they, joining with the life tenant, could dispose of the entire property absolutely, the simple question before the court 48 L. R. A.

would be whether it is for the best interests of the appellants that their property should be sold and a part of it used for their benefit during their minority. To support the power of a court of equity to do that, no reference to judicial authorities reaching back a century would be necessary, inasmuch as it is amply provided for by statute.

It is said the only relief prayed for not covered by statute is the right to apply the proceeds of the estate in remainder to relieve the necessities of the minors, and to reimburse the respondent for money paid out for their use over and above her income from the life estate; that in the action she tendered a surrender of her power of appointment under the settlor's deed, and that by such means the several estates can be united and sold and the proceeds appropriated, as held by authorities, ancient and modern. On the first part of the proposition, as we have seen, the scope of the prayer for specific relief in the complaint by no means limits the jurisdiction of the court. On the facts found and the pleadings, the trial court pronounced judgment. A general appeal from that judgment presented to this court the question of whether it was proper on the undisputed facts. Judicial inquiry was not, by any means, circumscribed by the assignment of errors. It was and is limited only by duty to examine and correct the judgment in every respect where legal principles were violated to the prejudices of the appellants or those whom they represent, so far as such violations clearly appear from the record. Appellants are minors standing as the mere representatives of a title liable to pass out of them to others in spite of anything they or the life tenant or the court can possibly do. On the second part of the proposition under discussion, it must be said that we are not acquainted with any authority, ancient or modern, to support it. Those cited to our attention do not apply, and it is firmly established, both at common law and by statute, that a special power, to be executed by will, cannot be executed in any other way, or be released or extinguished so as to cut off a taker not participating in the extinguishment and who is entitled to take in case the power be not executed in the manner provided by the donor of the power. The power may be extinguished by a conveyance by the donee and life tenant to the holders of the estate in remainder in respect to whom such donee has the power of appointment so as to give a preference of one over another; or it may be extinguished by the holder of the life estate, joining with the holders of the estate in remainder in a conveyance to a third person; but the effect of such a circumstance is by no means so far-reaching as to give the vendee under the joint deed a greater title than that possessed by the vendors. If such title be defeasible, the title of the vendee will be subject to the same infirmity. If the title be liable, upon the happening of a contingency, to go over to other persons, their interests will not be affected by the conveyance. The latter circumstance, which controls the situation dealt with in this case, is what makes the proposition urged upon us unsound and the authorities cited to support it not applicable. We may conclusively point what is here said by a brief reference to such authorities.

In Re Bostwick, 4 Johns. Ch. 100, the proposition decided was that when the income of a sum of money is devised to a mother, and the principal sum after her death to her children, the property may, by permission of the court, be broken in upon and used in part for the present education and maintenance of the children, and to pay debts previously contracted by the mother for their past maintenance, where there is an actual necessity therefor that cannot otherwise be satisfied. It will be noted that the title to the principal sum in remainder, in that case, was in the children absolutely. To support the decision, Harvey v. Harvey, 2 P. Wms. 21, was cited, where it was said the master of the rolls declared that where a legacy was given to an infant payable at twenty-one, without any devise over, the doctrine indicated was proper.

In Re Burke, 4 Sandf. Ch. 618, the facts were that two infant children, living with their father, had an annual income consisting of the use of $60,000, the principal being vested in them contingent upon their reaching the age of twenty-one, otherwise in the survivor of them, and if neither reached such age, then over to the brothers of the mother and their issue. The question was how much the father, who possessed but a moderate income, ought to have out of the income belonging to the children towards their support and education. No suggestion is found in the opinion of the court of a right to break in upon the principal sum, which was conditionally vested in the daughters. In Wooten v. House (Tenn. Ch. App.) 36 S. W. 932; McKnight v. Walsh, 23 N. J. Eq. 136; Wilkes v. Rogers, 6 Johns. 566; and Billingsly v. Crichton, 1 Bro. Ch. 268, the infant child or children had a fortune absolute. There was no devise over, or right of survivorship. It was held that the necessities of the children might be supplied out of the property.

It will readily be seen from the foregoing brief analysis of authorities that they do not touch the question under discussion here. The distinction between such question and the one we have decided here is clearly pointed out in numerous English cases, holding that if there is an estate with a devise over which may take effect on a contingency, such estate cannot be used for the benefit of the precedent holder without the consent of the contingent devisee or vendee. Greenwell v. Greenwell, 5 Ves. Jr. 194; Fairman v. Green, 10 Ves. Jr. 44; Lomas v. Lomas, 11 Ves. Jr. 48; Errington v. Chapman, 12 Ves. Jr. 20; Errat v. Barlow, 14 Ves. Jr. 202. In Greenwell v. Greenwell, the object was the same as that sought here. The title was in a grandchild to be preserved and, with the accumulations, paid to him on his arriving at the age of twenty-one, and with like limitations over to his sisters in case of his death under that age. The father was dead and the children sorely in need of assistance because of the character and circumstances of the mother. The lord chancellor remarked; "I fear if I should make a decree it would be my will, and not that of the testator's." In view of the pressing necessities of the case it was decided to make the order prayed for conditional, upon consent being given by all persons who would be contingently entitled to the property.

In Fairman v. Green, the master of the rolls said on the same subject: "The court has not done this except where all the parties who were to have maintenance were equally interested, . . . but if there is a legatee over the court has always taken the consent of such legatee."

Again, in Lomas v. Lomas, the lord chancellor said: "If all die under twenty-one and a child not yet in existence should come into existence and attain that age, that child clearly would take the whole, . . . therefore I may give it to those children [if I grant the prayer] who may never become entitled to it." And in the same line, in Errat v. Barlow, the conclusion was stated. In effect, thus: "If the chance of surviving is equal among all the members of the class, and there is no other interested that upon any contingency can take that will be prejudiced, maintenance, when necessary, may be allowed, but it is impossible to give it where, in any event, the property may belong, ultimately, to other persons."

The foregoing is the settled law as far back as we find adjudicated cases on the subject. They are in accordance with reason and common sense. Any other doctrine would sanction confiscation and render it impossible to settle an estate upon any plan that would, in any reasonable probability, be carried out according to the scheme of the settlor. A failure to keep in mind the distinction between taking the property of an infant and expending it for his benefit, and taking property to which such infant has a mere naked legal title, which may go over in possession and enjoyment to some other person, is what has led to most of the difficulties in this case. It must not be forgotten, at any step in this litigation, or in administering the final decree that shall be rendered, that plaintiff has but a life estate, coupled with a power of appointment by will to say how the estate in remainder shall be divided between her surviving children in whom the immediate estate in remainder is vested, in case she leaves surviving children, such children to take equally if the donee of the power fails to execute it, and the estate to go over to others specified by the settlor in case of there being none of the immediate remaindermen to take. While that is a special discretionary power which, by the rules of the common law may be separated from the life estate, the settlor having failed to provide clearly to the contrary, or extinguished as to any person interested by a conveyance by such person or by a joint conveyance by such person and the life tenant to another (2 Lewin, Trusts, p. 725; Ping. Real Prop. § 1124; 2 Washb. Real Prop. pp. 388, 389), it cannot be extinguished so as to cut off persons not participating, or executed at any other time or in any other manner than that indicated by the settlor. When authority to execute a power by will is given, it is exclusive, by the rules of the common law, as well as by statute. Ping. Real Prop. § 1164; 2 Lewin, Trusts, 1888, p. 616; 2 Perry, Trusts, 317; Rev. Stat. § 2146.

Finally, we are referred to Ex parte Yaney, 124 N. C. 151, 32 S. E. 491, as conclusive—so far as the decision of the highest court of one state can be considered conclusive on a question in the courts of another state—on the point that the life tenant and the holders of the title in remainder may, joining, convey the title, notwithstanding the future birth of a child may add to the class entitled to take under the deed or will after the expiration of the life estate. A moment's examination of the case shows that the court only held that where all the remaindermen in being are before the court, a sale of a full title may be authorized though there may be possibilities as to others being ultimately entitled to participate in the avails of the property as members of the class, the property, however, to be preserved in its new form for the benefit of those ultimately entitled thereto. That is what was decided in this case. The North Carolina court, however, held that where there is a right of survivorship, as here, between members of a class, the court cannot authorize a sale at all, because the ultimate takers in that event cannot be known. That doctrine, applied here, would defeat the whole object of this litigation; but that it is wrong in part seems clear, and is demonstrated by several well-considered cases cited in our former opinion. There is no good reason for saying that the court may authorize the sale of lands where the title in remainder is vested in a class which is subject to open and let in new members, but cannot if the scheme laid in the will or deed be such that members of the class may drop out and their interests go to the surviving members thereof. The theory, as before indicated, upon which the court takes jurisdiction, is that the proceeding is in rem, and that those having the vested interests stand for those having contingent interests. In that view, whether there be a contingency which will increase the class or one which will decrease it, or extinguish it altogether, should make no difference, since it is the res that is being dealt with and is to be preserved unimpaired in value for the ultimate taker or takers. However, it is the settled doctrine in North Carolina that a court of equity has no power to authorize a sale of property held by a title which may be devested by the happening of some contingency, and the title thereby be vested in another not in being or that cannot be known. Justice v. Guion, 76 N. C. 442; Watson v. Watson, 56 N. C. (3 Jones, Eq.)

400; Williams v. Hassell, 74 N. C. 434. It will be noticed, in examining these cases, that the only power of the court suggested was to convert property from one form into another for the purpose of preserving it or to increase its value, not distributing it so as to prejudice the possible remaindermen; and even that was denied where the property was held by members of a class with the right of survivorship in case of a member dropping out by death.

The foregoing review of authorities cited by counsel to support the contention for a decree allowing a partial distribution and consumption of the property in question, and citation of authorities to the contrary, with what was said in the former opinion, we apprehend, show clearly the soundness of the conclusion which was reached.

When the danger of loss to the estate shall have been securely fortified against, there is no reason why the equivalent of any of the property that shall have been sold, and the unsold lands, should not be used so as to provide for the respondent and her children so far as such provision may be consistent with a certain preservation of the property for the ultimate takers upon the expiration of the particular estate. Whatever the necessities of the parties may be, the court cannot break in upon the estate in remainder to relieve them, and cannot sever the life estate from the residue of the title unless it appears that there is no other practical way to administer the property under the circumstances. The fact that where by a deed or will the life tenant and the remaindermen are left free to convey the entire title, in case of a sale made by order of the court the value of the life interest may be computed upon the basis of the expectancy of life of the life tenant and paid over to such tenant, is not very persuasive in a case like this where the interests of the parties are not separable without a clear violation of the expressed will of the common benefactor. While the life tenant, in the instant case, is competent to sell her interest so as to separate it from the power of appointment, she has no authority to separate her estate from the estate in remainder, and she should not be given that power by the court without some overpowering necessity existing to demand it, because that course would substitute a mere expectancy for a certainty, contrary to one of the most important features of the settlor's scheme. The firm adherence of the court to the legal principles indicated is by no means inconsistent with anxious solicitude to relieve the misfortunes of the parties to this action so far as power exists in the court to do so, and that solicitude has been entertained here from the first. The situation mentioned, however, cannot obscure the fact that the respondent is responsible, before the law, for the dangers which necessitate the change in the property in question which has been directed by the court. The decision of the cause, with directions made to remedy the dangers which exist and guard against a recurrence of similar dangers in the future, was intended to be for the best interests of all concerned so far as such interests could be legally conserved.

The directions made as to the decree to be rendered in the court below were not intended to, and did not, differ from the judgment appealed from so far as relates to the mere machinery of selling and conveying the property. That whole subject, as well as the handling of the proceeds of the sale, within the limits of the plan outlined by the decision, was left expressly and plainly to be administered by the trial court. There is nothing in such decision preventing a new loan upon the life estate by permission of the trial court under the directions of the trustee for the purpose of taking up encumbrances bearing a high rate of interest, bought in for the benefit of the estate, or preventing a reduction in the rate of interest on such encumbrances if found to be too high, or changing any mere matter of administration so far as the same relates to the making of a proper deed to carry out the sale, if one shall be made. So, in respect to the matters referred to, no modification in the decision heretofore made by this court is needed to meet the objections raised on the reargument.

On the subject of what change can properly and safely be made in the manner of handling that portion of the estate which will be represented by the proceeds of the four lots, in case of their sale, and the care of the residue of the estate, from the directions contained in the former decision, has received the most careful consideration, resulting in a conclusion that the life estate ought not to be separated from the estate in remainder, but that, if respondent desires to substitute insurance upon her life in reputable level premium insurance companies, payable to the trustee for the remaindermen at her death, in place of her liabilities to the estate, that will accumulate in the hands of the trustee by a carrying out of the directions in such decision, she may properly be allowed to do so to an amount equal to that which would go to her upon a separation of her life interest in the proceeds of the sale of the four lots, if she adequately secures the payment of the premiums upon the policies of insurance, as such premiums fall due, and also secures the remaindermen by a mortgage on her life estate in the unsold property to their trustee, the prompt payment of future taxes on the property, and that, in the event of her taking advantage of this privilege, the unsold property should be released from the trust created by the decree. It has been concluded to make an addition to the directions contained in the decision heretofore made, in accordance with these views, thereby practically adopting a suggestion made by appellant's counsel on the argument. That will result, if respondent so elects, in giving the trustee for the remaindermen, insurance for such money as may be paid out of the proceeds of the property sold, for her account, a return of the unsold property to the control of the respondent, as life tenant, and in securing to her a net income of about $1,500 per year as the property is now circumstanced, which will doubtless be largely increased as improvident leases shall expire. No other modification of the decision of record seems advisable.

The directions for the entry of a decree in the trial court are changed, by adding thereto that such decree shall further provide, in substance, as follows: The respondent may, at her election, reimburse the estate for the money paid out for her account by life insurance on her life placed in reputable level premium insurance companies authorized to do business in this state, to the extent of such portion of the proceeds of the property sold as would go to her if the value of her life estate were estimated and paid to her; the sum so used, however, to be considered an investment of property of the estate in which respondent has a life estate, secured by the life insurance, and not a payment to the life tenant out of it, of the value of such interest. The policies of insurance shall not be accepted, however, by the trustee, unless approved by the court upon the recommendation of the trustee, and the punctual payment by the plaintiff of the premiums that shall fall due upon the policies, and the future taxes upon the unsold and all the property of the estate be secured by the life tenant by a mortgage to the trustee upon her life estate in such property, so laid that it will be a first lien on such estate. Upon the insurance being given and accepted, under the conditions named, the unsold real estate shall be released from the trust created by the decree and the life tenant restored to the control thereof as such tenant, subject to the obligations incident to that relation to the property. Upon the insurance premiums and the taxes on all the property of the estate for any year, being paid by the life tenant, the trustee shall pay to her the income of the trust fund for such year, less the expenses of administering the trust, but if she shall fail to make any of such payments, the trustee shall discharge the unpaid obligations out of any portion of the trust fund that would otherwise go to the life tenant, paying the residue, if any there be, to her; and if there be a deficiency, he shall enforce the mortgage security upon the life estate in accordance with the terms thereof, to recover the amount of such deficiency. No costs shall be allowed, on the rehearing, to either party, except clerk's fees, which shall be paid by the respondent.

STATE of Wisconsin ex rel. David S. ROSE et al.

v.

SUPERIOR COURT OF MILWAUKEE COUNTY et al.

(.....Wis.....)

1. An injunction against the passage of an ordinance within the general power of the municipality, creating a contract between a city and a street-railway company, is void for want of jurisdiction, whether the ordinance is authorized by law or not, since the passage of such an ordinance is a legislative act which the court has no power to supervise.
2. Failure to submit to a committee an amendment to an ordinance as originally proposed does not constitute any ground on which a court of equity can grant an injunction against passing the ordinance.

(February 27, 1900.)

APPPLICATION for a writ of prohibition to prevent the Superior Court of Milwaukee County from proceeding with a contempt proceeding to punish defendants for passing and enforcing an ordinance granting a street-railway franchise. Granted.

Statement by Casseday, Ch. J.:

It appears from the record: That January 18, 1900, there were filed in this court three verified petitions,—one by David S. Rose, mayor of the city of Milwaukee; another by Edward M. Schuengel, clerk of the city of Milwaukee; and another by Cornelius Corcoran and twenty-two others, therein named, being twenty-three in number, and a majority of the forty-two aldermen of that city. That each of such petitions prayed that a writ of prohibition issue from this court to the superior court of Milwaukee county, and to the Honorable John C. Ludwig, judge thereof, restraining him and it from proceeding in such contempt proceedings therein mentioned, and from passing any sentence therein against the petitioners, respectively, and from imposing any fine upon them, and from restraining them, respectively, of their liberty, and from in any way punishing any of them for the cause therein stated. That on the same day such writ was issued from this court, as so prayed, until February 2, 1900, and until the further order of this court, and that on the day last named that court and the judge thereof show cause before this court why they should not be absolutely restrained and prohibited from any further proceedings in such contempt proceeding and matter. That January 27, 1900, Hon. John C. Ludwig, as such judge of the superior court of Milwaukee county, made and filed in this court due return under the seal of that court to such writ to the effect that such writ had been and was being obeyed. That December 21, 1899, one H. A. Schwartzburg began an action in that court against the mayor, clerk, and the forty-two members of the common council of the city of Milwaukee, and of other persons and corporations named in the summons and complaint therein mentioned, and a true copy of which is therewith returned, and procured therein an injuncti-al order, a true copy of which is thereunto annexed and therewith returned, upon the verified complaint and the undertaking, a true copy of which is annexed and therewith returned, and which summons, complaint, undertaking, and injuncti-al order were duly served on all of such defendants therein. That after such service certain of such defendants violated and set at naught such injuncti-al order, as shown by their admissions and answer. That thereafter, upon motion by such defendants to vacate such injuncti-al order before that court, and upon the hearing of that motion, the disregard and violation of such injuncti-al order was brought to the notice of that court, whereupon that court made and caused to be served the order to show cause, a true copy of which is thereunto annexed and therewith returned. That the same was duly served on all of such defendants accused of violation of such injuncti-al order, except Caufy; and that such accused persons appeared in answer to the order to show cause, whereupon specific charges were filed against each, true copies of which charges are thereunto annexed and therewith returned. That thereupon such defendants, being personally present and by their counsel, offered, in answer to the charges, their return to the order to show cause, and asked to have the same stand as an answer or demurrer to such charges; and the court, having heard arguments thereon at great length, and at the conclusion of such arguments, made and filed the decision in writing, a true copy of which is thereunto annexed and therewith returned; and that such proceedings in that court went no further than the decision and determination as set forth in such written opinion up to the time the writ herein was served upon him, and he thereby certified to this court, in obedience to such writ, and with such writ, the annexed, which are true, correct, and complete copies of all the proceedings aforesaid, and all the papers in such contempt proceedings, and that copies are returned instead of the original for the reason that the defendants so charged, by their attorneys, insisted on proceeding with the motion to vacate such injunction while the matters relating to such contempt were in progress in this court under the writ afore-

NOTE.—For injunction against passage of municipal ordinance, see Montgomery Gaslight Co. v. Montgomery (Ala.) 4 L. R. A. 616; and Roberts v. Louisville (Ky.) 13 L. R. A. 844, and note.

For injunction to prevent enforcement of ordinance or statute, see South Covington & C. Street R. Co. v. Berry (Ky.) 15 L. R. A. 604; 48 L. R. A.

Rushville v. Rushville Natural Gas Co. (Ind.) 15 L. R. A. 321; Georgia Pkg. Co. v. Macon (C. C. S. D. Ga.) 22 L. R. A. 775; Augusta v. Burum (Ga.) 26 L. R. A. 340; Deems v. Baltimore (Md.) 26 L. R. A. 541; Farmer v. St. Paul (Minn.) 33 L. R. A. 199; Plumb v. Christie (Ga.) 42 L. R. A. 181; and Cicero Lumber Co. v. Cicero (Ill.) 42 L. R. A. 696.

said. That upon the hearing in this court, February 2, 1900, such relators severally demurred to such return. That in the complaint of H. A. Schwartzburg, so mentioned in such return, it is alleged, in effect, that he is and was at all times therein mentioned a resident, citizen, elector, and taxpayer in the city of Milwaukee, and as such brought that suit in his own behalf and in behalf of all other taxpayers of the city similarly situated. That the defendant David S. Rose is the duly elected, qualified, and acting mayor of that city; that the defendant E. M. Schuengel is city clerk of that city; and that the defendants therein named, being forty-two in number, are the duly elected, acting, and qualified aldermen constituting the common council of that city. That the defendant the Milwaukee Electric Railway & Light Company, is a stock corporation organized and incorporated under the laws of Wisconsin, and engaged in the business of running and operating the city railway by electric power in the streets of Milwaukee, and also making and disposing of for money to the city and to other persons electric light and power. That the defendant Henry C. Payne is a resident in Milwaukee, and the vice president of such railway and light company, and the defendant Charles F. Pfister is one of the directors thereof. That all of the other officers and directors of the railway and light company reside outside of this state, except one Bigelow. That the city of Milwaukee is now, and has been for many years last past, the owner of and entitled by law to grant, sell, or dispose of for money, the right to use its streets for street-railway purposes and the transportation of passengers under and pursuant to the charter of the city and the laws of the state. That the city, in its corporate capacity, and as trustee for the public, owns and has the right to grant to any person or corporation the use of its streets, or any part thereof, for the carriage and transportation of passengers for hire or compensation, and to fix the rate of such compensation to be charged by such grantee, and that such right is of great value, to wit, for all streets available for such purposes, $3,000,000. That there are 16 miles in length of streets therein referred to upon which no right has been heretofore granted to the railway and light company. That that company has, or claims to have, certain licenses or rights under ordinances of the city to use most of the streets of the city available for street-railway purposes for a limited period, which, by the terms of such ordinances, has not yet expired. That the railway and light company and the mayor of the city and certain other defendants who are members of the common council, unknown to the plaintiff, soon after their election, colluded and conspired together for the purpose of obtaining for the railway and light company, as a gratuity from the city, valuable rights, licenses, and franchises to use its streets for street-railway purposes on all principal streets of the city not theretofore held by the railway and light company for such purposes, and an extension of its existing licenses or franchises for the purpose of preventing the common council, in the exercise of its just powers in the future, from regulating the rate of fare to be charged by the railway and light company, and for the purpose of extending existing licenses or franchises to use such streets, and so heading off any future common council or mayor from acting thereon; and, for the purpose of carrying out such conspiracy, the mayor opened up and carried on correspondence with the officers of the railway and light company, and held interviews and had meetings with such officers at various times between April 10, 1898, and November 20, 1898. That in pursuance of such conspiracy and combination the railway and light company, November 4, 1898, offered to the mayor, and through him to the city, that, in case the city would grant the railway and light company the right to charge 5 cents for each single fare for each passenger, with one transfer for each fare paid, and the right to lay tracks and operate its street railways over certain streets in the city not then covered by such street railway or any of its franchises, the railway and light company would pay to the city, in lieu of a reduction of fares, January 1, 1899, $50,000, January 1, 1900, $80,000, January 1, 1901, $70,000, January 1, 1902, $80,000, January 1, 1903, $90,000, January 1, 1904, $100,000, and $100,000 annually thereafter, and, in addition, whenever the profits earned by the railway and light company should pay a dividend of 6 per cent per annum on its stock to its stockholders, that then and from thenceforth there should be paid to the city one third of all annual profits above 6 per cent in addition to the $100,000 per annum, and that such payments were to be independent of and in addition to all taxes, assessments, license fees, or charges exacted from the railway and light company under any law of this state. That such communication, with other correspondence between the mayor and the officers of the railway and light company, was made public November 20, 1898. That thereupon the electors and taxpayers of the city assembled in several mass meetings, and protested against the sale of such licenses or franchises, or the extension thereof, or the sale of the right of the city to regulate the fare charged by the railway and light company. That such offer was not accepted, but the proceedings thereon were allowed to lapse and be abandoned. That thereafter the mayor and certain of the members of the common council and the railway and light company and its officers renewed and continued their efforts in pursuance of the unlawful combination and conspiracy aforesaid, to procure for the railway and light company, without any compensation to the city, the valuable rights, privileges, licenses, and franchises aforesaid, and held various conferences and meetings at divers places and on different dates for the purpose of obtaining from the city, through the collusion and connivance of the mayor, the valuable rights, licenses, and franchises aforesaid, and thereafter, and in pursuance of such combination and conspiracy, the railway and light company caused to be prepared and submitted to the common council an ordinance thereunto annexed, to which the amendment thereunto annexed and made part thereof was, December 18, 1899, made and passed to a third reading by the common council. That the only compensation or payment to the city for such grant in such ordinance contained was that the railway and light company would sell, to be used during certain hours in each day, 25 tickets for $1, or 6 tickets for 25 cents, each of which tickets should entitle the holder thereof to use the same upon the cars of the railway and light company only between the hours of 5:30 o'clock and 7:30 o'clock in the morning, and between the hours of 5 o'clock and 6:30 o'clock, central standard time, in the afternoon of each day, until January 1, 1905, and thereafter to continue the sale of tickets in packages at the prices aforesaid until December 31, 1934, each to be good at all hours of the day, with the same privileges as are or may be accorded to the passengers paying a single cash fare of five cents. That the mayor, Henry C. Payne, Charles F. Pfister, and certain of such aldermen and various agents of theirs throughout the city, at their instigation and direction, falsely gave out, held forth, and pretended that under the existing ordinance possessed by the railway and light company that company had an absolute right to charge five cents for each fare, and that such right was beyond the power of the common council to regulate. That in return for the concession on the part of the railway and light company to the city of a power which the city amply possessed at all times therein mentioned, the city should and ought to grant the railway and light company, not only an extension for all its existing licenses or franchises for a period of ten years after 1924, but also the right to charge an absolute fare of five cents for each passenger, except as modified through purchases of tickets in quantities aforesaid, and to the extent aforesaid. That additional licenses or franchises to use about 16 miles of the streets of the city described, shutting out all possible competition, should be given gratuitously to the railway and light company. That the railway and light company and its officers and the mayor and certain of such aldermen colluded and conspired together in pursuance of the plan, scheme, or conspiracy aforesaid to procure the grant and licenses to use such streets, fixing the rates aforesaid, and extending the period of existing licenses as aforesaid in the form of a contract, instead of in the form of legislation, so that such ordinance should be first apparently proposed by the city subject to the acceptance of the railway and light company, and that thereafter the railway and light company should accept the same in writing, and make the pretended concessions aforesaid, and extend its lines upon the 16 miles of new streets, and so obtain in the form of an ordinance a contract, which could not be thereafter impaired, either by the state legislature or by the common council; and that such was the purpose of the railway and light company and its officers, aided by the mayor and certain members of the common council, and for such purposes the ordinance in question was passed. That under the existing ordinances the railway and light company has no absolute right to charge a fare of five cents, but only a fare not to exceed five cents, for each passenger, subject to the regulations by the common council, and has no right to use any of the streets longer than 1924, except at the will or pleasure of the common council, and has no authority or right whatever on the new streets mentioned, nor to withhold transfer tickets, but are in all such matters subject to the reasonable regulations of the common council. That the railway and light company and its officers and the mayor and certain of the aldermen, in pursuance of such fraudulent and collusive scheme to give away the valuable property or rights aforesaid of the city to the railway and light company, are negotiating and dealing together, and pretending to represent the city for the purpose of making proposed ordinances, not an ordinary legislative measure or quasi contract, like a charter, but an absolute contract based upon a compromise as a valuable consideration. That the vice president of the railway and light company, acting for and on behalf of that company, for the express purpose of obtaining such ordinance, and of silencing opposition to the same, and obtaining support of the alderman who represented the ward, entered into an agreement with such citizens therein whereby he and that company assumed and agreed to pay such citizens $8,500 in case of the passage of such ordinance, and thereby induced many of such aldermen to vote for such ordinance. That the mayor and common council have no legal right, power, or authority to make any such contract with the railway and light company, nor to give away or donate any of the property or rights, licenses, or franchises which the common council might, by law, have authority to grant or confer without a valuable consideration when it is possible to obtain a valuable consideration therefor. That the pretended consideration or compromise is wholly inadequate and insufficient to pay for the rights granted by such ordinance and the amendment thereto over and above what the railway and light company already enjoys. That the rights granted by such ordinance and the amendment thereto, over and above and beyond those owned or enjoyed by the company under existing ordinances, are worth more than $1,000,000. That December 18, 1899, one Cassius M. Payne offered, in writing, to the city, $100,000 in cash for all the additional rights, licenses, and franchises over and above what it now possesses, proposed to be granted to the railway and light company by such ordinance, and accompanied such offer with a tender of a certified check to the city for $25,000 as earnest of good faith and part payment. That Cassius M. Payne was able, ready, and willing to pay

48 L. R. A.

$100,000 to the city for such rights, privileges, and franchises last mentioned, and is still able, ready, and willing to pay such sum of $100,000 for the purpose aforesaid, which offer the city and its officers refused, and still refuse, to accept, or any other sum for such rights, privileges, and franchises, but intend by means of the collusion and conspiracy aforesaid to give the same as a gratuity to the railway and light company. That the proposed ordinance was reported to the common council for passage as a new or substitute ordinance by the majority of a special committee to which the same was referred December 4, 1899, accompanied by the minority report calling attention to its evils and injustice, and the inadequacy of consideration therefor. That December 18, 1899, such ordinance came before the common council for passage upon the majority and minority report of the special committee. That, notwithstanding the several facts mentioned, the common council, December 18, 1899, after passing the amendment thereunto annexed, by a vote of twenty-five in favor of such amendment to seventeen against it, in the manner therein set forth, and in pursuance of the agreement, combination, and conspiracy therein mentioned, passed such ordinance as amended, and ordered it engrossed, and that such ordinance is now in the hands of the city clerk and of the engrossing committee of the common council, and the same will be engrossed, ordered to a third reading, and passed at the next meeting of the common council, to be held within a few days, and will then be accepted by the railway and light company, and thereafter enforced by the city, to the great loss and damage of the plaintiff and all those similarly situated. That the twenty-five members of the common council so voting for such ordinance, being defendants named therein, colluded and conspired together with the mayor and Payne and Pfister to obtain such valuable rights and franchises for the railway and light company gratuitously or for the alleged consideration mentioned, and held various conferences prior to December 18, 1899, in secret, and rehearsed the proceedings which they would take at such meeting, and agreed together as to the mode of proceeding. That the minority of the common council called the attention of that body to the fact that they could not understand the legal effect of the amendment, and moved that the amendment be referred to the judiciary committee, but the same was voted down by the twenty-five members of the common council last named, and the amendment has never been referred to or considered by any committee of the common council. That at the meeting of December 18, 1899, the chairman of the common council instructed the twenty-five members how to vote, and the effect of their voting on certain motions. That the twenty-five aldermen so named prevented all efforts at adjournment, refused to go into committee of the whole, and rushed the measure through the common council without deliberation, and with indecent haste, and without consideration. That, in pursuance of such colluding and conspiracy, the twenty-five members of the council last named, prior to the meeting of December 18, 1899, agreed together that no amendment to such ordinance proposed by anyone except one of their number named should be considered or permitted to pass, and that no amendment thereto should be referred to the judiciary committee. That such report of the minority should not be adopted or approved. That at the meeting of December 18, 1899, the twenty-five aldermen therein named carried out in voting and passing upon such ordinance their agreements in aid of and pursuant to such conspiracy. That under the proposed ordinance as originally written, and also under the same as amended, the city acquires no rights that it did not theretofore possess under existing franchises, charter, and ordinances, and receives no consideration whatever. That no consideration accrued to the city or the taxpayers thereof. That, in furtherance of such conspiracy, Pfister, for the purpose of buying off opposition to the proposed ordinance and obtaining support of certain aldermen, entered into an agreement in writing December 18, 1899, prior to the vote on such ordinance, with a certain person therein named, and others unknown to the plaintiff, to the effect that he would be personally liable to pay about $9,000, or not to exceed $9,000, in case the proposed ordinance passed the common council, and was accepted by the railway and light company, which offer was accepted, and their opposition to such ordinance by reason thereof withdrawn. That by reason of the facts alleged the money, rights, privileges, and franchises mentioned were lost to the city, and squandered, and the plaintiff's burdens of taxation correspondingly increased, the burdens of taxation of all other taxpayers in the city in similar condition to the plaintiff are correspondingly increased by such unlawful waste and squandering of the salable, valuable rights and property of the city. That the railway and light company has issued $7,000,000 in negotiable, corporate bonds, secured by a mortgage on its right of way, cars, apparatus, and property, including such rights and franchises, and all other rights and franchises which it may acquire from the common council, and may issue still other bonds, all of which may go into the hands of bona fide holders for value, and hence become enforceable. That the common council and city clerk threatens and intends to engross and pass such ordinance or contract by a majority vote of all its members, and give out that they are about to do so, and the mayor of the city threatens and intends to approve the same, and gives out that he will do so, and the railway and light company threatens and intends to immediately accept the same, and file or tender a relinquishment of such pretended rights as they claim to be the consideration of such contract. That a full discovery be had, and that each and every of the defendants be required to make answers in that behalf, and, when such facts are discovered, the same be added by amendment to such complaint.

That the plaintiff has no adequate remedy at law, and, unless that court grant to him its injunctive order or writ of injunction, he and his fellow taxpayers will be without remedy; wherefore the plaintiff asked that the defendants therein be each and all enjoined and restrained from passing such ordinance.

Upon such verified complaint and the undertaking thereunto annexed, the court commissioner, on December 21, 1899, ordered that the city, the mayor, the city clerk, and each and every of the defendants named therein as aldermen of the city, be, and they were thereby, enjoined and restrained until the further order of that court from signing, and engrossing, passing, amending, voting on, publishing, approving, or enforcing such proposed ordinance, as amended, or any similar ordinance, and from contracting away any rights of the city, by ordinance or otherwise, to the railway and light company, under such proceedings, and that the railway and light company, Pfister, and Payne, each and all of them, were thereby enjoined and restrained from accepting the ordinance as amended, or any similar ordinance, and from attempting to purchase from the city, except by open competition, and upon due notice and upon adequate consideration, any rights, privileges, or franchises to use the streets of the city. Upon the hearing in the trial court of the several orders to show cause why the injunction so issued by such court commissioner December 21, 1899, should not be vacated and set aside, it having appeared to the judge of such court in open court by affidavits filed and read in opposition to such motions, and by statements of one of the attorneys and counsel for some of the aldermen defendants and by one of the attorneys and counsel for the mayor, that, notwithstanding the injunctive order therein named and served upon the defendants, the mayor signed and approved the ordinance January 2, 1900, and the city clerk signed such ordinance, and the president of the common council signed and approved such ordinance, and the twenty-four aldermen therein named as defendants voted on, passed, and approved such proposed ordinance, and that all and singular the acts aforesaid of the defendants in violation of such injunction were done at the city of Milwaukee January 2, 1900; that, therefore, the trial court, of its own motion, suspended the hearing upon such several orders to show cause why the injunction should not be vacated and set aside, and on January 5, 1900, ordered that each and every one of the aforesaid defendants, who, as it is claimed, violated such injunctive order, show cause before that court why he should not purge himself of his alleged contempt, or why, in default of his being able to do so, he should not be punished as for a contempt of that court, in the manner and to the extent allowed by law; that a copy of that order to show cause should be served on each of the defendants named in the body of the order on or before 9 o'clock A. M. of January 5, 1900; and it was therein further ordered 48 L. R. A.

that each and every one of the defendants named in the body of that order as having violated such injunction show cause, as aforesaid, before that court on January 5, 1900, at 10 o'clock A. M. of that day, or as soon thereafter as counsel could be heard, and that specific charges be then and there filed under oath against and served upon each of such defendants named in the body of that order. Such order to show cause having been duly served, the trial court, upon the hearing thereof, adjudged that it had jurisdiction, and hence granted the order to show cause, and adjudged that the mayor, clerk, and the majority of the common council named were guilty of the contempt of that court in violating such injunctive order.

Mr. Charles Quarles, for relator Rose:

The act in question was legislative in its nature.

The common council could have granted the franchise in question by resolution, by vote properly recorded on its minutes, or by ordinance.

Green Bay v. Brauns, 50 Wis. 204, 6 N. W. 503.

Independently of its form, the act in question is legislative in its nature, since the grant to a street-railroad company to use the streets is a franchise "granted by the state, acting through the common council of the city, to the railroad company."

Wright v. Milwaukee Electric R. & Light Co. 95 Wis. 29, 36 L. R. A. 47, 69 N. W. 791; State ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Madison Street R. Co. 72 Wis. 612, 1 L. R. A. 771, 40 N. W. 487; Ashland v. Wheeler, 88 Wis. 607, 60 N. W. 818; State ex rel. Cream City R. Co. v. Hilbert, 72 Wis. 184, 39 N. W. 326; Stedman v. Berlin, 97 Wis. 505, 73 N. W. 57.

The exceptional power of delegation of legislative authority to the common council of a city, while not given by the Constitution, exists by force of the immemorial exercise of this power by municipalities, long antedating the Constitution, and assumed to be recognized by that instrument as though written therein.

Tilley v. Savannah, F. & W. R. Co. 5 Fed. Rep. 657.

Real contractual relations can arise only by way of estoppel, arising, not from the acceptance merely, but from action in reliance upon the ordinance, and expenditure of money in construction, on the faith thereof.

St. Louis v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 148 U. S. 103, 37 L. ed. 385, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 485; New Orleans v. Great Southern Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 40 La. Ann. 41, 3 So. 533; Belle-ville v. Citizens' Horse R. Co. 152 Ill. 186, 26 L. R. A. 681, 38 N. E. 584; Chicago Municipal Gaslight & Fuel Co. v. Lake, 130 Ill. 42, 22 N. E. 616; Baltimore Trust & Guarantee Co. v. Baltimore, 64 Fed. Rep. 160; City R. Co. v. Citizens' Street R. Co. 166 U. S. 566, 41 L. ed. 1117, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 653.

The act is legislative, notwithstanding contract arises therefrom.

Des Moines Gas Co. v. Des Moines, 44 Iowa, 505, 24 Am. Rep. 756; New Orleans

Waterworks Co. v. New Orleans, 164 U. S. 481, 41 L. ed. 523, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 161; Walla Walla v. Walla Walla Water Co. 172 U. S. 1, 43 L. ed. 341, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 77; Montgomery Gaslight Co. v. Montgomery, 87 Ala. 245, 4 L. R. A. 616, 6 So. 113; Kittinger v. Buffalo Traction Co. 160 N. Y. 377, 54 N. E. 1081; Hayes v. Michigan C. R. Co. 111 U. S. 237, 28 L. ed. 414, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 369; Wabash R. Co. v. Defiance, 167 U. S. 97, 42 L. ed. 91, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 748.

The act being legislative, it was beyond the power of a court of equity to interfere.

Atty. Gen. ex rel. Taylor v. Brown, 1 Wis. 513; Mississippi v. Johnson, 4 Wall. 500, 18 L. ed. 441; Green v. Mills, 25 U. S. App. 383, 69 Fed. Rep. 852, 16 C. C. A. 516, 30 L. R. A. 90; Angle v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 151 U. S. 1, 38 L. ed. 55, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 240; Cincinnati Street R. Co. v. Smith, 29 Ohio St. 306; Montgomery Gaslight Co. v. Montgomery, 87 Ala. 245, 4 L. R. A. 616, 6 So. 113; New Orleans Waterworks Co. v. New Orleans, 164 U. S. 481, 41 L. ed. 523, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 161; Cape May & S. L. R. Co. v. Cape May, 35 N. J. Eq. 419; Alpers v. San Francisco, 32 Fed. Rep. 503.

If the court below was without jurisdiction, then the disregard of the injunctive order constituted no contempt.

Dickey v. Reed, 78 Ill. 261; Weber v. Weber, 90 Wis. 467, 63 N. W. 757; State ex rel. Fowler v. Green Lake County Circuit Ct. 98 Wis. 143, 73 N. W. 788; Re Sawyer, 124 U. S. 200, 31 L. ed. 402, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 482; Re Ayers, 123 U. S. 443, 31 L. ed. 216, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 164.

Public policy requires that municipal legislatures shall be free from interference by the courts.

Osborn v. Bank of United States, 9 Wheat. 738, 6 L. ed. 204.

Messrs. Ryan, Ogden, & Bottum, for relators Corcoran et al.:

Jurisdiction is the power to hear and determine the subject-matter in controversy between the parties to a suit, to adjudicate or exercise any judicial power over them; the question is whether, on a case before a court, their action is judicial or extrajudicial, with or without the authority of law to render a judgment or decree upon the rights of the litigant parties.

Rhode Island v. Massachusetts, 12 Pet. 718, 9 L. ed. 1233.

Jurisdiction as thus defined was wholly wanting in the court below to adjudicate between the parties upon the subject-matter of the complaint.

Des Moines Gas Co. v. Des Moines, 44 Iowa, 505, 24 Am. Rep. 756; Kittinger v. Buffalo Traction Co. 160 N. Y. 377, 54 N. E. 1081; Talcott v. Buffalo, 125 N. Y. 280, 26 N. E. 263.

The consideration and passage of the ordinance in question was a legislative act.

New Orleans Waterworks Co. v. New Orleans, 164 U. S. 471, 41 L. ed. 518, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 161; State ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Madison Street R. Co. 72 Wis. 612, 1 L. R. A. 771, 40 N. W. 487; Wright v. Milwaukee Elec. 48 L. R. A.

tric R. & Light Co. 95 Wis. 29, 36 L. R. A. 47, 69 N. W. 791.

A court of equity has no jurisdiction to sit in review of the discretion of the legislature, or to enjoin legislative action.

People ex rel. Bolton v. Albertson, 55 N. Y. 50; People ex rel. McLean v. Flagg, 46 N. Y. 401; Baird v. New York, 96 N. Y. 567; Waterloo Woolen Mfg. Co. v. Shanahan, 128 N. Y. 345, 14 L. R. A. 481, 28 N. E. 358; Pedrick v. Ripon, 73 Wis. 622, 3 L. R. A. 269, 41 N. W. 705.

This doctrine is equally applicable to common councils of cities as to legislatures of states.

Taylor v. Carondelet, 22 Mo. 105; Heland v. Lowell, 3 Allen, 407, 81 Am. Dec. 670; New Orleans Waterworks Co. v. New Orleans, 164 U. S. 471, 41 L. ed. 518, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 161; Des Moines Gas Co. v. Des Moines, 44 Iowa, 505, 24 Am. Rep. 756; Montgomery Gaslight Co. v. Montgomery, 87 Ala. 245, 4 L. R. A. 616, 6 So. 113; State ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Cunningham, 81 Wis. 440, 15 L. R. A. 561, 51 N. W. 724; Crescent City L. S. L. & S. H. Co. v. Police Jury, 32 La. Ann. 1192; Harrison v. New Orleans, 33 La. Ann. 222, 39 Am. Rep. 272; Alpers v. San Francisco, 32 Fed. Rep. 503; People ex rel. Negus v. Dwyer, 90 N. Y. 402.

The disregard of an alleged injunctive order issued by a court in excess of its jurisdiction and power constitutes no contempt, and warrants no penalty.

Dickey v. Reed, 78 Ill. 261; State ex rel. Fowler v. Green Lake County Circuit Ct. 98 Wis. 143, 73 N. W. 788; Weber v. Weber, 90 Wis. 467, 63 N. W. 757.

Messrs. Timlin, Glicksman, & Conway and Toohy & Gilmore, for respondents:

When a municipal council acts, or is about to act, illegally,—that is, beyond the powers conferred on it by law,—it is amenable to the power of the courts, and the courts have jurisdiction to annul, direct, or restrain the unlawful acts of such body.

The term "jurisdiction," when applied to a court, is the power residing in such court to determine judicially a given action, controversy, or question presented to it for decision.

1 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1; Hunt v. Hunt, 72 N. Y. 217, 28 Am. Rep. 129; Re Rosenberg, 90 Wis. 581, 63 N. W. 1065, 64 N. W. 299.

Whether or not the complaint stated a good cause of action, or whether or not the plaintiff was the proper person to bring a suit, were questions, not of the jurisdiction of the court, but relating to the merits of the action, and the court had jurisdiction notwithstanding the complaint might be insufficient or the plaintiff not the proper person to sue.

People ex rel. Davis v. Sturtevant, 9 N. Y. 263, 59 Am. Dec. 536.

When we find it stated that a court of equity has no power or no jurisdiction of suits for injunction against cities or their common councils to prevent the passage of an ordinance, except in cases where the ordinance is invalid or ultra vires or fraudulent, and property rights are invaded or threatened by its passage, all such cases, notwithstanding they deny in words the jurisdiction of the court, by such decisions concede or establish jurisdiction over the subject-matter.

State ex rel. Gill v. Watertown, 9 Wis. 254; State ex rel. Anderton v. Kempf, 69 Wis. 470, 34 N. W. 226; Earles v. Wells, 94 Wis. 285, 68 N. W. 964; Land, Log & Lumber Co. v. McIntyre, 100 Wis. 256, 75 N. W. 964; Webster v. Douglas County, 102 Wis. 181, 77 N. W. 885, 78 N. W. 451; State ex rel. Marinette, T. & W. R. Co. v. Tomahawk, 96 Wis. 73, 71 N. W. 86; Port of Mobile v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 84 Ala. 115, 4 So. 626; Roberts v. Louisville, 92 Ky. 95, 13 L. R. A. 844, 17 S. W. 216; Des Moines Gas Co. v. Des Moines, 44 Iowa, 505, 24 Am. Rep. 756; Stevens v. St. Mary's Training School, 144 Ill. 336, 18 L. R. A. 832, 32 N. E. 962; Patterson & P. Horse R. Co. v. Paterson, 24 N. J. Eq. 159; Meredith v. Sayre, 32 N. J. Eq. 557; Cape May & S. L. R. Co. v. Cape May, 35 N. J. Eq. 419; People ex rel. Negus v. Dwyer, 90 N. Y. 402; People ex rel. Davis v. Sturtevant, 9 N. Y. 263, 59 Am. Dec. 536; Davis v. New York, 1 Duer, 451; Milhau v. Sharp, 15 Barb. 193, 27 N. Y. 611, 84 Am. Dec. 314; Blaschko v. Wurster, 156 N. Y. 437, 51 N. E. 303; Adamson v. Union R. Co. 74 Hun, 3, 26 N. Y. Supp. 136; Norris v. Wurster, 23 App. Div. 124, 48 N. Y. Supp. 656; Gusthal v. New York, 48 N. Y. Supp. 652; Gerlach v. Brandreth, 54 N. Y. Supp. 479; Cincinnati Street R. Co. v. Smith, 29 Ohio St. 291; Page v. Allen, 58 Pa. 338, 92 Am. Dec. 272; Trading Stamp Co. v. Memphis, 101 Tenn. 181, 47 S. W. 136; Spring Valley Waterworks v. Bartlett, 8 Sawy. 555, 16 Fed. Rep. 615; Alpers v. San Francisco, 32 Fed. Rep. 503; Murphy v. East Portland, 42 Fed. Rep. 308; Crampton v. Zabriskie, 101 U. S. 601, 25 L. ed. 1070; New Orleans Waterworks Co. v. New Orleans, 164 U. S. 481, 41 L. ed. 523, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 161.

A city in Wisconsin, whose charter provided that deeds and grants should be made by the mayor and city clerk, could grant the use of its streets by action of the mayor and city clerk, but it could only regulate by ordinance. In cities where the common council exercises the granting power of the corporation, it might act, under § 1862, Rev. Stat., by resolution, by ordinance, or by mere vote.

Merchants' Union Barb Wire Co. v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 70 Iowa, 105, 28 N. W. 494.

The grant of the right to use streets is a grant of a property right.

People v. O'Brien, 111 N. Y. 1, 2 L. R. A. 255, 13 N. E. 692; State ex rel. Milwaukee Street R. Co. v. Anderson, 90 Wis. 550, 63 N. W. 746.

The making of a grant by a person exercising delegated power is not a legislative act.

State ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. O'Neill, 24 Wis. 149; State ex rel. Adams v. Burdge, 37 L. R. A. 157, 70 N. W. 347, 95 Wis. 390; Polk v. Wendell, 5 Wheat. 293, 5 L. ed. 92; United 48 L. R. A.

States v. Arredondo, 6 Pet. 728, 8 L. ed. 547; Rice v. Minnesota & N. W. R. Co. 1 Black, 358, 17 L. ed. 147.

Legislative grants direct from the legislature, and not through one exercising a delegated power, have been held void in Wisconsin for uncertainty.

Sellers v. Union Lumbering Co. 39 Wis. 528.

For lack of acceptance by all.

Ferrel v. Woodward, 20 Wis. 402.

The act of making a grant of property is contractual, and not a legislative act in its nature.

United States v. Hatch, 1 Pinney, 182; Gough v. Dorsey, 27 Wis. 119; State ex rel. Orton v. School & University Land Comrs. 17 Wis. 248.

Under § 1862, if valid, the city authorities had the right to make, as one of the terms upon which they exercised the power to make the grant; a stipulation that the grantee should pay into the corporate treasury any sum of money they saw fit to exact.

Booth, Street Railways, § 284; Chicago General R. Co. v. Chicago, 176 Ill. 253, 52 N. E. 881; Allegheny v. Millville E. & S. Street R. Co. 159 Pa. 411, 28 Atl. 202.

The taxpayer was consequently interested in the exercise of this power, that the advantage thereof be not lost to the city by any unlawful and improvident exercise of the power.

Adamson v. Union R. Co. 74 Hun, 3, 26 N. Y. Supp. 136; Cole's Estate, 102 Wis. 1, 78 N. W. 402; Land, Log & Lumber Co. v. McIntyre, 100 Wis. 258, 75 N. W. 969.

Taxpayers have been allowed again and again to challenge grants of this kind by injunction against the ordinances in New York.

Blaschko v. Wurster, 156 N. Y. 437, 51 N. E. 303; Norris v. Wurster, 23 App. Div. 124, 48 N. Y. Supp. 656; Gusthal v. New York, 48 N. Y. Supp. 652; Gerlach v. Brandreth, 54 N. Y. Supp. 479.

The complaint shows that the grantee was attempting to procure the grant, and was about to procure it by unlawful means, and that it was to be given out upon an unlawful consideration equivalent to bribery, and as destructive of the action of the agent intrusted with the power to make the grant.

New Haven v. New Haven & D. R. Co. 62 Conn. 252, 18 L. R. A. 256, 25 Atl. 316; Doane v. Chicago City R. Co. 160 Ill. 22, 35 L. R. A. 588, 45 N. E. 507; State ex rel. Wildman v. Kidd, 63 Wis. 337, 23 N. W. 703; State ex rel. Newell v. Purdy, 36 Wis. 213, 17 Am. Rep. 485; Greenhood, Pub. Pol. 306-308.

A writ of prohibition is never to be issued unless it clearly appears that the inferior court is about to exceed its jurisdiction.

Smith v. Whitney, 116 U. S. 167, 29 L. ed. 601, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 570; Ex parte Gordon, 104 U. S. 517, 26 L. ed. 814; Ex parte Pennsylvania, 109 U. S. 174, 27 L. ed. 894, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 84; Ex parte Hagar, 104 U. S. 520, 26 L. ed. 816.

Cassoday, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The mayor, city clerk, and the twenty-three aldermen who are petitioners herein, and constituting a majority of the common council of the city of Milwaukee, frankly admitted to the trial court that they had severally violated the injunctive order in question. The only excuse given for such violation is that the court was without jurisdiction to make such order. The learned trial judge, in his concise opinion in the case, concedes that, if the court had no jurisdiction in the action commenced by Schwartzburg, then such order was a nullity, and there was no contempt in disobeying it. But he contends that the court did have jurisdiction, and that, however erroneous the making of it may have been, yet that it was binding upon the defendants therein until set aside or reversed. If the court had such jurisdiction, then the conclusion reached by the trial judge was undoubtedly correct. Thus, in a recent case, our late Brother Pinney, speaking for the court, said: "With whatever irregularities the proceeding may be affected, or however erroneously the court may have acted in granting an injunction in the first instance, it must be implicitly obeyed, as long as it remains in existence; and the fact that it has been erroneously granted affords no justification or excuse for its violation. The party against whom it issues, or who is affected by notice of its existence, will not be allowed to violate it on the ground of a want of equity in the bill, since he is not at liberty to speculate upon the intention or decision of the court, or upon the equity of the bill, or to question the authority of the court to grant relief upon the facts stated, except upon application to dissolve or vacate the injunction. Upon proceedings for contempt for violation of an injunction, the only legitimate inquiry is whether the court granting the injunction had jurisdiction of the parties and of the subject-matter, and the court will not, in such proceedings, consider whether the order was erroneous. If the court had jurisdiction of the subject-matter, the fact that its power was erroneously exercised does not render the injunction void, but only voidable upon proper application; and, until set aside or revoked, it is entitled to implicit obedience." State ex rel. Fowler v. Green Lake County Circuit Ct. 98 Wis. 149, 150, 73 N. W. 790. The "wilful disobedience of any process or order lawfully issued or made" by a court having jurisdiction of the parties and subject-matter is made by statute a criminal contempt. Rev. Stat. § 2565. The trial judge, being convinced, as he manifestly was, that the court had such jurisdiction, could not, without stultifying his conscience, do otherwise than he did, regardless of the personality or the official positions of the defendants therein. The important question, therefore, is whether the court did have such jurisdiction to issue that order; and that question, as indicated by the trial judge, depends upon the question whether the common council, in passing the ordinance, acted within its prescribed limits as a legislative body. In determining that question the trial judge properly held that he was confined to the facts alleged in Schwartzburg's complaint, which, upon such hearing on the question of contempt, were taken as true. For that reason we have given the substance of that complaint in the foregoing statement. It is quite lengthy, and is largely argumentative. It alleges, in effect, that the corporate rights and franchises to operate such street railways in all the streets of the city are owned by the city; that, as such owner, the city was entitled to grant, sell, or dispose of the same for money; that such rights and franchises are of the value of $3,000,000; that one responsible man had offered in writing $100,000 in cash for the additional rights, licenses, and franchises proposed to be granted to the railway and light company, and that the same are worth $1,000,000; that the mayor and the twenty-three aldermen who are petitioners herein, against the protests of the electors and taxpayers of the city, as expressed in "several mass meetings," colluded and conspired and unlawfully combined with the officers and agents of that company to grant to the railway and light company such additional corporate rights and franchises without any consideration, and as a mere gratuity, and that the company and the vice president thereof has assumed and agreed to pay certain citizens of a certain ward $8,500 in case the ordinance passed, to silence opposition thereto, and secure the support of the alderman of such ward; that a director of the company, named, had, prior to the passage of the ordinance, agreed that, in case the ordinance passed, he would be personally liable to pay to such person and others (to the plaintiff unknown) "about $9,000, or not to exceed $9,000," for the purpose of buying off opposition and obtaining the support of certain aldermen. Such charges were well calculated to arouse indignation on the part of the people, and may have been more or less persuasive with the representatives of the people in the common council, but we fail to perceive their bearing upon or relevancy to the questions of jurisdiction here presented. When more than half a century ago, the majority of the people of Rhode Island, under the leadership of Mr. Dorr, attempted, without the consent of the existing state government, to set up a new state government, and the question of rightful authority came before the Supreme Court of the United States, Mr. Webster, in his great argument, aptly declared that "men cannot get together, and count themselves, and say they are so many hundreds and so many thousands, and judge of their own qualifications, and call themselves the people, and set up a government. The power is with the people, but they cannot exercise it in masses or per capita. . . . The exercise of legislative power and the other powers of government immediately by the people themselves is impracticable. They must be exercised by representatives of the people. . . . The basis of this representation is suffrage. . . . Suffrage is the delegation of the power of an individual to some agent. . . . In the exercise of political power through representatives we know nothing—we never have known anything—but such an exercise as should take place through the prescribed forms of law.” 6 Webster’s Works, 223–226. Similar views were manifestly entertained by Chief Justice Taney and the court in deciding the case. Luther v. Borden, 7 How. 1, 12 L. ed. 581. The power and authority of the common council to enact the ordinance in question is not to be determined by mass meetings and popular assemblies, but only by the prescribed law applicable to the case. If a director of the railway and light company, or the vice president of that company, has committed any crime or any unlawful act, the courts are open, and they are liable, like other citizens, to prosecution. But such facts, if true, are wholly immaterial on such questions of jurisdiction, and much more so if they are untrue. The members of the common council appear to have been divided as to the wisdom of passing the proposed ordinance, and the same seems to have been true of the citizens. As frequently occurs, in respect to important matters of legislation, the friends and opponents of the measure appear to have had frequent conferences and meetings, but it does not follow that such meetings, even if in secret, constituted a conspiracy. Secret caucuses are quite common in political action. They are an incident of popular government. It is not alleged that such combination was to accomplish some criminal or unlawful purpose, or to accomplish some purpose not in itself criminal or unlawful by criminal or unlawful means, unless the passage of any such ordinance was unlawful, which will be considered later. It is only necessary here to say that no alderman nor officer of the city is charged with anything unlawful, unless the support and attempt to pass such ordinance was unlawful. The theory of Schwartzburg’s complaint is that the corporate rights and franchises in question were owned by the city, and were held in trust for its citizens and taxpayers and the public, and that the same were the subject of barter and sale to the highest bidder. Such corporate rights and franchises in this country are special privileges conferred by the sovereign power of the state or nation, and do not belong to the citizens of the state or county by common right. At common law, such corporate rights and franchises were incapable of being seized and sold on execution. Gue v. Tide Water Canal Co. 24 How. 263, 16 L. ed. 635; 1 Freeman Executions, § 179, and cases there cited; Yellow River Improv. Co. v. Wood County, 81 Wis. 560, 17 L. R. A. 92, 51 N. W. 1004, and other cases there cited. They are granted to a corporation or individuals for some specific purpose. They are, consequently, essential to the purpose, and hence cannot be separated from it without destroying the grant. Of course, such grant can be made upon condition, or with any other restriction or limitation. Such corporate rights and franchises can only be sold, assigned, or transferred when and as authorized by statute. Ibid. See also Combes v. Keyes, 89 Wis. 311, 27 L. R. A. 369, 62 N. W. 89; Rev. Stat. § 1788, as amended by chapter 198, Laws 1899.

This brings us to the question whether the common council had the power to pass the ordinance. No one doubts the power of the legislature to create cities, and give them the general powers possessed by municipal corporations at common law; and, in addition thereto, such powers pertaining to municipalities as may be specifically granted, as in the case of the city of Milwaukee. The statute expressly authorizes the formation of “corporations for constructing, maintaining, and operating street railways” under Rev. Stat. chap. 86, and provides that they “shall have powers and be governed accordingly.” Id., § 1862. That section also expressly provides that “any municipal corporation or county may grant to any such corporation, under whatever law formed, or to any person who has the right to construct, maintain, and operate street railways the use, upon such terms as the proper authorities shall determine, of any streets or bridges within its limits for the purpose of laying single or double tracks and running cars thereon for the carriage of freight and passengers, to be propelled by animals or such other power as shall be agreed on, with all the necessary curves, turnouts, switches, and other conveniences. Every such road shall be constructed upon the most approved plan and be subject to such reasonable rules and regulations and the payment of such license fees as the proper municipal authorities may by ordinance, from time to time, prescribe. Any such grants heretofore made shall not be invalid by reason of any want of power in such municipal corporation to grant, or any such railway corporation or person to take the same; but in such respects are hereby confirmed.” The authority of the legislature to delegate to municipal corporations the power to so grant such corporate rights and franchises cannot be seriously doubted. In fact, this court, construing that section, has expressly held that a municipal ordinance granting such corporate rights and franchises, “has the force and effect of a statute of the state.” State ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Madison Street R. Co. 72 Wis. 612, 1 L. R. A. 771, 40 N. W. 487; State ex rel. Cream City R. Co. v. Hilbert, 72 Wis. 184, 39 N. W. 326; State ex rel. Wisconsin Teleph. Co. v. Janesville Street R. Co. 87 Wis. 78, 22 L. R. A. 759, 57 N. W. 970; Ashland v. Wheeler 88 Wis. 616, 60 N. W. 818; Wright v. Milwaukee Electric R. & Light Co. 95 Wis. 38, 36 L. R. A. 47, 69 N. W. 791. So it has been held by the Supreme Court of the United States that “the legislature may delegate to municipal assemblies the power of enacting ordinances relating to local matters, and such ordinances, when legally enacted, have the force of legislative acts.” New Orleans Waterworks Co. v. New Orleans, 164 U. S. 471, 41 L. ed. 518, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 161. To the same effect is Des Moines Gas Co. v. Des Moines, 44 Iowa, 505, 24 Am. Rep. 756.

This is in accordance with the general rule. Thus it is stated that, "although the proposition that the legislature of a state is alone competent to make laws is true, yet it is also settled that it is competent for the legislature to delegate to municipal corporations the power to make by-laws and ordinances with appropriate sanctions, which, when authorized, have the force in favor of the municipality, and against persons bound thereby, of laws passed by the legislature of the state." 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. § 308, and cases there cited. Of course, no such ordinance can enlarge or diminish the terms of the statute by which the power is so delegated. Id. § 317. It is contended that the proposed ordinance would be void because it would impose an additional burden upon abutting lotowners without providing for compensation. It is enough to say that the proposed grant only covers, and could only cover, such rights as the common council has power to grant. It in no way purports to affect, nor could it affect, the rights of abutting lotowners. Paterson & P. Horse R. Co. v. Paterson, 24 N. J. Eq. 158; Krueger v. Wisconsin Teleph. Co. (decided herewith) 81 N. W. 1041. The grant being made by the legislature, representing the sovereign power of the state, through the agency of the common council, it is certainly legislative in its character. Thus, it has been held that "a grant of a right of way over a tract of land to a railroad company by a municipal corporation by an ordinance which provides that the company shall erect suitable fences on the line of the road, and maintain gates at street crossings, is not a mere contract, but is an exercise of the right of municipal legislation, and has the force of law within the corporate limits." Hayes v. Michigan C. R. Co. 111 U. S. 228, 28 L. ed. 410, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 369. The fact that the passage and acceptance of the ordinance may result in a contract does not destroy its legislative character. Des Moines Gas Co. v. Des Moines, 44 Iowa, 505, 24 Am. Rep. 756. Thus, in a recent case, it is held in New York that "the action of the common council of Buffalo in granting consent to construct a street railroad under the revised charter of Buffalo . . . is a legislative, and not an administrative, act." Kittinger v. Buffalo Traction Co. 54 N. E. 1081, 160 N. Y. 377. The passage of the ordinance in question being legislative in its character, the question recurs whether the trial court, as a court of equity, had jurisdiction to restrain the common council from passing the same. The question is very important, and has received careful consideration. Our dual system of state and national governments is unique and intricate. We not only have numerous states embraced within the nation, but numerous municipalities in each state. The governmental power of each state, as well as the nation, is divided into three separate departments,—legislative, executive, and judicial,—which are in their action almost wholly independent of each other. The same three departments, in an inferior and subordinate way, exist in each municipality. In the exercise of such powers, the natural, if not the essential, order is for the legislative department, engaged in the enactment of laws, by-laws, and ordinances, to act first; the executive department, engaged in executing and enforcing the laws, to act next; and for the judicial department, engaged in construing and declaring the laws, to act last; and hence the conservative agency of the government, whether national, state, or municipal. From the very nature of things, the judicial power cannot legislate, nor supervise the making of laws. It is equally true that the legislative power cannot act judicially. Thus it has been held in Pennsylvania that the legislature has no power to order a new trial, or to direct the court to order it, either before or after judgment, since such power was judicial. De Chastellux v. Fairchild, 15 Pa. 18, 53 Am. Dec. 570, per Gibson, Ch. J. One of the most eminent jurists, in such matters, which this country has produced, speaking for the Supreme Court of the United States, has left on record this statement: "That department [judicial] has no will in any case. . . . Judicial power, as contradistinguished from the power of the laws, has no existence. Courts are the mere instruments of the law, and can will nothing. When they are said to exercise a discretion it is a mere legal discretion, a discretion to be exercised in discerning the course prescribed by law; and, when that is discerned, it is the duty of the court to follow it. Judicial power is never exercised for the purpose of giving effect to the will of the judge; always for the purpose of giving effect to the will of the legislature; or, in other words, to the will of the law." Chief Justice Marshall in Osborn v. Bank of United States, 9 Wheat. 866, 6 L. ed. 234. The same chief justice wrote the opinion of the court refusing to restrain the state of Georgia and its several officials from enforcing an act of the legislature of that state in conflict with a treaty between the United States and the Cherokee Nation of Indians in that state, and which act of the legislature was subsequently held to be void, on the ground that such restraint was an exercise of political power. Cherokee Nation v. Georgia, 5 Pet. 1, 8 L. ed. 25; Worcester v. Georgia, 6 Pet. 515, 8 L. ed. 483. See also Louisiana v. Texas, 176 U. S. 1, 44 L. ed. 347, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 251. For the same reason that court refused to restrain President Andrew Johnson from enforcing an act of Congress alleged to be unconstitutional and void, and in fact refused to allow the bill to be filed. Mississippi v. Johnson, 4 Wall. 475, 18 L. ed. 437. Numerous cases might be cited where courts have refused to take jurisdiction to control the discretion of administrative officers. A failure to observe the dividing line between legislative and judicial power, as indicated, may account for some want of harmony in judicial utterances. One of the cases most relied upon by counsel for the defendant is People ex rel. Davis v. Sturtevant, 9 N. Y. 263, 59 Am. Dec. 536, punishing Sturtevant, one of the aldermen of the city.

for contempt in violating an injunction in the case of Davis & Palmer against the mayor and aldermen, restraining the latter from authorizing the building of a railway in Broadway, on the ground that the same was a public nuisance. 9 N. Y. 269, 59 Am. Dec. 540. But it appears in the injunction suit that the mayor and common council had no power whatever to authorize the building of such railway, and hence were acting without any authority. Davis v. New York, 14 N. Y. 506, 67 Am. Dec. 186. Of course, a common council cannot act legislatively where it has no power to act at all. In People ex rel. Negus v. Dwyer, 90 N. Y. 402, relied upon by counsel, the elevated railway had been incorporated by the legislature, to run on certain streets, or others that might be named by the mayor and common council. The common council passed a resolution naming certain streets. The mayor vetoed the same. Thereupon the common council were restrained from passing the resolution over the veto. Notwithstanding, they passed it over the veto, and were punished for contempt. The only ground upon which that case can be justified, if at all, in our judgment, is that the mere naming of such streets was not a legislative act, but a mere ministerial act. Later cases in that state seem to condemn the restraining of the common council when clearly acting within its power and discretion. Talcott v. Buffalo, 125 N. Y. 280, 26 N. E. 263; Kittinger v. Buffalo Traction Co. 160 N. Y. 377, 54 N. E. 1081. In this last case it was held that the action of the common council in granting consent to construct a street railway was a legislative act, and that the rule that courts cannot inquire into the motives inducing legislation extends to legislative acts by a common council of a city as well as to those by a state legislature. To the same effect, Waterloo Woolen Mfg. Co. v. Shanahan, 128 N. Y. 346, 14 L. R. A. 481, 28 N. E. 358; People ex rel. Bolton v. Albertson, 55 N. Y. 54; United States v. Des Moines Nav. & R. Co. 142 U. S. 510, 35 L. ed. 1099, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 308; Angle v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 151 U. S. 3, 38 L. ed. 55, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 240. As indicated in this last case, the court is limited to the question of power, and its inquiry does not extend to matters of expediency, the motives of the legislators, nor the reasons given for their action. It has been held in New York that "the writ [of certiorari] will not issue to review a mere legislative . . . action, although it may involve the exercise of discretion." People ex rel. O'Connor v. Queens County Supers. 153 N. Y. 370, 47 N. E. 790. The general rule, undoubtedly, is, as recently held by the Supreme Court of the United States, that "a court of equity cannot properly interfere with, or, in advance, restrain, the discretion of a municipal body while it is in the exercise of powers that are legislative in their character." New Orleans Waterworks Co. v. New Orleans, 164 U. S. 471, 481, 41 L. ed. 518, 523, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 161. To the same effect, Chicago v. Evans, 24 Ill. 52; Des Moines Gas Co. v. Des Moines, 44 Iowa, 505, 48 L. R. A.

24 Am. Rep. 756; Mason v. Shawneetown, 77 Ill. 533; Stevens v. St. Mary's Training School, 144 Ill. 336, 18 L. R. A. 832, 32 N. E. 962; Muhler v. Hedekin, 119 Ind. 482, 20 N. E. 700; Cape May & S. L. R. Co. v. Cape May, 35 N. J. Eq. 419; Alpers v. San Francisco, 32 Fed. Rep. 503; Detroit v. Hosmer, 79 Mich. 384, 44 N. W. 622. The exceptions to the rule would seem to be limited to cases where the governing body of the municipality has no power to act, on the particular subject, legislatively, at all, or where the threatened act is not legislative, but purely ministerial, or where such body is clothed with certain powers, but threatens to go beyond or outside of such powers, and thereby invade the property or property rights of the complainant, or where such body threatens to squander or divert some fund or property held by it or some of its officials in trust for its taxpayers and citizens. Stevens v. St. Mary's Training School, 144 Ill. 336, 18 L. R. A. 832, 32 N. E. 962; Spring Valley Waterworks v. Bartlett, 8 Sawyer, 555, 16 Fed. Rep. 615; Roberts v. Louisville, 92 Ky. 95, 13 L. R. A. 844, 17 S. W. 216; Murphy v. East Portland, 42 Fed. Rep. 308; State ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Eau Claire County Circuit Ct. 97 Wis. 1, 38 L. R. A. 554, 72 N. W. 139. But it is well settled that courts of equity will not attempt to control the discretionary or legislative powers vested by law in municipal corporations. Stevens v. St. Mary's Training School, 144 Ill. 336, 18 L. R. A. 832, 32 N. E. 962. So, in Indiana, it has been held not to be within the jurisdiction of a court of equity to enjoin the common council of a city from investigating charges against waterworks trustees or other municipal officers, and from removing them from office. Muhler v. Hedekin, 119 Ind. 482, 20 N. E. 700. So, in New Jersey, it has been held that "there can ordinarily be no judicial restraint or interference with municipal corporations in the bona fide exercise of powers legislative or discretionary in their nature, provided private rights are not violated." Cape May & S. L. R. Co. v. Cape May, 35 N. J. Eq. 419. So it has been held in the Federal court in Oregon that "a court of equity will not enjoin a municipal corporation in the exercise of its legislative function, unless the proposed act is beyond the scope of its power, and its passage would work irreparable injury." Murphy v. East Portland, 42 Fed. Rep. 308. Of course, the courts may interfere, and prevent the enforcement of an illegal ordinance after its passage. This is held in several of the cases cited.

Counsel also contend that the proposed ordinance not only grants corporate rights and franchises, but will make, when accepted, an irrevocable contract. We do not feel called upon in this case to determine whether that is so or not. If the ordinance goes beyond, and is outside of, the authority given by the statute quoted, then to that extent it would be invalid, and would hurt no one. If, on the contrary, it is within the authority so given by the legislature, and the legislation is valid, then it is not perceived upon what ground a court of equity can interfere at the suit of a private party. As already indicated, such corporate rights and franchises are not like a fund or property held in trust for the citizens and taxpayers of the city. The statute expressly authorizes the making of the grant "upon such terms as the proper authorities shall determine," and this, in the instant case, manifestly means the common council. The statute also provides that such road shall "be subject to such reasonable rules and regulations and the payment of such license fees as the proper municipal authorities may by ordinance, from time to time, prescribe." Construing that statute, this court has held that the common council may, from time to time, change the license fee to be paid by the company, notwithstanding the amount of the fee was originally fixed by the ordinance granting the franchises. State ex rel. Cream City R. Co. v. Hilbert, 72 Wis. 184, 39 N. W. 326. Of course, whatever contract is so made is subject to the conditions imposed by the statute giving the authority to make the contract. The power so vested in the common council is, within the limits prescribed, a discretionary power; and we must hold that a court of equity has no jurisdiction to restrain the common council from exercising such discretion, especially at the suit of a private party. It is said that the amendment to the ordinance, as originally proposed, was not submitted to a committee as required. It is enough to say that a court of equity has no place in the chamber of the common council to supervise or superintend the proceedings of that body, while engaged in the exercise of legislative or discretionary functions. The common council of Milwaukee, like other legislative bodies and courts, is liable to commit errors which may be fatal to its action; but that does not take away its power to act. Counsel for the defendant admitted upon the argument that the common council had power to pass the ordinance, if it had proceeded regularly. But a court of equity has no power to prevent such action merely because the mode or manner of its procedure is irregular. To do so would be to stop the machinery of the city government. It is not a question of the propriety, or expediency, or wisdom of the proposed action, but a question of the power of the common council and the jurisdiction of the court.

The peremptory writ of prohibition is awarded.

ILLINOIS STEEL COMPANY, Appt.,

v.

Joseph BUDZISZ et al., Respts.

(.....Wis.....)

1. An amendment to an answer by setting up the statute of limitations is permissible under Rev. Stat. § 2830, authorizing amendments in furtherance of justice to correct a mistake. In any respect, where the defendants are poor people, unacquainted with legal matters, and the failure to plead the statute was due to a mistake of their attorney.

NOTE.—On the question of tacking of possessions of property held adversely, see also Erck v. Church (Tenn.) 4 L. R. A. 641, and note; as well as Pittsburgh, Ft. W. & C. R. Co. v. Peet (Pa.) 19 L. R. A. 467; and Gindrat v. 48 L. R. A.

2. The imposition of terms as a condition of granting leave to amend a pleading is not absolutely required by Rev. Stat. § 2830, authorizing amendments, in the discretion of the court, "upon such terms as may be just."

3. A parol transfer by the first to the second occupant, of property held adversely, and the latter's succession in possession under it, may be sufficient to unite the two possessions into one continuous, uninterrupted possession referable to the first entry, for the purpose of acquiring title by adverse possession.

On rehearing.

4. Actual hostile exclusive occupancy of land without any presumption or claim of right is sufficient to ripen into title under the statute of limitations.

(February 27, 1900.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Milwaukee County in favor of defendants in an action brought to recover possession of certain real estate. Affirmed.

Statement by Marshall, J.:

Action of ejectment. The subject of the controversy was an irregular piece of land about 40 feet wide by 170 feet long, defined, as to boundaries, by actual possession by the defendant. The complaint was in the usual form. The only material issues presented by the answer, originally, were raised by a general denial. The case was brought to trial on the part of defendants by attorneys substituted for the one who interposed the answer, some twenty-one months having elapsed since the action was commenced. On the day of the trial, before the jury was impaneled, an amendment to the answer was permitted, setting up the ten and twenty years' statutes of limitations. Exception was taken by appellant's counsel to the allowance of such amendment. The evidence conclusively or strongly tended to prove, and plaintiff's counsel, in substance, admitted, that more than twenty years prior to the commencement of the action one John Skoczek inclosed the premises with a fence, built a house thereon and thereafter occupied the same continuously till about 1886, when he sold out and transferred the property and possession thereof to defendant Joseph Budzisz for a valuable consideration, who occupied the same continuously thereafter down to the time of the trial. The court decided that adverse possession of the property commenced when Skoczek inclosed and commenced to occupy the same; that he and his successor in possession occupied the property continuously for more than twenty years before the action was commenced; that the parol transfer of the property from Skoczek to Budzisz, and the entry by the latter under the former pursuant thereto, made the adverse possession thereof exclusive and uninterrupted from the time possession was taken by Skoczek. In accordance therewith a verdict was directed in favor of defendants, upon which the judgment appealed from was rendered.

Western Railway of Alabama (Ala.) 19 L. R. A. 830.

For parol gift as basis of adverse possession, see Schafer v. Hauser (Mich.) 35 L. R. A. 835, and note.

Messrs. Van Dyke & Van Dyke, & Carter, for appellant:

Discretion to permit amendment must be the exercise of a sound legal discretion under all the circumstances of the case, and not a mere whim or caprice. And it should only be granted when, under all the circumstances, it is reasonable that such discretion should be exercised, and then only upon such terms as, under all the circumstances, shall be just.

Smith v. Dragert, 61 Wis. 222, 21 N. W. 46; Eldred v. Oonto Co. 30 Wis. 206; Fogarty v. Horrigan, 28 Wis. 142; Meade v. Lowe, 32 Wis. 261; Dehnel v. Komro, 37 Wis. 336; Plumer v. Clarke, 59 Wis. 646, 18 N. W. 467.

The original owner, not the disseisor, is favored.

No presumptions will be indulged in for his benefit, but all presumptions are in favor of the true owner.

Sydnor v. Palmer, 29 Wis. 226; Ryan v. Schwartz, 94 Wis. 403, 69 N. W. 178.

Possession is an "interest" in lands, and a sufficient "interest" therein to entitle the possessor to maintain ejectment against an intruder into his possession.

Bates v. Campbell, 25 Wis. 613; Howard v. Easton, 7 Johns. 205; Moore v. Moore, 21 Me. 350.

A judgment against a person in possession becomes a lien, and his possession may be sold on execution.

Jackson ex dem. Cary v. Parker, 9 Cow. 80.

A sale and transfer of such possession is most certainly, therefore, a sale and transfer of an "interest" in lands, and is included within the statutory prohibition.

Graeven v. Dieves, 68 Wis. 317, 31 N. W. 914; Elofrson v. Lindsay, 90 Wis. 203, 63 N. W. 89; Ablard v. Fitzgerald, 87 Wis. 516, 58 N. W. 745; Dhein v. Beuscher, 83 Wis. 316, 53 N. W. 551; Sheppard v. Wilmott, 79 Wis. 15, 47 N. W. 1054; Sydnor v. Palmer, 29 Wis. 226; Pepper v. O'Dowd, 39 Wis. 548; Stevens v. Brooks, 24 Wis. 326; McEvoy v. Loyd, 31 Wis. 142; Furlong v. Garrett, 44 Wis. 111; Fuller v. Worth, 91 Wis. 406, 64 N. W. 995; Bailey v. Wells, 8 Wis. 141, 76 Am. Dec. 233.

On motion for rehearing.

If Skoczek had, at the time he sold and transferred his possession to Budzisz, any estate of any kind, or any interest of any extent, great or little, in the land, which he says he sold to Budzisz, a parol transfer or surrender or assignment of such estate or interest is within the very letter of the prohibition of the statute.

48 L. R. A.

Bare possession is an estate or an interest in lands.

Bates v. Campbell, 25 Wis. 613.

Bare possession constitutes the first degree of title.

3 Greenleaf's Cruse, Real Prop. p. 312; Swift v. Agnes, 33 Wis. 239; Link v. Doerfer, 42 Wis. 394, 24 Am. Rep. 417; Hammer v. Hammer, 39 Wis. 187; Hacker v. Horlemus, 74 Wis. 23, 41 N. W. 965; Elofrson v. Lindsay, 90 Wis. 206, 63 N. W. 89; Jones v. Bland, 112 Pa. 176, 2 Atl. 541; Hutchinson v. Perley, 4 Cal. 33, 60 Am. Dec. 578; Winans v. Christy, 4 Cal. 70, 60 Am. Dec. 597; Adams, Ejectment, p. 249; Bequette v. Caulfield, 4 Cal. 278, 60 Am. Dec. 615; Richardson v. McNulty, 24 Cal. 348; Hubbard v. Barry, 21 Cal. 325; Bird v. Lisbros, 9 Cal. 1, 70 Am. Dec. 617; Plume v. Seward, 4 Cal. 94, 60 Am. Dec. 599; Jones v. Nunn, 12 Ga. 472; Tyler, Ejectment, 70.

Possession of land is prima facie evidence of title, and is sufficient evidence of title as against all persons, but one who can show either a prior possession or a better title.

Newell, Ejectment, p. 433; New York v. Carleton, 22 Jones & S. 555, 113 N. Y. 284, 21 N. E. 55; Allen v. Rivington, 2 Wms. Saund. 111a; Doe ex dem. Smith v. Webber, 1 Ad. & El. 119; Asher v. Whitlock, L. R. 1 Q. B. 1; Smith ex dem. Teller v. Lorillard, 10 Johns. 338; Novion v. Hallett, 16 Johns. 327; Jackson ex dem. Murray v. Denn, 5 Cow. 200; Whitney v. Wright, 15 Wend. 171; Carleton v. Darcy, 90 N. Y. 566.

In an action of ejectment, proof of prior possession by the plaintiff, claiming to be the owner in fee, is prima facie evidence of ownership and seisin, and, although the lowest kind of evidence, it is sufficient to authorize a recovery, unless the defendant shows a better title.

Anderson v. McCormick, 129 Ill. 311, 21 N. E. 803; Jackson ex dem. Murray v. Hazen, 2 Johns. 22; Jackson ex dem. Duncan v. Harder, 4 Johns. 202, 4 Am. Dec. 262; Robinoe v. Doe ex dem. Colwell, 6 Blackf. 86; Duy v. Alverson, 9 Wend. 223; Doe ex dem. Herbert v. Herbert, 1 Ill. 278, 12 Am. Dec. 192; Mason v. Park, 4 Ill. 533; Davis v. Easley, 13 Ill. 198; Brooks v. Bruyn, 18 Ill. 539; Keith v. Keith, 104 Ill. 402; Hardisty v. Glenn, 32 Ill. 62; Bowman v. Wettig, 39 Ill. 417; Keane v. Cannovan, 21 Cal. 291, 82 Am. Dec. 738; Bird v. Lisbros, 9 Cal. 1, 70 Am. Dec. 617; Winans v. Christy, 4 Cal. 70, 60 Am. Dec. 597; Pratt v. Phillips, 1 Sneed, 543, 60 Am. Dec. 162; Jackson ex dem. Stewart v. Town, 4 Cow. 599, 15 Am. Dec. 405; Jackson ex dem. Cary v. Parker, 9 Cow. 84.

One in possession may maintain an action of ejectment on his own demise against such of the defendants as afterward entered upon his possession, without title or authority, but as mere intruders.

McLaurin v. Salmons, 11 B. Mon. 96, 52 Am. Dec. 563; Den ex dem. Cain v. McCan, 3 N. J. L. 438, 4 Am. Dec. 384; Den ex dem. Johnson v. Morris, 7 N. J. L. 6, 11 Am. Dec. 508; Jackson ex dem. Duncan v. Harder, 4 Johns. 202, 4 Am. Dec. 262; Thompson v.

Burhans, 61 N. Y. 68; Miller v. Long Island R. Co. 71 N. Y. 383; New York v. Carleton, 113 N. Y. 284, 21 N. E. 55; Risch v. Wiseman (Or.) 59 Pac. 1111; Carleton v. Darcy, 90 N. Y. 573; Jackson ex dem. Murray v. Hazen, 2 Johns. 22; Whitney v. Wright, 15 Wend. 171; Hammond v. Doty, 184 Ill. 246, 56 N. E. 371; Griffin v. Spencer, 6 Hill, 525; Smith ex dem. Teller v. Lorillard, 10 Johns. 356; Day v. Alverson, 9 Wend. 223; Riverside Co. v. Townshend, 120 Ill. 9, 9 N. E. 65; Ricard v. Williams, 7 Wheat. 59, 5 L. ed. 398; Goodwin v. Scheerer, 106 Cal. 690, 40 Pac. 18; Leonard v. Flynn, 89 Cal. 543, 26 Pac. 1099; Hill v. Draper, 10 Barb. 458; Christy v. Scott, 14 How. 292, 14 L. ed. 426; Turner v. Aldridge, McAll, 229, Fed. Cas. No. 14,249; Green v. Jordan, 83 Ala. 220, 3 So. 513; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Philyaw, 88 Ala. 264, 6 So. 837; Benefield v. Albert, 132 Ill. 665, 24 N. E. 634; Hollenback v. Ess, 31 Kan. 88, 1 Pac. 275; Douglass v. Ruffin, 38 Kan. 530, 16 Pac. 783; Redden v. Tefft, 48 Kan. 302, 29 Pac. 157; Jackson v. Boston & W. R. Corp. 1 Cush. 575; McRoberts v. Bergman, 132 N. Y. 73, 30 N. E. 261; Moore v. Moore, 21 Me. 350; Rader v. Allen, 27 Or. 344, 41 Pac. 154; Tapscott v. Cobbs, 11 Gratt. 172; Wilson v. Palmer, 18 Tex. 592; Pratt v. Phillips, 1 Sneed, 643, 60 Am. Dec. 162; Adams v. Guice, 30 Miss. 397.

A parol contract to buy or sell such possession is within the statute of frauds, and void.

Howard v. Easton, 7 Johns. 205.

Messrs. Fiebing & Killilea and M. O. Krause, for respondents:

Although the adverse possession must be continuous and uninterrupted, it is immaterial whether it be held for the entire period by one person or by several persons in succession, provided there is a "unity of possessions," or, in other words, a privity of estate or title.

1 Elliott, Gen. Pr. § 297, p. 371; Woolman v. Ruehle, 100 Wis. 31, 75 N. W. 425.

Any amendment of the answer was permissible, provided the facts introduced constitute a defense.

Brayton v. Jones, 5 Wis. 117; Brown v. Bosworth, 62 Wis. 542, 22 N. W. 521; 4 Wait, Pr. p. 652.

The weight of authority is against any discrimination against defenses denominated unconscionable; and where a party asks leave to amend his answer by setting up the statute of limitations the amendment will generally be allowed.

Gilchrist v. Gilchrist, 44 How. Pr. 317; Bouman v. DePeyster, 2 Daly, 203; Sheldon v. Adams, 41 Barb. 54, 18 Abb. Pr. 405, 27 How. Pr. 179; Bank of Kinderhook v. Gifford, 40 Barb. 659; Union Nat. Bank v. Bassett, 3 Abb. Pr. N. S. 359; McQueen v. Babcock, 3 Keyes, 428, 3 Abb. App. Dec. 129; Catlin v. Gunter, 11 N. Y. 368; Smith v. Dragert, 61 Wis. 222, 21 N. W. 46; Orton v. Noonan, 25 Wis. 672; 13 Enc. Pl. & Pr. pp. 186, 189, 190, 209; Spring v. Gray, 5 Mason, 505, Fed. Cas. No. 13,259; Know v. Cleveland, 13 Wis. 254; Specker v. Wakeley, 11 Wis. 432; Hill v. Kricke, 11 Wis. 48 L. R. A.

442; 7 Wait, Act. & Def. 308; De Beauvoir v. Owen, 5 Exch. 166; 5 Field, Lawyers' Briefs, p. 347; Way v. Hooton, 156 Pa. 8, 26 Atl. 784; Bird v. Sellers, 113 Mo. 580, 21 S. W. 91; Nelson v. Brodhack, 44 Mo. 596, 100 Am. Dec. 328.

The several possessions of successive dispossessors may be "tacked" together so as to make a continuous possession, where there is privity of estate or title; the privity required to constitute continuous adverse possession may be effected by any conveyance, agreement, or understanding which has for its object a transfer of the rights of the original entry, and "no paper evidence of a transfer of possession is necessary when the property is held under the claim of the first entryman, but the continuity may be shown by parol."

Allis v. Field, 89 Wis. 334, 62 N. W. 85; Ryan v. Schwartz, 94 Wis. 411, 69 N. W. 178; 2 Ballard, Real Prop. § 25; Sedgw. & W. Trial of Title to Land, p. 598; 6 Wait, Act. & Def. p. 455; 1 Wood, Limitations of Actions, § 271; 2 Wood, Limitations of Actions, § 431; Newell, Ejectment, § 53, p. 740; Ramsey v. Glenny, 45 Minn. 401, 48 N. W. 324; Vandall v. St. Martin, 42 Minn. 160, 44 N. W. 525; McNeely v. Langan, 22 Ohio St. 32; Fanning v. Willcox, 3 Day, 258; Smith v. Chapin, 31 Conn. 531; Shannon v. Kinny, 1 A. K. Marsh. 3, 10 Am. Dec. 705; Chilton v. Wilson, 9 Humph. 399; Cunningham v. Patton, 6 Pa. 355; Scheetz v. Fitzwater, 5 Pa. 126; Overfield v. Christie, 7 Serg. & R. 173; Johnson v. Nash, 15 Tex. 419; Alexander v. Pendleton, 8 Cranch, 462, 3 L. ed. 624.

It is not necessary to the running of the statute that possession be held under color of title. Where there is possession of the requisite character, the question whether there is color of title or not is wholly immaterial.

Paine v. Skinner, 8 Ohio, 167; Yetzer v. Thoman, 17 Ohio St. 130, 91 Am. Dec. 122.

As to third persons against whom the possession is held adversely, if such transfers of possession were in fact made, it is immaterial whether they were effected by deed or devise, or by an agreement either written or verbal.

Davock v. Nealon, 58 N. J. L. 21, 32 Atl. 675; McNeely v. Langan, 22 Ohio St. 33; Weber v. Anderson, 73 Ill. 439; Menkens v. Blumenthal, 27 Mo. 198; Cunningham v. Patton, 6 Pa. 357; Scheetz v. Fitzwater, 5 Pa. 126; Smith v. Chapin, 31 Conn. 530; Crispen v. Hannagan, 50 Mo. 544; Shuffletton v. Nelson, 2 Sawy. 545, Fed. Cas. No. 12,822; Alexander v. Pendleton, 8 Cranch, 462, 3 L. ed. 624; Vandall v. St. Martin, 42 Minn. 163, 44 N. W. 525.

Marshall, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Two questions are presented for consideration: (1) Did the trial court err in allowing the amendment, pleading title by adverse possession? (2) Did the possession of the second occupant, under the circumstances, continue the possession of his predecessor so as to satisfy the statutory call for an uninterrupted twenty years' continuous adverse possession?

1. Section 2830, Rev. Stat., says: "The court may, upon the trial . . . in furtherance of justice and upon such terms as may be just, amend any process pleading . . . by correcting . . . a mistake in any other respect, or by inserting other allegations material to the case." The power to grant amendments under the statute is very broad, and its exercise rests solely in the sound discretion of the trial court, whose decision cannot be disturbed except for a clear abuse of judicial power. Phoenix Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Walrath, 53 Wis. 669, 10 N. W. 151; Smith v. Dragert, 61 Wis. 222, 21 N. W. 46; Morgan v. Bishop, 61 Wis. 407, 21 N. W. 263. The only limitation upon the power of the court, in cases where it may be exercised under any circumstances, and it is conceded this case is within the statute, is that it must be in furtherance of justice. Smith v. Smith, 19 Wis. 522; Morgan v. Bishop, 61 Wis. 407, 21 N. W. 263. That is, the power must be exercised to that end, and there must be some reasonable ground for saying that such was the motive. The only condition of the exercise of the power is that it must be on such terms as may be just in the judgment of the trial court. Necessarily, there is no rule by which the presence of the statutory motive for the exercise of the power, or the sufficiency of the condition attached to it, can be tested, except that the act and the condition must be within the bounds of reason as applied to the particular case; and there is no rule on appeal by which to test the judgment of the trial court, except that it must have some reasonable ground to support it in view of the facts, and the rule that the legal presumption is that it has such ground till the contrary is made to affirmatively appear.

What has been said, with the brief reference to the facts upon which the amendment was allowed, will furnish a basis for a right conclusion regarding the question presented.

The defendants were evidently poor people, unacquainted with legal matters. The failure to plead the defense of the statute of limitations was the mistake of their attorney. After the case had been pending for considerably more than a year, defendants concluded that their interests required the employment of other attorneys, and they acted accordingly, resulting in the substitution for the attorney who interposed the answer, of those who now represent them. The substitution took place April 15, 1899. Three days thereafter the amended answer was drawn. The motion for leave to file it was heard without objection for want of notice, and was granted without objection, except that "the defense of the statute of limitations cannot be set up by amendment," and that the amendment, "under the circumstances, is not permissible." We take it that the language of the objection, "the amendment, under the circumstances, is not permissible," was merely explanatory of the language, "the statute of limitations cannot be set up by amendment." So it will be seen that the only objection raised to the amendment was want of power in the court to permit it. All other objections were in effect waived. Counsel for appellant now concedes that the court had ample power in the premises. They could not seriously contend otherwise, since it has been so held even in tax-title cases, where a much more stringent rule prevails than in cases like this, even after a reversal on appeal. Morgan v. Bishop, 61 Wis. 407, 21 N. W. 263; Smith v. Dragert, 65 Wis. 507, 27 N. W. 317.

But it is said the court exceeded its discretionary power by granting the amendment without terms, attention being called to Morgan v. Bishop, where there was a reversal on that ground, and Smith v. Dragert, 65 Wis. 507, 27 N. W. 317, where affirmance was grounded on the fact that terms of the amendment were imposed. Both cases differ materially from this, in that, after a failure on one trial by a reversal in this court, a new defense was interposed by amendment. It was in regard to that situation that Mr. Justice Lyon in the Dragert Case said, the general rule, in ordinary cases, is considered to be that the party amending his pleading will be required to pay all taxable costs up to the time of granting leave to amend, and motion costs, and that such is the rule where a new defense is set up for the purposes of a new trial, as in this case.

The statute does not, under all circumstances, require the imposition of terms as a condition of granting leave to amend a pleading. The whole subject, as to the justice of the amendment, and whether it shall be granted upon condition and if so what condition, is left to the sound discretion of the trial judge. The imposition of terms has a twofold object: The infliction of a penalty for the negligence requiring a remedy by the amendment; and to give to the adverse party an equivalent for the injury to him by delay or increased expense because of the amendment. Where there is neither a reason for the infliction of a penalty, nor prejudice to the adverse party of any kind to be compensated for,—even the calling of adverse counsel into court for the purposes of the amendment, as was the situation in this case,—it cannot be said on appeal that the failure of the trial court to impose terms was either an abuse of discretion or a violation of any rule of law. Schaller v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 97 Wis. 31, 71 N. W. 1042; Carroll v. Fethers, 102 Wis. 436, 78 N. W. 604.

2. The main contention made by appellant's counsel is that the parol transfer by the first to the second occupant of the property, and his succession in possession under it, was not effectual to unite the two possessions into one continuous uninterrupted possession referable to the first entry, and existing thereafter for twenty years. We are referred to § 2302, Rev. Stat., which provides that "no estate or interest in lands, other than leases for a term not exceeding one year . . . shall be created, granted, assigned, surrendered, or declared, unless by act or operation of law, or by deed or conveyance in writing subscribed by the party creating, granting, surrendering, or declaring the same, or by his lawful agent thereunto authorized by writing." It is said by way of emphasizing or in support of such contention, that the learned circuit judge expressed a personal opinion that, under such section, lands acquired by adverse possession cannot be transferred by parol; but a judicial opinion to the contrary, in harmony, as he supposed, with the decisions of this court. If that be so, we are compelled to say the learned judge was wrong as to the holdings of this court, and counsel in error in supposing there is any such difficulty as the trial court supposed in the way of his recovering in this case. Such errors spring, not only from a misapprehension of the decisions of this court, but the effect of an act creating privity between successive adverse possessors of property as regards the statute of limitations.

The transfer of property acquired by adverse possession is one thing, and the preservation of a condition of property as to adverse occupancy, which if permitted to continue long enough will divest the actual owner thereof of title and vest it in the adverse occupant, is quite another thing. The two things should not be confused, otherwise the statute referred to will be erroneously applied.

Title to property, acquired by adverse possession, is of the same nature as any other, and either is plainly governed by the statute as regards the manner of its transfer; but the mere fact that a person is so circumstanced as regards realty, as to dispossess the owner thereof adversely, does not, till the expiration of the statutory limitation upon the right of such owner to reclaim that possession, vest any estate in lands, within the meaning of § 2302, in such possessor, or the substitution of another in his place, to continue the dispossession of the true owner, the transfer of any such estate. Section 2302, and § 4207. Rev. Stat., the limitation statute, are entirely independent of each other; so the essential premise upon which the argument of the learned counsel for appellant is based does not exist.

We come down to the question of whether privity can be created between successive possessors of realty, so that if two possessions blended into one, continued for a sufficient length of time, will satisfy § 4207, Rev. Stat., which provides that "no action for the recovery of real property or the possession thereof, shall be maintained unless it appears that the plaintiff, his ancestor, predecessor, or grantor was seised or possessed of the premises in question within twenty years before the commencement of such action." It will be noted that the plain reading of the statute, as this court has heretofore decided, is that actual occupancy of the land to the exclusion of the true owner for the statutory period is all that is necessary to preclude such owner from thereafter reclaiming the property. Lampman v. Van Alstyne, 94 Wis. 417, 69 N. W. 171; Wilkins v. Nicolai, 99 Wis. 178, 74 N. W. 103; Wollman v. Ruehle, 100 Wis. 31, 75 N. W. 425; Meyer v. Hope, 100 Wis. 123, 77 N. W. 720. There are many other decisions, in this state and elsewhere, to the same effect, but they need not be cited here inasmuch as this court has so recently, several times, on full consideration of the subject, construed the statute.

Is a paper transfer, evidencing a change of possession by succession, necessary to blend the first possession into the second,—tack them to each other, as it is called? In that, we adhere to what was said by the court, speaking by Mr. Justice Pinney, in Allis v. Field, 89 Wis. 327, 62 N. W. 85, and Ryan v. Schwartz, 94 Wis. 403, 69 N. W. 178, to the effect that, though the possession of several distinct occupants of land, lasting for a continuous period of twenty years, cannot be united to satisfy the limitation statute, successive possessions, each reaching to and uniting with the one that follows it, by privity between the occupants, so as to render the possession of the property continuous from the first entry to the end of the period of twenty years, satisfies the statute, and a parol transfer of possession by one to another, as the former goes out of and the latter goes into possession, satisfies the essential of privity to tack the possessions together.

The authorities all agree that privity between successive possessors is all that is necessary to render them continuous, if the possession be in fact actual and adverse. That privity may be created in any way that will prevent a break in the adverse possession and refer the several possessions to the original entry. It may be created by lease, as between landlord and tenant, or by descent by operation of law from ancestor to heir, or by conveyance, either by parol or otherwise, from vendor to vendee. 1 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 842, and cases cited in the notes; McNeely v. Langan, 22 Ohio St. 32; Haynes v. Boardman, 119 Mass. 414; Witt v. St. Paul & N. P. R. Co. 38 Minn. 122, 35 N. W. 862; Low v. Schaffer, 24 Or. 239, 33 Pac. 678; Vance v. Wood, 22 Or. 77, 29 Pac. 73; Crispen v. Hannagan, 50 Mo. 536; Weber v. Anderson, 73 Ill. 439; Faloon v. Simshauser, 130 Ill. 649, 22 N. E. 835; Menkens v. Blumenthal, 27 Mo. 198. The above cases, many of which are referred to in the briefs of counsel, are but a few of the authorities that might be cited to support the doctrine stated. It seems to be conceded by appellant's counsel that many of such authorities are directly contrary to their position, but claim is made that they do not apply by reason of the statute (§ 2302), which, as we have indicated, does not apply to the facts of this case.

Only a few authorities that can be found are out of line with those cited. They are in harmony with elementary principles as laid down in the text-books. The doctrine is found as clearly stated perhaps, as anywhere, in 2 Ballard, Real Prop. § 25, cited by respondents' counsel, the following language being used: "Successive possessions may be tacked together so as to form a continuous and uninterrupted possession for the essential period of time. There must be a privity existing between the parties transferring the possession. Such possession may begin in parol without deed or writing and may be transferred from one occupant to another by parol bargain and sale accompanied by delivery. All that the law requires is continuity of possession where it is actual; and this continuity and connection may be effected by any conveyance or understanding which has for its object a transfer of the rights of the possessor or of his possession, when accompanied by an actual delivery of the possession." The doctrine is stated in 2 Pingrey, Real Prop. § 1193, thus: "Continuity is an indispensable element of adverse possession; but several possessions may be tacked together where they can be referred to the original entry. No paper evidence of a transfer of possession is necessary when the holding is under claim of the first entryman."

The discussion of this subject and citation of authorities might be continued to great length. It will be noted that in every treatment of the matter, whether by text writers or in judicial opinions, it is said that all that is necessary, where there is continuity of possession in fact, to connect the several parts of it, where there are such parts, so as to blend them into one term, continuous from first to last, is that there be privity between the persons as one succeeds to the other. Privity in such a case is the same as in any other, and it may be created in the same way. It is merely a succession of relationship in the same right to the same thing. 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 189, 523; Hart v. Moulton, 104 Wis. 349, 80 N. W. 599. All that is necessary to privity between successive occupants of property, and in regard thereto, is that one receive his possession from the other by act of such other or by operation of law.

If a person, not the true owner, but hostile to him, be in actual possession of a part of a larger tract of land, under a deed describing the whole, in law he is in actual possession of the whole for the purposes of the statute of limitations, though as to a part the possession be in fact only constructive. In that situation it is said, and it is the law, that the adverse possession cannot extend beyond the calls of the deed, meaning thereby that actual possession by construction cannot be extended beyond the calls of the written instrument by virtue thereof; but if land be actually occupied beyond the calls of the deed, hostile to the true owner, the written instrument does not preclude such occupancy from being adverse. The occupancy does not refer to the deed, but to the fact itself and its hostile character. There was such an occupancy in Wollman v. Ruehle, 104 Wis. 603, 80 N. W. 919, and the point was directly decided in Bishop v. Bleyer (Wis.) 81 N. W. 413. The full legitimate effect was given in those cases to the rule that the possession under a deed cannot be extended beyond its calls. Full effect was also given to the presumption that a person so circumstanced only intends to claim what his deed calls for, and the further presumption that the land, as to which the occupant has no title, he holds consistent with the title of the true owner. The first presumption, however, was rebutted by clear proof that the occupant claimed that the disputed tract was in fact within the calls of his deed. The second was rebutted by clear proof that the possession was actual and hostile to the true owner. Such presumptions yield to proof, like any other presumptions of fact, or facts otherwise established. It is the facts, when established, that govern.

Circumstances similar to those last above described were presented in Graeven v. Dieves, 68 Wis. 317, 31 N. W. 914; Dhein v. Beuscher, 83 Wis. 316, 53 N. W. 551; Ab-lard v. Fitzgerald, 87 Wis. 516, 58 N. W. 745; Sheppard v. Wilmott, 79 Wis. 15, 47 N. W. 1054; Elofrson v. Lindsay, 90 Wis. 203, 63 N. W. 89; Fuller v. Worth, 91 Wis. 406, 64 N. W. 995; and Ryan v. Schwartz, 94 Wis. 403, 69 N. W. 178. The first of such cases ruled the others. It was there held that adverse possession of the property by a person, beyond the calls of his deed, did not unite with a similar possession held by his vendee. But it will be noted that there is nothing in the opinion indicating that a written transfer of the outside property was a statutory requisite to privity between two successive possessions. The case turned on rules of evidence, applied with a severity, it must be admitted, almost precluding, in such cases, proof of the fact of privity other than by a written transfer. The Graeven Case, as will be seen, was misapprehended and extended by the other cases cited. However, the idea now suggested, that a written transfer is a statutory requisite to privity under § 2302, was not thought of.

Such stress was laid, in the Graeven Case, on the presumption that occupation by one of premises not his own is in subordination to the title of the true owner, and the rule that adverse possession must be strictly construed and that every reasonable presumption (it will be noted that in some of the cases the word "reasonable" was left out in stating the rule) is to be made in favor of the true owner,—that such presumptions resisted the logic of facts that would seem to leave no room for a conflicting reasonable inference. Yet it is plain that the court did not there, or in the more recent cases which followed, deem the fact of privity entirely closed to proof except by a written transfer. The case did not go upon the theory that paper evidence to create privity between adverse possessions is necessary, but upon the theory that adverse possession and all facts tending to establish it must be construed so strictly in favor of the true owner that succession to actual possession of lands, a part of which was transferred by deed, though the part within and that without the calls of the instrument constitute one entire property, will not, for the purposes of adverse possession, overcome the presumption, arising from the limitations of the deed, that the vendor only transferred to his vendee possession of the land within its calls. That is out of harmony with Wollman v. Ruehle, 104 Wis. 603, 80 N. W. 919, and many other cases in other courts that might be cited. It is out of harmony with the statute that continuous disseisin for twenty years turns the presumptions against the true owner, and repeated decisions in recent years in harmony with the statute. Wilkins v. Nicolai, 99 Wis. 178, 74 N. W. 103; Meyer v. Hope, 101 Wis. 123, 77 N. W. 720; Wollman v. Ruehle, 104 Wis. 603, 80 N. W. 919. That this court did not intend to hold that a paper transfer is essential to privity between possessions for the purposes of the statute of limitations is clear. It has not been so understood, as indicated in Ryan v. Schwartz, 94 Wis. 403, 69 N. W. 178, and Allis v. Field, 89 Wis. 327, 62 N. W. 85, where Graeven v. Dieves and the cases ruled by it were referred to as authority, and it was distinctly said that a paper transfer is not essential to the tacking of adverse possessions together.

In Dhein v. Beuscher, 83 Wis. 316, 53 N. W. 551, speaking of a chain of title by successive possessions, the land being beyond the calls of the paper transfer, it was said, "The deeds fail to show privity." That was obviously correct. The deeds of themselves did not show privity to any land except that within the calls of the deed, but that did not prevent the fact, if it were a fact, that the property was bought as a whole, and there being no actual succession of possession pursuant to the purchase and hostile to any other right, being of sufficient probative power to establish privity. The case most clearly out of harmony with the idea that Graeven v. Dieves only laid down a rule of evidence not intended to preclude a parol creation of privity between possessions, and clearly inconsistent with the idea that the essential of privity can be created by parol, accompanied by actual succession in possession, is Ablard v. Fitzgerald, 87 Wis. 516, 58 N. W. 745. There Mr. Justice Newman said, speaking for the court, and to the vital point in the case: "The defendant, too, is without a chain of paper title. It does not appear that he has a deed conveying the disputed strip to him. The disputed strip is outside the 40 acres. Without such a conveyance it is difficult to see how he can connect his own possession to the possession of his predecessor so as to make the adverse possession continuous. . . . Without a deed of the strip it seems that the defendant can claim no right to the land founded upon the adverse possession of his grantor. This seems to be the effect of Graeven v. Dieves, 68 Wis. 317, 31 N. W. 914." Language to the same effect was used in Elofrson v. Lindsay, 90 Wis. 203, 63 N. W. 89, and Fuller v. Worth, 91 Wis. 406, 64 N. W. 995, but the error in those cases, without directly overruling them, was largely corrected in Ryan v. Schwartz, 94 Wis. 403, 69 N. W. 178, and 48 L. R. A.

such error expressly discarded in Wollman v. Ruehle, 104 Wis. 603, 80 N. W. 919, and Bishop v. Bleyer (Wis.) 81 N. W. 413, thereby bringing the law into harmony with what was really intended in the Graeven Case, and softening the rule of evidence so as to harmonize with the generally accepted doctrine on the question and the statute, both of which had been departed from.

Further discussion of the subject is unnecessary. Sufficient has been said to bring out clearly the true doctrine as understood by the court, that a paper transfer is not necessary to connect adverse possessions together; that privity, successive relationships to the same thing, is the connecting link; that a paper transfer is but a means of establishing the fact of privity, but not the only evidence; that the presumption, that a person in possession of land who conveys part of it and transfers possession of the whole intended to transfer only that within the calls of his conveyance, and the presumption that a person in possession, not as owner, holds subject to the true owner, are mere rebuttable presumptions of fact that yield to any clear relevant evidence to the contrary, whether it be written, or inferential from facts established by positive evidence. Meyer v. Hope, 101 Wis. 123, 77 N. W. 720.

We might almost call the roll of the courts on that doctrine. The Missouri court said, We know of no rule that requires written evidence to establish the fact of privity. McKens v. Blumenthal, 27 Mo. 198. The Illinois court said that where the owner in possession of a strip of land, together with adjoining land, conveys the latter and transfers possession of the whole, and the grantee takes possession of the property as an entirety, the possession of that outside the calls of the deed being actual in both possessors, the presumptions in favor of the true owner and as to the limitations of the deed give way to the facts, and privity in adverse possession is established. Falcon v. Simshauser, 130 Ill. 649, 22 N. E. 835. The Alabama court said that, where a person holds land adversely, outside the calls of his deed, claiming a continuity of such possession from his grantor, the presumption that the latter only intended to create privity to the extent of the calls of the deed may be overcome by proof that the former obtained possession of the property from the latter as a part of the land purchase, because a paper transfer to continue adverse possession in privity is not necessary. Dothard v. Densen, 72 Ala. 541. To the same effect, are Erck v. Church, 87 Tenn. 575, 4 L. R. A. 641. 11 S. W. 794, and Kendrick v. Latham, 25 Fla. 819, 6 So. 871. A few cases, it is conceded, are out of line with the doctrine stated.

Much difficulty experienced in regard to the law of title by adverse possession will be avoided by referring and adhering to the statutes where they cover the subject, and not treating rules of evidence as rules of law. The following recapitulation of principles necessarily or incidentally referred to in this opinion may be an aid to that end.

(1) Adverse possession should be strictly construed, all reasonable presumptions being made in favor of the true owner, including the presumption that actual possession is subordinate to the right of such owner; but such strict construction and such presumptions are subject to the following limitations.

(2) Good faith by the adverse claimant as to his right at the instant of entry, or during the limitation period, is not necessary, because the statute, by its terms, only requires actual, continuous, exclusive possession under such circumstances as to wholly dispossess the true owner both actually and constructively.

(3) Actual, continuous, exclusive possession for the statutory period, unexplained, displaces the presumptions in favor of the true owner, and creates a presumption of fact that such possession, and the commencement of it, were characterized by all the requisites to title by adverse possession, and that the title of the adverse claimant is perfect. The statute so provides.

(4) The letter of the statute requires only such adverse possession as will continuously exclude the true owner from possession, whether actually or constructively, during the entire limitation period; that is, so far as the letter of the statute goes, a person in possession can successfully defend such possession against the true owner when he has been entirely excluded from possession for twenty years.

(5) By judicial construction, now a rule of property, the statute does not apply unless the exclusion of the owner from possession has been during the whole period by a single hostile possession, exercised either by one or more persons acting together, or by possessions in succession connected by privity between the actors.

(6) A transfer to connect successive possessions, in conformity to § 2302, Rev. Stat., is not essential to the privity necessary to continue the mere dispossessed condition of the true owner.

(7) Privity denotes merely a succession of relationship to the same thing, whether created by deed or by other act, or by operation of law. If one, by agreement, surrender his possession to another, and the acts of the parties are such that the two possessions actually connect, the latter commencing at or before the time the former ends, leaving no interval for the constructive possession of the true owner to intervene, such two possessions are blended into one, and the limitation period upon the right of such owner to reclaim the land is thereby continued, because, by the statute, as construed, the only essential to such continuity is that the dispossession of the true owner be actually continued.

(8) The calls of a deed, when title by adverse possession is claimed, limit the right as a matter of law:

(a) Where the ten-year statute relating exclusively to claims of title founded on written instruments is relied on;

(b) As to the extent which actual possession of a part will draw to it constructive possession of the whole;

(c) The extent to which title can be claimed by adverse possession under the instrument itself.

(9) The calls of the deed limit the right as a presumption of fact, where a person is in possession of lands outside of but adjacent to and together with lands within the calls of his deed; also where a person, being so circumstanced, by written instrument conveys the lands within such calls to another, and surrenders to such other possession of the whole.

(10) The first presumption last above mentioned yields to clear, relevant evidence showing that the possession outside the calls of the deed was not characterized by any recognition of the true ownership, whether that occur by mistake of boundaries or distinct hostile intention. The second of such presumptions yields to clear evidence that the premises were taken from a predecessor in possession as part of the property purchased, and that the two possessions, so intentionally united, were physically united by the successor going into possession at or before the time his predecessor went out of possession.

The judgment of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

A petition for rehearing having been filed, Marshall, J., on April 27, 1900, handed down the following response:

It is profitable to have a case of this importance, as regards the principles involved, brought to the attention of the court a second time by a motion for rehearing based on a careful study, by eminent counsel for the losing party, of the reasons given for the judgment rendered. That course, if it does not result in any relief for the moving party, will generally bring sharply to notice any error, either of law or fact, or unsoundness of reasoning, in the opinion filed that may otherwise remain uncorrected for a sufficient length of time to cause prejudices to the rights of parties in other litigation. If the reasons for the result first reached stand the close scrutiny of counsel, ever ready to seize upon the slightest weakness in an adverse decision as ground for further proceedings, confidence in the soundness of such decision must be materially strengthened thereby. Such has been the result in this instance.

Counsel for appellant suggest a single point, only, in the opinion of the court, wherein they confidently claim error was committed, and that such error is the very foundation stone of the decision adverse to their client. We said: "The mere fact that a person is so circumstanced, as regards realty, as to dispossess the owner thereof adversely, does not, till the expiration of the statutory limitation upon the right of such owner to reclaim that possession, vest any estate in lands, within the meaning of § 2302, Rev. Stat., in such possessor, or the substitution of another in his place, to continue the dispossession of the true owner, the transfer of any such estate. Sections 2302, 4207, Id., the limitation statute, are entirely independent of each other." From that it is said that if possession of realty is an interest therein, contrary to the quoted language, then it cannot be transferred without compliance with § 2302.

Counsel cite to our attention numerous decisions to support the proposition that possession of land is evidence of an interest therein, and that the law will protect the possessor against hostile invasion of his possession by a wrongdoer. That is elementary. Possession is evidence of an interest in land and of just such interest as the possessor claims, down to the mere naked occupancy by right (Newell, Ejectment, 367; Ricard v. Williams, 7 Wheat. 105, 5 L. ed. 409; Jackson ex dem. Sparkman v. Porter, 1 Paine, 457, Fed. Cas. No. 7,143), the legal presumption being that a person so circumstanced is acting by right till that is rebutted.

Judge Story said, in Ricard v. Williams, 7 Wheat. 105, 5 L. ed. 409: Title by possession, "whatever it may be, rests upon possession; and the nature and extent of that possession must be judged of by the acts and circumstances which accompany it, and qualify, explain, or control it. Undoubtedly, if a person be found in possession of land, claiming it as his own, in fee, it is prima facie evidence of his ownership, and seisin of the inheritance. But, it is not the possession alone, but the possession accompanied with the claim of the fee, that gives this effect, by construction of law, to the acts of the party. Possession, per se, evidences no more than the mere fact of present occupation, by right; for the law will not presume a wrong. . . . From the very nature of the case, therefore, it must depend upon the collateral circumstances, what is the quality and extent of the interest claimed by the party; and to that extent, and that only, will the presumption of law go in his favor."

The foregoing limits the effect of possession, as evidence of an interest in land, to possession at least presumed to be rightful. But no such interest is necessary to adverse possession under the limitation statute. That deals only with the fact of continued disseisin of the true owner for the statutory period, regardless of whether it be by a person claiming rightful possession or not. Such is the plain meaning of the statute, though, probably, till Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Groh, 85 Wis. 641, 55 N. W. 714, possibly till Lampman v. Van Alstyne, 94 Wis. 417, 69 N. W. 171, it was not clearly recognized.

In the last case cited it was said, in effect, that neither good-faith occupancy, in any other sense than actual hostile occupancy with intent to claim the property, nor occupancy accompanied by a claim of title or right to the property, is necessary to the running of the statute of limitations; that actual, exclusive, hostile occupancy, so as to completely dispossess the true owner, is all that is necessary.

We think § 2302 deals only with interests in land equal, at least to the lowest title 48 L. R. A.

presumed by law from the fact of possession, and that, as such an interest is not necessary to the running of the limitation statute, the expression,—that the mere fact that a person is so circumstanced as regards realty as to dispossess the owner thereof adversely, is not an interest in lands within the meaning of 2302, Rev. Stat., or the substitution of another in his place, to continue the dispossession of such owner, the transfer of any such interest,—is correct. The expression in the opinion to that effect was followed by a statement that § 2302 and the limitation statute are entirely independent of each other, indicating that while mere possession, presumptively by right or with claim of right, may satisfy the former, exclusive hostile possession by a person without right, presumptively or otherwise,—by an acknowledged usurper,—will satisfy the latter. It is amply sufficient to create the condition of disseisin of the true owner, which is all the limitation statute calls for.

We are referred to the rule that a person without right cannot successfully defend his hostile invasion of the peaceful possession of another. Bates v. Campbell, 25 Wis. 613, is cited to that. There is no question as to the soundness of that proposition. No lawyer would dispute it. However, the mere legal right of a person who is in the peaceable, though wrongful, possession of land, to protection against the hostile invasion of that possession by a person having no better right, which exists for the purpose of peace and good order, is not an interest in land within the statute of frauds, and we find nothing in Bates v. Campbell indicating that it is. That case does not decide even that such mere right to legal protection is an interest in land under the statute on the subject of ejectment. The case did not go upon that theory, but upon the theory that the statute did not abrogate the common-law right to such legal protection.

Now we trust it has been made clear that, while possession with a claim, or the legal presumption, of right, is evidence of an interest in land, it only requires an actual, hostile, exclusive occupancy of land, without any presumption or claim of right, to satisfy the limitation statute; and that, as a physical continuation of that condition, without interruption sufficient to let in the seisin of the true owner, may take place by successive occupants in privity, that privity may be based on an oral authorization of the successor in possession to take the place of his predecessor. If Skoczek was not in possession of the property under any claim of right when he sold to Budzisz, and the latter took possession thereof under verbal permission of the former, we apprehend that counsel for appellant would not venture the assertion that Skoczek could have turned around and maintained ejectment against his vendee because the latter's permission to take possession was not in writing, according to § 2302, Rev. Stat.

The motion for a rehearing is denied.

Emery BRULEY, Plff. in Err.,

v.

Arthur GARVIN.

(.....Wis.....)

1. A written contract of sale of an undivided half of land constitutes a revocation pro tanto of a prior license to cut timber thereon, so far as it remains unexecuted.
2. Timber cut under a parol license before any notice of revocation of the license does not become the property of a subsequent purchaser of the land who had no valid contract therefor before the timber was cut.
3. A conversation with an attorney upon a railway train with reference to a contemplated lawsuit, in which an opinion is sought and obtained from the attorney, but without any retainer or payment of any fee, and although there has been no relation of attorney and client between the parties, constitutes a privileged communication within the protection of Rev. Stat. 1898, § 4076.

(February 27, 1900.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Clark County to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for the alleged conversion of a quantity of logs. Affirmed in part.

Statement by Winslow, J.:

This is an action brought by Garvin against Bruley for the alleged conversion of a quantity of logs on or about the 15th day of January, 1897. The taking of the logs by Bruley was admitted, and the question at issue was simply as to the ownership of the logs. Garvin claimed title to the logs upon evidence tending to show the following facts: That in the year 1896, and prior thereto, Jesse Lowe and Thomas Lowe owned two 40's of land in Clark county, Wisconsin, adjoining each other; that in the month of March, 1896, a road was laid out by the town authorities upon the line between said 40's, and that in June, 1896, Garvin made a verbal contract with the two to cut down the timber in said highway and clear the same; that after making said contract he made a verbal contract with the two Lowes to purchase the timber then standing in said new highway, and paid a part of the purchase price thereof; that, at the time said last-named contract was made, he had entered upon said highway, and had underbrushed a part of it; that he continued to work thereon clearing said highway, and cut down the trees from which the timber in dispute here resulted on the 28th day of December, 1896; that he had no notice that Bruley claimed any right in said timber until after the same had been converted into logs; and that Bruley took possession of the logs and converted them in June, 1897. The evidence on the part of Bruley tended to show that he made a written contract with Jesse Lowe for the purchase of an undivided half of both 40's

December 8, 1896, and about the same time made a verbal contract with Thomas Lowe for the purchase of the other undivided half of said land, and paid the sum of $400 of the purchase money, and was given possession of the land; that the written contract provided for the payment of the balance of the purchase money within six months from December 8, 1896, and the delivery of the deed upon such payment, and, further, that the title of the timber on said lands should remain in Lowe until the purchase money was fully paid; that, in pursuance of said written and oral contracts, Bruley took possession of the land, and commenced logging the timber thereon, as early as the 15th day of December, 1896; that on the 29th of December, 1896, the two Lowes executed warranty deeds of the said lands to Bruley; and that he (Bruley) had no information of the laying out of said highway, or that Garvin claimed any interest in the timber thereon, at the time he contracted for said lands, nor at the time when he went into possession thereof and began logging the same. There was a special verdict found by the jury as follows: "(1) Were Thomas and Jesse Lowe in the year 1896, and prior to the time when they made the bargain and sale thereof, the owners of the southwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section 17, and the northwest quarter of the northwest quarter of section 20, in township No. 25 north, of range No. 1 east, in Clark county, Wisconsin? Answered by the court upon the undisputed evidence: Yes. (2) Did the plaintiff in the summer of 1896 make a parol contract with Thomas Lowe and Jesse Lowe to sell to the plaintiff the timber on the right of way or highway on the lands described in the answer? Ans. Yes. (3) Did the plaintiff, pursuant to said parol contract, thereafter cut the timber for which this action is brought? Ans. Yes. (4) Did the plaintiff have notice that the land upon which said timber was cut, or the timber thereon, had been sold, or contracted to be sold, to the defendant, Bruley, prior to cutting the same? Ans. No. (5) Was the plaintiff notified by either Thomas Lowe or Jesse Lowe not to cut said timber prior to cutting the same? Ans. No. (6) Was the plaintiff notified by the defendant, Bruley, after he had made a contract for the purchase of said land or timber, not to cut said timber, prior to cutting the same? Ans. No. (7) What was the value of such of the timber cut by the plaintiff as was taken by the defendant, at the time and place when it was taken? Ans. $80.93½. (8) How much is the interest, at 6 per cent, on the sum so found to be the value of said timber, from the date when taken to the time of this verdict? Ans. $7.20." Upon this verdict judgment was rendered in favor of Garvin for $88.13 damages and $124.77 costs, and Bruley sued out a writ of error.

NOTE.—For privileged communications between attorney and client, see also Dierstein v. Schubkagel (Pa.) 6 L. R. A. 481, and note; Gruber v. Baker (Nev.) 9 L. R. A. 302; Haley v. Eureka County Bank (Nev.) 12 L. R. A. 48 L. R. A.

815; Ferguson v. McBean (Cal.) 14 L. R. A. 65; Doherty v. O'Callaghan (Mass.) 17 L. R. A. 188, and note; State v. Calhoun (Kan.) 18 L. R. A. 838; and Feder v. Ervin (Tenn. Ch. App.) 36 L. R. A. 335.

Messrs. J. R. Sturdevant & Son and Charles F. Grow, for plaintiff in error:

Standing timber is a part of the real estate, and an oral contract for the sale thereof is void under the statute of frauds.

Lillie v. Dunbar, 62 Wis. 198, 22 N. W. 467.

Plaintiff in error received a bond for a deed, with right to take possession and commence logging said land at once, and went into possession thereunder cutting and skidding logs without knowledge of any claim of defendant in error at least eleven days before the trees in said right of way were cut down, which facts revoked the license of the defendant in error, if any he ever had.

Gamble v. Cook, 106 Mich. 561, 64 N. W. 432; Ward v. Rapp, 79 Mich. 469, 44 N. W. 934.

The Lowes, by their contract of sale and giving possession, put it out of their power to further control or dispose of the lands or the timber growing thereon.

Winne v. Ulster County Sav. Inst. 37 Hun. 349; Cook v. Stearns, 11 Mass. 533; Wescott v. Delano, 20 Wis. 514; Coleman v. Foster, 1 Hurlst. & N. 37.

A parol license may be revoked by the licensor's appropriation of the land to any use inconsistent with the enjoyment of the licensee, or by other acts which indicate an intention to revoke the license.

13 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 556; Brandeis v. Neustadt, 13 Wis. 142.

When the defendant in error cut the timber, he was not relying upon any license from the Lowes, but was acting under his contract with the town of Fremont to clear the right of way, and such cutting of timber at any time will not take plaintiff's claimed parol agreement out of the statute of frauds if such cutting is not referable exclusively to such parol contract.

Knoll v. Harvey, 19 Wis. 99.

In order to give the disclosure of a party the character of a privileged communication, it must be made to the attorney acting for the time being in the character of a legal adviser.

Brayton v. Chase, 3 Wis. 456; Tucker v. Finch, 66 Wis. 17, 27 N. W. 817; Cady v. Walker, 62 Mich. 157, 28 N. W. 805; Romberg v. Hughes, 18 Neb. 579, 26 N. W. 351; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 244; 19 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 143.

Messrs. L. M. Sturdevant and R. F. Kountz, for defendant in error:

A court of equity will enforce specific performance of the contract in question.

Pierrepont v. Barnard, 6 N. Y. 279; Pratt v. Ogden, 34 N. Y. 20.

The Lowes might have maintained a replevin for the logs at any time.

Bent v. Hozie, 90 Wis. 625, 64 N. W. 426.

It cannot be contended that this contract of purchase made with Jesse Lowe gave Bruley any title to the land, as upon its face it is only a contract to give a title at a future time upon the payment of a sum of money.

Huddleston v. Johnson, 71 Wis. 339, 37 N. W. 407; Heath v. Van Cott, 9 Wis. 522; Hoile v. Bailey, 58 Wis. 455, 17 N. W. 322. 48 L. R. A.

His only right to the timber, if any, was a mere license to sever it.

2 Pingham, Real Prop. p. 76; Dodge v. McClintock, 47 N. H. 383; Keystone Lumber Co. v. Kolman, 94 Wis. 465, 34 L. R. A. 821, 69 N. W. 165.

If the contract was executed by the severing of the timber before it was revoked, the title to the timber cut under the license would vest in the licensee.

Marsh v. Bellew, 45 Wis. 36; Lillie v. Dunbar, 62 Wis. 198, 22 N. W. 467.

Garvin was in possession before Bruley had any rights under his contract. Neither Bruley nor the owners of the land could prevent his cutting the timber.

White v. King, 87 Mich. 111, 49 N. W. 518; Rice v. Roberts, 24 Wis. 461, 1 Am. Rep. 195.

This court has gone further than most courts in guarding the communications between attorney and client.

Getzlaff v. Seliger, 43 Wis. 297; Foster v. Hall, 12 Pick. 89, 22 Am. Dec. 400; Bacon v. Frisbie, 80 N. Y. 394, 36 Am. Rep. 627; Moore v. Bray, 10 Pa. 519; 3 Jones. Ev. § 767.

A written agreement to sell land does not imply a license to cut down trees.

Moores v. Wait, 3 Wend. 104; Huddleston v. Johnson, 71 Wis. 339, 37 N. W. 407.

Winalow, J., delivered the opinion of the court:*

Examination of the evidence convinces us that the findings of the jury are sufficiently supported by the evidence, and the main question to be decided is whether these findings, in connection with the undisputed facts, justify the judgment rendered. Garvin attempted to purchase the timber by parol, and paid part of the purchase money, and agreed to pay the balance at a future time. While this contract was void under the statute of frauds because it was a contract for the sale of an interest in real estate, it was still effective as a parol license to cut timber, which was good until revoked; and the title to timber cut in reliance upon such license, prior to revocation thereof, would rest in Garvin. Marsh v. Bellew, 45 Wis. 36; Lillie v. Dunder, 62 Wis. 198, 22 N. W. 467. So the question simply is whether the license was revoked before Garvin cut the timber and converted it into personal property. There was no revocation by notice. The license had been executed by cutting the timber before any notice of revocation was given. But it is claimed that the written contract of sale of an undivided half of the land made by Bruley with Jesse Lowe December 8, and prior to the cutting of the timber, operated as a revocation of the license pro tanto. It is difficult to see how this conclusion can be escaped. A parol license to cut timber on the licensor's land is simply authority to do certain acts upon another's lands. Being founded in personal confidence, it is not assignable, and it is gone if the licensor deed the land to another, or if either party die. Thoenke v. Fiedler, 91 Wis. 386, 64 N. W. 1030; Northern P. R.

Co. v. Paine, 119 U. S. 561, 30 L. ed. 513, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 323. The authority is ended by the transfer of the title or by the fact of death, and no notice thereof is necessary. The estate of the licensor is gone, and the licensee's authority to go upon the land necessarily expires with the expiration of the licensor's estate. 1 Sugden, Vendors, 8th Am. ed. p. 177, note 1; 2 Am. Lead. Cas., note to Prince v. Case, p. 550. So, had Jesse Lowe deeded one half of the land to Bruley prior to the cutting, instead of making a contract to convey the same, there is no doubt that the license would have been thereby revoked as to an undivided half of the timber. But the contract to convey vested in Bruley the beneficial title to the land and timber, as between him and his grantor, and divested the grantor of all right to dispose of the timber thereafter. In other words, the grantor's power over the timber was gone. So the same condition which terminates the license in case of transfer by deed is present in case of a valid contract of sale, and the effect upon the unexecuted license must be the same. It is true that in the present case the title to the timber was by the contract reserved in the grantor until the purchase money should be fully paid. But this reservation of title was simply to secure the payment of the purchase money. The contract provided in express terms that Bruley should enter on the land and cut and manufacture the timber, and, upon payment of the purchase price, should receive a warranty deed of the property. The reservation of title in the timber simply amounted to a mortgage security, and gave no right to Lowe to dispose of the timber to others, or do anything with it save to resort to it to enforce payment of the purchase money. We conclude that, so far as the undivided half of the timber formerly owned by Jesse Lowe is concerned, Garvin's license was terminated prior to the cutting thereof, and hence that Bruley became the owner of that half. As to the other half of the timber, there was no valid contract to convey the same made before the timber was cut; and, the jury having found that no notice of revocation of the license was given prior to the cutting, the license was fully executed prior to the revocation, and Bruley acquired no title thereto.

One question arises upon the rulings on evidence. The plaintiff in error (defendant below) called as a witness Judge R. B. Salter, the county judge of Clark county, and a member of the bar, and endeavored to prove a conversation had by him with Garvin upon a railway train in December, 1896, with reference to the rights in the timber in question. This testimony was ruled out, upon objection upon the ground that it was a private communication, under § 4076, Rev. Stat. 1898. It appeared by answer to preliminary questions that Judge Salter understood that Garvin stated the facts to him because he knew he (Salter) was an attorney, and would give him an opinion; that a lawsuit was contemplated about the matter; that he gave his opinion to Garvin after hearing his statement; that he supposed Garvin was seeking his advice, but that he was not retained, and received no fee; and that Garvin was not his client. While the question as to the admissibility of this evidence is not free from difficulty, we think the ruling of the court was correct. In order to entitle a client to the statutory privilege, it is not absolutely essential that a fee should be paid, or that there should be an actual retainer. The exclusion of the evidence is founded upon public policy, in the furtherance of justice, to the end that a man may have free and unrestrained communication with his legal adviser. There can be no reasonable doubt that Salter was, for the time being, Garvin's legal adviser. Garvin unquestionably sought him and stated his case to him in his professional capacity, in order to get legal advice thereon. The subject is quite fully treated in the case of Bacon v. Frisbie, 80 N. Y. 394, 36 Am. Rep. 627, where a similar conclusion was reached under circumstances almost identical with those now before us. Crisler v. Garland, 11 Smedes & M. 136, 44 Am. Dec. 49; 3 Jones, Ev. § 767, and notes.

Some exceptions are taken to portions of the charge. We have examined them, and find no prejudicial error. They are not deemed of sufficient importance to require treatment at length.

Upon the verdict and undisputed facts, Garvin should have had judgment for one half the damages found, to wit, $44.06. The action being in tort for the recovery of money only, and his rightful recovery being less than $50, he was not entitled to costs, but the defendant below was. Rev. Stat. 1898, § 2918; Bugbee v. Lombard, 94 Wis. 326, 68 N. W. 953.

As to the sum of $44.06, the judgment is affirmed, and the remainder of the judgment is reversed, and the case is remanded, with directions to allow the plaintiff in error to tax his costs in the trial court, and enter judgment therefor against the defendant in error. The plaintiff in error will be allowed to tax the clerk's fees in this court, and his necessary disbursements for printing, but no other costs in this court are to be taxed.

NORTH CAROLINA SUPREME COURT.

A. M. BASKET et al.

v.

John R. MOSS et al., Appts.

(115 N. C. 448.)

1. An agreement for expenses and compensation for services to influence or procure appointment to office is void.
2. An injunction may issue against the exercise of the power of sale under a mortgage which is void as against public policy.
3. The rule denying a remedy to a person in pari delicto will not prevent equitable relief against the enforcement of the power of sale in a mortgage which is against public policy because it was given in compensation for services to influence or procure appointment to a public office.

(December 27, 1894.)

NOTE.—Allowing injunction, in favor of party in pari delicto, against enforcing or otherwise proceeding with illegal contract.

- I. Introductory.
- II. Contracts for assistance in obtaining office.
- III. Contracts as to confederate money.
- IV. Contracts relating to marriage.
 - a. In general.
 - b. Marriage brokerage bonds.
- V. Contracts for illicit intercourse.
- VI. Betting and gambling contracts.
 - a. In general.
 - b. In case of assignment.
 - c. Relief at law generally.
 - d. Judgments.
- VII. Contracts for compounding crime.
- VIII. Miscellaneous.

I. Introductory.

The main case, to the effect that an injunction may be granted in favor of a person in pari delicto against enforcing an illegal contract, is supported by quite a large number of cases,—especially in England,—holding that the public interest will be best subserved by preventing either party from recovering anything from the other under an illegal contract, although the tendency of the later cases in this country seems rather to be to the effect that the best method is to leave both parties entirely without any relief at law or in equity.

The cases very generally hold that where a contract has been executed no relief will be granted to either party. But the courts do not exactly agree as to when the contract is executed, some courts holding that it is executed when a note or deed of trust has been given, and others holding that the contract in such case is executory only.

The cases are quite general in holding that in case of executory contracts equitable relief will be granted if the public interests will be subserved thereby; but there is a lack of uniformity as to what will best subserve such interests. The tendency of the later cases, however, in this country, as has been previously said, seems to be to the effect that the best method is to leave the parties without relief of any kind.

In cases, also, where the illegal contract is broken off by one of the parties before any illegal act has been done, such party is entitled to an injunction against the enforcement of the contract by the other party.

48 L. R. A.

APPEAL by defendants from a decree of the Superior Court for Vance County restraining the sale until final judgment in a proceeding brought to enjoin the sale of land under a deed of trust and to set aside such deed. Affirmed.

The case sufficiently appears in the opinion.

Mr. T. T. Hicks for appellants.

Mr. A. C. Zollieoffer for appellees.

Clark, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The public has a right to some better test of the capacity of their servants than the fact that they possess the means of purchasing their offices. The Code (§ 1871) provides: "All bargains, bonds, and assurances, made or given for the purchase or sale

In some cases, also, an injunction has been denied on the ground that there was a sufficient defense at law.

There is also a class of cases where parties are both in fault, but one more than the other; and in this class of cases relief has generally been given. These, however, do not fall within the scope of this note.

II. Contracts for assistance in obtaining office.

The cases seem to be quite general to the effect that the public interest will best be subserved by granting an injunction in such a case.

Thus, in Law v. Law, Cas. & Talb. 140, 3 P. Wms. 391, a perpetual injunction was granted against enforcement of a bond given for procuring a position in the office of the commissioners of excise on the ground of public policy, as such engagements were likely to cause corruption and extortion in office.

In Hanington v. Du-Chatel, 1 Bro. Ch. 124, a perpetual injunction was granted against an action on a bond for recommending the obligor for a vacancy to the office of page to his majesty, on the ground that, although such position was not an office within the statute of 5 & 6 Edw. VI., it was a matter of public policy to discountenance the sale of such offices. The claim was also made that the illegality of the contract might have been pleaded at law, but the court, while expressing a doubt on the subject, held that, as the question had never been determined, the injunction should be granted.

And in Whittingham v. Burgoyne, 3 Anstr. 900, the payment of money levied under an execution on a judgment upon a draft given for procuring a promotion in the army, was enjoined, the court holding that where one sells his interest to procure another an office of trust or service under the Crown it was a contract of turpitude, and that the fact that the plaintiff was particeps criminis did not prevent relief, as public policy requires the interference of the court to check vicious practices.

And in the main case an injunction was granted against the sale of land under a power in a deed of trust given in consideration of the grantee's promise to secure the grantor's appointment as postmaster, the court holding that the deed of trust was void as against public policy and could not be enforced, and that reasons of public policy forbidding such species of corruption were too profound and too important to the public welfare to be evaded by of any office whatsoever, the sale of which is contrary to law, shall be void." Notwithstanding the office is an office under the United States government, if an action were brought in our courts to recover upon a bond or mortgage given for such consideration, our courts would hold it void. Such agreements are void at common law, as well as by statute. So, also, contracts to procure appointments to office are void (Mechem, Pub. Off. § 351), or to resign office in another's favor (Id. § 357; Meacham v. Dow, 32 Vt. 721; Graeme v. Wroughton, 11 Exch. 146). Public offices are public trusts, and should be conferred solely upon considerations of ability, integrity, fidelity, and fitness for the position. Agreements for compensation to procure these tend directly and necessarily to lower the character of the appointments, to the great detriment of the public. Hence such agreements, of whatever nature, have always been held void, as being against public policy. Meguire v. Corwine, 101 U. S. 108, 25 L. ed. 899; Providence Tool Co. v. Norris, 2 Wall. 45, 17 L. ed. 868; Gray v. Hook, 4 N. Y. 449; Gaston v. Drake, 14 Nev. 175, 33 Am. Rep. 548; Filson v. Himes, 5 Pa. 452, 47 Am. Dec. 422; Faurie v. Morin, 4 Mart. (La.) 39, 6 Am. Dec. 701; Liness v. Hesing, 44 Ill. 113, 92 Am. Dec. 153. Says Ames, Ch. J., in Eddy v. Capron, 4 R. I. 394, 67 Am. Dec. 541: "By the theory of our government, . . . appointments to . . . [office] are presumed to be made solely upon the principle of detur digniori, . . . and any practice whereby the bare consideration of money is brought to bear in any form upon such appointment to or resignation of office conflicts with and degrades this great the simple device of a power of sale. Shepherd, Ch. J., dissented, however, on the ground that public policy would be best subserved by leaving both parties where their illegal conduct had placed them.

III. Contracts as to confederate money.

The enforcement of contracts relating to confederate money has also been enjoined in some cases.

Thus, in Humes v. Ward, decided in 1860, and cited in Hale v. Sharp, 4 Coldw. 279, a sale under a deed of trust to secure confederate treasury notes borrowed, was enjoined.

And Hale v. Sharp, 4 Coldw. 275, supra, holds that the right of the court to enjoin a sale under such a deed on the ground of public policy is not affected by the fact that an award has been made by arbitrators. In this case the defendant also claimed that the relief should be denied on the ground that the contract was executed, but the court held that it was executory, as it had been executed on one side only.

These decisions were afterwards overruled, in effect, in Sherfy v. Argenbright, 1 Heisk. 128, 2 Am. Rep. 690, the court following the decisions of the Federal courts holding that the use of such money under the circumstances was not illegal.

IV. Contracts relating to marriage.

a. In general.

An injunction has been granted in England in several cases of secret agreement relating to marriage.

Thus, in Gale v. Lindo, 1 Vern. 475, the collection of a bond given to the obligor's brother to repay money given by him to her to make up her marriage portion was perpetually enjoined at the instance of her executor after her death.

And in Lamlee v. Hanman, 2 Vern. 499, an injunction was granted against an action on a bond secretly given by the obligor to his mother just before his marriage, conditioned to pay a specified annuity to her in addition to the annuity mentioned in the son's marriage settlement.

And in Turton v. Benson, 1 P. Wms. 496, 2 Vern. 764, Prec. in Ch. 522, 10 Mod. 455, 1 Strange, 240, a perpetual injunction was granted against a bond executed by the obligor just before his marriage without his parents' knowledge, to pay back to his wife's father part of the portion allowed the wife on the marriage, even though such bond had been assigned signed by the obligee for the benefit of his creditors.

And in Webber v. Farmer, 4 Bro. P. C. 170, a perpetual injunction was granted against proceeding at law on a defeasance for reconveyance of land on repayment of the amount paid, such conveyance and defeasance having been executed to enable the grantee to marry and secure a marriage portion.

And in Roberts v. Roberts, 3 P. Wms. 66, an injunction was asked against the enforcement of a bond privately given by one intending marriage to pay to his son £1,000, which amount the latter had released to enable the father to effect the marriage. The court in this case stated that in such circumstances an injunction would ordinarily be given, but refused it in this instance, because, at the previous marriage of the son, the father had agreed to pay the £1,000, and the son had given back a secret agreement not to insist on such payment, and the court held that in such case, as the son's marriage occurred first, it should have the preference.

b. Marriage brokerage bonds.

In several instances the enforcement of marriage brokerage bonds has also been enjoined in England.

Thus, in Drury v. Hooke, 1 Vern. 412, 2 Cas. in Ch. 176, a perpetual injunction against such a bond was granted, the marriage having been had without the consent of the woman's parents.

And in Williamson v. Gihon, 2 Sch. & Lef. 357, an injunction was granted to restrain execution on a judgment upon a bond voluntarily given without previous agreement for prior services in aiding the obligor in an elopement and marriage.

And in Shirley v. Martin, cited in Roche v. O'Brien, 1 Ball & B. 357, an injunction was granted against enforcing a bond against a fortune hunter, given for assistance rendered him in marrying a lady of fortune, on the ground that it was a marriage brokerage bond, and could not be made valid in equity.

And in Cotton v. Catlyn, 2 Eq. Cas. Abr. 525, the court stated that one to whom a note was given for assistance rendered to the maker in marrying the former's mistress would have been enjoined from taking any advantage thereunder and an injunction granted was continued as against indorsees of the note, whose good faith was questioned.

And in Smith v. Aykwell, 3 Atk. 566, the court granted an injunction against an assignment of a note alleged to have been given principle. . . . The services performed under such appointments are paid for by salary or fees presumed to be adjusted by law to the precise point of adequate remuneration for them. Any premium paid to obtain office . . . interferes with this adjustment, and tempts to peculation, overcharges, and frauds, in the effort to restore the balance thus disturbed." Besides, the moral sense revolts at traffic, to any extent, in the bestowal of public office. It is against good morals, as well as against the soundest principles of public policy. If public offices can be sold or procured for money, the purchasers will be sure to reimburse themselves by dispensing the functions of their offices for pecuniary consideration. The law wisely guards against the first step in that direction. For that reason, not only the sum agreed to be paid directly to the holder of this office to resign, but the amounts advanced for expenses and compensation of persons to go to Washington to procure the authorities there to accept the resignation of one party and the appointment of the other, are not recoverable, for the same reason that agreements to pay for lobbying the passage of bills before a legislative body are void. Lawson, Contr. § 309, and Mechem, Pub. Off. § 360, and cases cited. All agreements for expenses and compensation of persons seeking to influence or procure appointments to office are void. Lawson, Contr. § 310. The courts "condemn the very appearance of evil, and it matters not that in the particular case nothing improper was done or was expected to be done. It is enough that the employment tends directly to such results." Clippinger v. Hepbaugh, 5 Watts & S. 315, on a marriage brokerage contract, and supported by an affidavit to that effect, although it refused to extend the injunction so as to prevent the payee from proceeding at law on the note.

V. Contracts for illicit intercourse.

There are quite a large number of English cases on this subject, and they very generally hold that where the contract is made in consideration of past illicit intercourse it is valid, but that where it is made in consideration of future cohabitation it is invalid; and an injunction against its enforcement has usually been granted, except that in some cases it has been refused on the ground that the remedy at law is adequate.

Thus, in Bodly v. ———, 2 Cas. in Ch. 15, an injunction against an action on a bond for the support of a bastard child, given to the mother's sister, was refused on an allegation by the defendant that plaintiff, after having promised to marry her, abused and left her, and the court refused to inquire into a claim as to the defendant's unfaithfulness made in the plaintiff's reply, on the ground that it was not the duty of the court to inquire into such matters.

In Hill v. Spencer, 2 Ambl. 641, and 836, an injunction against proceeding at law on a voluntary bond given to a common prostitute, by one who had previously cohabited with her, was refused, the court stating that where such bonds had been given for future cohabitation, relief had been granted, but that there was nothing to prevent one from giving a voluntary bond to such a person.

But in Clarke v. Periam, 2 Atk. 333, 9 Mod. 340, the court, with the consent of the parties, granted a perpetual injunction against proceedings at law on a bond given to a common prostitute, as a premium pudicitie.

And in Benyon v. Nettlefold, 2 Eng. L. & Eq. 117, 3 Macn. & G. 94, 20 L. J. Ch. N. S. 186, 15 Jur. 209, an injunction against an action on a deed, valid on its face, was granted until a discovery could be had from the plaintiff in such action, to show that the deed had been given in consideration of future illicit intercourse with the woman for whose benefit it was executed.

And in Slisney v. Ell, 13 Jur. 480, 17 Sim. 1, 18 L. J. Ch. N. S. 350, an injunction against proceeding at law on an indenture, legal on its face, but in fact given in consideration of future illicit cohabitation, was granted, as the grantor had never acted on the arrangement, and the whole thing had been broken off by 48 L. R. A.

him before any illegal act had been done thereunder.

But in Batty v. Chester, 5 Beav. 103, an injunction against prosecuting an action on a deed given in consideration of future cohabitation with the grantee was refused on the ground that plaintiff had accompanied his claim for relief with a claim that he was released from liability because the defendant had ceased to cohabit with him, thus relying, in part at least, on the original immoral agreement, instead of relying wholly on its immorality, the court stating that relief could have been granted if the plaintiff had relied wholly on such immorality.

In Gray v. Mathias, 5 Ves. Jr. 286, an injunction granted against an action on a bond to pay a woman an annuity in case the obligor should cease to cohabit with her was reversed on the ground that no relief should be granted in equity, as there was a valid defense at law because of the invalidity of the bond.

And in Smyth v. Griffin, 8 Jur. 1131, 14 L. J. Ch. N. S. 28, affirming 13 Sim. 245, 7 Jur. 101, 12 L. J. Ch. N. S. 193, an injunction against an action on a bond with warrant of attorney to enter judgment, and a judgment entered thereon, asked on the ground that the bond was given in consideration of future illicit cohabitation, and secured the payment of an annuity to commence when such cohabitation should cease, was denied on the ground that there was a sufficient defense at law, as the bond was void on its face, and that the fact that such bond was in the defendant's possession could make no difference as she could be required to produce it on the trial of the action at law.

VI. Betting and gambling contracts.

a. In general.

In most cases of this kind an injunction has been granted, either on the ground that public interest would best be subserved thereby, or that the statute makes such a contract absolutely void. The later cases in this country, however, show a tendency to refuse any relief to either party in these, as well as in other, cases.

In Lloyd v. Gurdon, 2 Swanst. 181, an injunction was granted against indorsing, negotiating, or parting with bills of exchange given for money won at play.

And in Rucker v. Wynne, 2 Head, 617, an injunction was granted against maintaining an action on a check given for a gambling debt, the court stating that the best method to dis-

40 Am. Dec. 519; Wood v. McCann, 6 Dana, 366; Mills v. Mills, 40 N. Y. 543, 100 Am. Dec. 535; and numerous other cases cited in notes to Mechem, Pub. Off. § 360; Lawson, Contr. § 311, and cases cited.

If an action had been brought to recover these sums, or to foreclose a mortgage given to secure payment thereof, the court would dismiss the action. The defendant contends, however, that as he was careful to take a mortgage, with a power of sale, the courts will not interfere by injunction, but will let him proceed to collect his ill-gotten gains. This would simply legalize the practice which is denounced both by statute and common law. Reasons of public policy forbidding this species of corruption are too profound, and too important to the public welfare, to be evaded and nullified by so simple a device. A mortgage given to secure a sum of money upon an agreement against public policy is void. Code, § 1871; Teal v. Walker, 111 U. S. 252, 28 L. ed. 419, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 420; Wilkey v. Collier, 7 Md. 273, 61 Am. Dec. 346; Crowder v. Reed, 80 Ind. 1. The sale under a void mortgage would be a cloud on the title, and an injunction lies especially when the invalidity does not appear upon the face of the mortgage, but requires extrinsic evidence to prove it. 1 High, Inj. § 469; Yager v. Merkle, 26 Minn. 429, 4 N. W. 819. In cases where the consideration is immoral, the deed will be set aside. 2 Addison, Contr. 716. Pom. Eq. Jur. §§ 939-942, calls attention to the fact that the rule in pari delicto is often misunderstood, and its application is, properly and correctly, that in such cases potior est conditio possidentis,—that is, that the court will permit nothing to be done which will courage gaming was to remove the temptation by denying the defendant the profits of his violation of the law.

And in Milltown v. Stewart, 3 Myl. & C. 18, 6 L. J. Ch. N. S. 298, Affirming 8 Sim. 371, an injunction was allowed in Ireland against bringing suit on a bond on the ground that it was given for a gambling debt. A decree nisi for taking the bill pro confesso was served on the defendant, who died two days afterwards. Four years later suit was brought in England on the bond by the defendant's representatives, and an injunction was granted, such representatives having destroyed the books of the original defendant, and being unable to tell the consideration for the bond.

In Petition v. Hipple, 90 Ill. 420, 32 Am. Rep. 31, an injunction was granted against a stakeholder paying over money to the winner of a bet on the result of an election, the court holding that a court of chancery has jurisdiction to restrain the enforcement of gaming contracts, though both parties have been guilty of a breach of a penal statute matter.

But in Beer v. Landman, 88 Tex. 450, 31 S. W. 805, an injunction against the collection of notes given in settlement of a balance due on a gambling transaction arising out of cotton futures was denied on the ground that the court would not give relief to a party in pari delicto.

And in Kahn v. Walton, 46 Ohio St. 195, 20 N. E. 203, an injunction against the payment by a bank of a check given to a stock broker for commissions and advances on a contract for speculating on the rise and fall of prices of goods, bought and sold without an intention to deliver them, was refused on the ground that the parties, being in pari delicto, would be left by the courts where they found themselves, the court saying that this was the modern doctrine, and that such method would tend to discourage such transactions more than that of giving relief to one of the parties from the consequences of his own wrongful conduct. The court also said in this case that there would have been place for repentance and recovery if it had taken place before the unlawful act had been performed. Minshall, J., dissented on the ground that almost without exception relief had been granted in case of gaming contracts.

b. In case of assignment.

An injunction has usually been granted against the enforcement of gambling contracts notwithstanding an assignment, unless the element of estoppel has entered in.

Thus, in ——— v. Blackwood, 3 Anstr. 48 L. R. A.

851, an injunction to restrain the ultimate negotiation of a note given for money lost at play, which had been colorably indorsed before, was granted on an affidavit made before service of subpoena.

And in Barker v. Callihan, 5 Ala. 708, an injunction was granted to restrain the maker of a note won at play with the payee from paying the same to any other person than such payee, although the note had been transferred to one with notice of the facts in the case, the court holding that the fact that the parties were in pari delicto would not prevent relief.

And in Lyle v. Lindsey, 5 B. Mon. 123, the court, relying on the Kentucky statute authorizing the recovery by the loser of money lost at play, granted an injunction against enforcing a judgment on a note given by the loser at play to a creditor of the winner who took with knowledge of the unlawful gaming. In this case judgment had been rendered on the note, but the decision does not seem to have been affected by such fact.

And in Tantum v. Arnold, 42 N. J. Eq. 60, 6 Atl. 316, an injunction was granted against an assignee with notice, who had paid no value therefor, disposing of notes and mortgages given by a married woman to a broker to enable her husband to carry on with such broker speculations in stocks on margins, under the New Jersey statute making such transactions and the securities to facilitate them utterly void.

And, even though the assignment was for value and without notice, an injunction has been allowed.

Thus, in Portarlington v. Soulby, 3 Myl. & K. 104, an injunction was granted to restrain the assignees of a bill of exchange given for money lost at play from suing thereon in Ireland. The bill had been assigned under circumstances which ought to have occasioned inquiry on the part of the assignees, but the court held that the injunction would have been proper, even though there had been no such circumstances and the assignees had not known of the illegal consideration.

And in Baker v. Williams, cited in Rawden v. Shadwell, 1 Amb. 269, note 5, proceedings at law were stayed on a note given for a gambling debt and indorsed to one claiming to have taken it without knowledge that it was given for that purpose.

And in Chapin v. Dake, 57 Ill. 295, 11 Am. Rep. 15, the payment to an innocent holder of drafts indorsed and delivered in payment of a gambling debt was enjoined, the court holding that the indorsement was void under the Illinois enable a party to collect from the other the fruits of his wrong. When he sues to recover, the law will not give him judgment. When he has shrewdly attempted to evade this by taking a mortgage with a power of sale, the court will, by injunction, prevent his collecting on a mortgage denounced as void by reasons of public policy. In § 941 he says: "Whenever public policy is considered as advanced by allowing either party to sue for relief against the transaction, then relief is given to him. In pursuance of this principle, and in compliance with the demands of a high public policy, equity may aid a party equally guilty with his opponent, not only by canceling and ordering the surrender of an executory agreement, but even by setting aside an executed contract, conveyance, or transfer, and decreeing the recovery back of money paid or property delivered in performance of the agreement." Also, in § 940, he says that whenever the defensive remedy at law will not be equally certain, perfect, and adequate, the equitable remedy will be granted by injunction and the like. "The equitable relief so conferred does not violate the general maxim concerning parties in pari delicto; on the contrary, it carries that maxim into effect." So in the present case the injunction against sale under the void mortgage taken against public policy enforces that maxim, by preventing either party recovering anything from the other. This is also the well-settled rule in England. In Lloyd v. Gurdon, 2 Swanst. 181, Lord Eldon granted an injunction to restrain the negotiation of bills of exchange which were made void by statute (9 Anne, chap. 14), which is in the very tenor of § 1871 of the Code, applicable statute against gaming, and that no more effect should be given to it than to a forged instrument.

In most of the following cases a judgment had been rendered on the obligation given in consideration of the illegal contract, but in most instances such fact did not influence the decision of the court.

In Dade v. Madison, 5 Leigh, 401, the court held that an injunction against a judgment on an acceptance was properly dissolved as to an assignee, on the ground that it was not sufficiently proved, as to him, that the acceptance was for a gambling debt, but stated that if such fact had been proved the mere fact that the assignee had not been informed that it had been given for gaming would make no difference, as the Virginia statute rendered all gaming contracts void.

In Gough v. Pratt, 9 Md. 526, an injunction was granted against enforcement of a judgment by a bona fide assignee on a bond given for a gambling consideration, on the ground that under the statute of Anne, chap. 14, such bond was absolutely void, and that such action would put a wholesome restraint on gaming contracts.

And in Martin v. Terrell, 12 Smedes & M. 571, an injunction was granted against the enforcement of a judgment by an assignee for value on a note given in renewal of a note given for a bet lost on a horse race, under the Mississippi statute making any note given for money won at a horse race utterly void.

And in Lucas v. Waul, 12 Smedes & M. 157, an injunction was granted against the enforcement of a judgment on a note given for money lost at play, on the ground that the original contract and judgment were absolutely void, and that the Mississippi statute placed a taint on the indebtedness which nothing can purify, and that the matter stood as if no indebtedness ever existed. The court also held that the fact that the note had passed into the hands of a bona fide holder for value did not change the rule.

And in Woodson v. Barrett, 2 Hen. & M. 80, 3 Am. Dec. 612, it was held that the assignee of a note given for money won at gaming, although for value and without notice of the nature of the debt, could not recover, and that a perpetual injunction should be awarded against a judgment thereon. The court in this case states that the circulation of gaming bonds is an evil to be discountenanced no less than the giving of them, and that no means are more likely to prevent the giving of them than to put an effectual stop to their circulation.

48 L. R. A.

Where the obligor, however, had led the assignee to believe that the obligation was valid and would be paid, a recovery by the assignee was allowed.

Thus, in Hoopes v. Smock, 1 Wash. (Va.) 389, it is held that a judgment on a bond for money lost at gaming would be enjoined as against an assignee, unless he had been induced to take the assignment by the obligor under the belief that it was a valid obligation.

And in Bucknell v. Myler, cited in Kenney v. Browne, 8 Ridgeway, F. C. 513, the court stated that an injunction against enforcing a judgment by confession under a power of attorney in a bond for money won at billiards would have been granted, as against the obligee or assignee for value, if the obligor had not acknowledged to the latter that the debt was fair, and that he would be safe in taking the security; but because of such inducement the injunction was refused.

And in Pettit v. Jennings, 2 Rob. (Va.) 676, an injunction against a sale by an assignee under a deed of trust to secure a bond for a gambling debt was held to have been properly dissolved on the ground that the assignee did not know that the bond had been executed for such a debt, and had been induced by the obligor to purchase on the assurance that there was no objection to it, and that it would be duly paid.

And in Nelson v. Armstrong, 5 Gratt. 354, an injunction against a judgment was continued until it could be ascertained whether the drafts on which the judgment was rendered were given for a gambling debt as claimed, and if so whether the assignee of the drafts was induced to accept them by the concealment or misrepresentation of the maker that the consideration of the debt was good and lawful.

But in Finn v. Barclay, 15 Ala. 626, an injunction was granted against the enforcement of a judgment on a note showing on its face that it was founded on a gaming consideration, notwithstanding a promise by the maker to an assignee of the note to pay the same, where such assignee had previously acquired it as collateral security without paying anything of value therefor, although, in reliance on such promise, he released the debt secured by the note.

c. Relief at law generally.

The cases are not uniform as to whether the fact that there is a remedy at law will prevent the granting of an injunction, the English cases, especially, holding that such fact will not prevent injunctive relief.

to the present transaction. Lord Hardwicke granted the injunctive relief in a similar case (Smith v. Aykewell, 3 Atk. 566); and the vice chancellor, in Milltown v. Stewart, 8 Sim. 371, which was affirmed by Lord Cottenham (3 Myl. & C. 18). In such case, before the master of the rolls, Sir John Romilly, where part of the consideration was for money loaned, and part was for an immoral consideration, the whole mortgage was ordered to be canceled; the court declining to pass upon the question whether the mortgagee could recover at law for the valid part of the consideration, i. e., the money loaned. Willyams v. Bullmore, 33 L. J. Ch. N. S. 461. In the present case, upon the defendant's own showing, $37.50 is the only valid part of the sum attempted to be secured. Whether the mortgage can be upheld to that extent is not before us, as the plaintiff, in his reply, expresses his willingness to pay said sum. The plaintiff recovering judgment for the cancelation of the mortgage, the defendant should be taxed with the costs. The injunction was properly continued to the hearing.

Affirmed.

Shepherd, Ch. J., concurring:

I concur in the conclusion of the court that the agreement which the mortgage is given to secure is contrary to public policy, and therefore illegal, and I am also of the opinion that the injunction should be continued until the final hearing. It is alleged that the plaintiff Joseph Basket has a resulting trust in the land included in the mortgage, and as it does not appear that he had any connection with the illegal transaction between A. M. Basket, the mortgagor

Thus, in Newman v. Franco, 2 Anstr. 519, the court overruled a demurrer, on that ground, to a bill for an injunction against an action on bills of exchange given for money lost at play.

And in Andrews v. Berry, 2 Anstr. 634, a demurrer to a bill to restrain the negotiation of a note for money won at play, taken on the ground that under the statutes of 9 Anne, chap. 14, and 18 Geo. II. chap. 84, relief in equity could be granted only when it was sought to recover back money lost at play and paid over, was overruled.

But in Wilkinson v. L'Eaugler, 2 Younge & C. 366, an injunction against an action on an I. O. U. for money lent for purposes of gambling in France was denied, the court holding that the question whether there could be a recovery might be tried in the action at law.

And in Beer v. Landman, 88 Tex. 450, 31 S. W. 806, an injunction against the collection of notes given in settlement of a balance due on a gambling transaction arising out of cotton futures was denied on the ground that if there was any defense it must be set up in an action at law.

d. Judgments.

Many decisions have been rendered in which the fact that judgment had been taken did not seem to affect the decision of the court in any manner.

Thus, in Gill v. Webb, 4 T. B. Mon. 299, an injunction was granted against the enforcement of a judgment on a note for money lost at cards.

And in Weakley v. Watkins, 7 Humph. 356, the court refused an injunction against the enforcement of a judgment on a note executed as a wager on a pending election, stating that there was no difference in the position of the winner and loser so far as their right to become active movers in the courts on such contracts was concerned. This case was, however, criticized and overruled in effect in the later case of Rucker v. Wynne, 2 Head, 617, supra.

And in Smith v. Kammerer, 152 Pa. 98, 25 Atl. 165, the court refused an injunction against proceedings for the collection of a judgment on notes secured by chattel mortgage given as security for indebtedness incurred in gaming in wheat and pork, and to provide a margin in further speculations.

For other cases of this kind, see also supra, VI. b.

In several cases an injunction has been granted on the ground that the statute expressly provided that all gaming contracts should be void, or authorized the injunction of judgments on such contracts.

Thus, in McAuley v. Mardis, Walk. (Miss.) 307, an injunction was granted against the enforcement of a judgment on a note for a gambling consideration, although the defense might have been made in the action at law, as the Mississippi statute gives chancery jurisdiction to enjoin judgments at law in all cases of gambling consideration.

And in Cheatham v. Young, 5 Ala. 358, the court held that an injunction should be granted against a judgment on a note for a gambling debt, stating that as the sole consideration for the note was such debt the court had jurisdiction, and that under the Alabama act of 1812, giving jurisdiction to enjoin judgments at law in all cases of gambling consideration, it was unnecessary to show any reason for not setting up the defense in the action at law.

And in Finn v. Barclay, 15 Ala. 626, an injunction was granted against the enforcement of a judgment on a note given for double the value of a horse, with the understanding that its payment should depend on the result of a presidential election, although no offer was made to pay the value of the horse, as the Alabama act of 1812 gave the court jurisdiction to enjoin judgments on gaming contracts, and the act of 1807 declares such contracts void.

In Lyon v. Respaw, 1 Litt. (Ky.) 133, an injunction was granted against the enforcement of a judgment on a note for money lost at play, under the Kentucky statute making such contracts void.

And in Martin v. Terrell, 12 Smedes & M. 571, an injunction was granted against the enforcement of a note given for a bet lost on a horse race, the court holding that, as the judgment was absolutely void, equity would interfere though the defense might have been made at law.

And in Gough v. Pratt, 9 Md. 526, an injunction was granted against the enforcement of a judgment on a bond given for a gambling consideration, notwithstanding the failure to defend the suit at law, as the statute of Anne, 14, makes such a bond absolutely void.

And in Emerson v. Townsend, 73 Md. 224, 20 Atl. 984, an injunction was granted, for similar reasons, against the enforcement of a judgment on a note for money loaned for gambling purposes.

In Skipwith v. Strother, 8 Rand. (Va.) 214, it was held that a judgment on a gaming bond would be enjoined because of the original vice in the transaction, even though the party giving it had failed to defend in the action at law.

(the holder of the legal title), and the mortgagee, I see no reason why the equitable aid of the court should not be extended to him. I cannot agree, however, in that part of the opinion which declares that A. M. Basket is entitled to equitable relief. "Wherever a contract or other transaction is illegal, and the parties thereto are, in contemplation of law, in pari delicto, it is a well-settled rule, subject only to a few special exceptions, depending upon other considerations of policy, that a court of equity will not aid a particeps criminis either by enforcing the contract or obligation while it is yet executory, or by relieving him against it by setting it aside, or by enabling him to recover the title to property which he has parted with by its means. The principle is thus applied in the same manner when the illegality is merely a malum prohibitum, being in contravention to some positive statute, and when it is a malum in se, as being contrary to public policy or to good morals. Among the latter class are agreements and transfers, the consideration of which was violation of chastity, compounding of a felony, gambling, false swearing, the commission of any crime, or breach of good morals." 1 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 402. "Where the party seeking relief is the sole guilty party, or where he has participated equally and deliberately in the fraud, or where the agreement which he seeks to set aside is founded in illegality, immorality, or base and unconscionable on his own part,—in such cases courts of equity will leave him to the consequences of his own iniquity, and will decline to assist him to escape from the toils which he has studiously prepared to entangle others, or whereby he has sought to violate with impunity the best

In Roberts v. Taylor, 7 Port. (Ala.) 251, an injunction was granted to one indorsing a note for money lost at play against payment by the maker of the amount to the indorsee, although the latter had recovered judgment thereon against the maker, the court holding that as the indorsement was absolutely void under the Alabama statute the court would interfere, since the money had not been actually paid over.

In Abrams v. Camp, 4 Ill. 290, an injunction against the enforcement of a judgment on a note given for money lost at cards was refused on the ground that under the Illinois statute, making such notes void, there was a good defense to the action at law, and that the refusal of the plaintiff in such action to testify on the ground that it would criminate him was insufficient to warrant an injunction, as other witnesses should have been called to prove such fact.

This case, however, was overruled in Mallett v. Butcher, 41 Ill. 382, which held that the injunction should have been granted, as the statute rendered such contracts void.

For other cases where an injunction against a judgment has been rendered notwithstanding an assignment of the obligation sued on, see supra, VI. b.

In other cases an injunction has been granted on the ground that a court of equity has jurisdiction equally with a court of law.

Thus, in Clay v. Fry, 3 Bibb, 248, 6 Am. Dec. 654, a judgment rendered without defense on a note for money lost at play was enjoined, the court holding that as the defense was available either at law or in equity, the failure to set it up in the action at law did not prevent equitable relief.

And in Paulding v. Watson, 21 Ala. 279, an injunction was granted against the enforcement of a judgment by default on a note given for a gaming consideration, although more than seven years had passed since its rendition, and no excuse was given for not making the defense at law.

In McKinney v. Pope, 3 B. Mon. 93, the enforcement of a judgment on a note was enjoined to the amount of sums won at play by the payee from the maker, the court holding that under the Kentucky act of 1833 money lost at gaming might be recovered in chancery, and that as the statute was passed to afford relief to the loser, and also to suppress gambling for the public good, equity had jurisdiction to grant the injunction.

In Brown v. Watson, 6 B. Mon. 588, an injunction was granted against the enforcement of a judgment on a note given for a horse, by one who had previously delivered it to the seller under a bet by which the horse was to be forfeited if the owner should fail to run a race with it on terms agreed on. The court held that the transaction was within the above act of 1833, under which the court had jurisdiction to grant such relief.

And in Thomas v. Watson, Taney, 297. Fed. Cas. No. 13,913, an injunction was granted against the enforcement of a judgment confessed on a note on a gambling consideration, on the ground that public policy required the suppression of the vice of gambling, and that the mere confession of a judgment should not be permitted to interfere with such policy.

And White v. Washington, 5 Gratt. 645, holds that a judgment on a gaming debt may be enjoined where the debtor was surprised on the trial in the action on the debt, although he did not apply for a new trial in such action. as a court of equity has from the beginning a more complete jurisdiction in such a case, and treats all judgments on a gaming consideration as mere securities where there has not been a defense or a full and fair trial.

But in Moffett v. White, 1 Litt. (Ky.) 324, an injunction against the enforcement of a judgment for money lost at cards was refused on the ground that there had been an unsuccessful effort to establish such defense in the action at law, the court, however, stating that if no defense had been made the relief would have been granted, as the party had the right to elect to defend either at law or in equity.

Relief has, however, been refused quite generally on the ground that the defense that the obligation was invalid should have been made in a court of law.

Giddens v. Lea, 3 Humph. 133; Jones v. Jones, 4 N. C. (Term Rep.) 110; and Owens v. Van Winkle Gln & Mach. Co. 96 Ga. 408. 31 L. R. A. 767, 23 S. E. 416,—are cases of this kind.

VII. Contracts for compounding crime.

It seems that as to contracts of this nature the courts of this country have regularly refused to grant an injunction unless some special reason therefor is shown.

Thus, in Booker v. Wingo, 29 S. C. 116, 7 S. E. 49, an injunction against a suit on a note given to induce the payee to use his influence to have a criminal prosecution against the maker's husband stopped, was granted. But the ground of such decision was that the maker was a married woman, and therefore the note interests and morals of social life. . . . Courts of equity could not, without staining the administration of justice, interfere to save the party from the just results of his own gross misconduct, when the failure of success in the scheme would manifestly be the sole cause of his praying relief." 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 697; Adams, Eq. 418. These principles are so well established that it is hardly necessary to produce authority in their support, and that they have been recognized by this court is plainly evident by a reference to the cases of York v. Merritt, 77 N. C. 213; Sparks v. Sparks, 94 N. C. 527, and authorities cited. There are, it is true, limitations to the rule, as where parties are not equally in fault, or, as in the case of usury, where the borrower is considered as in vinculo, or where the security is for past cohabitation; and there are cases where, under peculiar circumstances, considerations of public policy will be best subserved by granting relief. These and other instances will be found in the text-books and notes to which I have referred, and there seems to be some confusion in the decided cases upon the subject. No satisfactory authority, however, can, in my opinion, be found, to take the present case out of the general rule. If, as we have seen, the court will not interfere where the consideration is the compounding of a felony or the commission of a crime, it is difficult to understand why it should extend its relief where the consideration is for the commission of the offense alleged in the complaint. Certainly, considerations of public policy are as grave in the former cases as in the latter. Again, it will hardly be contended that the plaintiff A. M. Basket is not equally in fault.

was void as to her, although the court states in the opinion that the contract was still executory.

And in James v. Roberts, 18 Ohio, 548, an injunction was granted to restrain the collection of a note and mortgage executed under threats of a groundless prosecution. The relief, however, was granted on the ground that a true public policy required that all groundless prosecutions should, if possible, be prevented, and every facility afforded the innocent to escape such a calamity, and that an innocent person might properly ask to be relieved from the consequences of a groundless charge.

And in Porter v. Jones, 6 Coldw. 313, an injunction was granted against an action at law on a note given in consideration of the compounding of a felony, on the ground that public policy would be subserved thereby, the court stating that if the contract were executed no relief would be granted, but that as it was executory only the court might, in its discretion, grant relief where the public interests would be promoted thereby.

In Whitenack v. Ten Eyck, 8 N. J. Eq. 249, an injunction against assigning or bringing suit on notes was refused on the ground that the evidence failed to show that they were given to compromise a public offense as claimed.

In Williams v. Englebrecht, 37 Ohio St. 383, the court states that an action will not lie to restrain an action of ejectment on a mortgage given to compound a felony, although the question really before the court was whether such a defense was available in an action by the mortgagee to recover possession of the land.

In Gotwalt v. Neal, 25 Md. 484, an injunction to restrain the defendant from disposing of land deeded to him by plaintiff to induce him not to institute threatened prosecutions for embezzlement, was refused on the ground that, as the parties were in pari delicto, no relief should be granted to either party.

In Allison v. Hess, 28 Iowa, 388, a deed of land was given in consideration that the grantee should give back to the grantor a lease for eight months, and not appear as a witness in a criminal prosecution against the latter's son, and it was held that an action of forcible entry and detainer under the lease would not be enjoined at the instance of the grantor, on the ground that the parties were in pari delicto, and no affirmative relief should be afforded to either.

And in Turley v. Edwards, 18 Mo. App. 676, the court states that an action cannot be maintained to enjoin the collection of notes, and enforcement of a deed of trust securing the same, given to prevent a threatened arrest and prosecution of the maker's son, if he knowingly and without compulsion entered into such transaction so as to be in part delicto.

And Adams v. Barrett, 5 Ga. 404, holds that an action of ejectment by one to whom a deed had been executed in consideration of the abandonment by the grantee of a criminal prosecution against the grantor would not be enjoined on the ground that a court of equity will not grant any relief to a party in pari delicto against the consequences of a consummated contract, the court holding that the contract was executed by the delivery of the deed.

And in Rock v. Mathews, 35 W. Va. 537, 14 L. R. A. 508, 14 S. W. 137, an injunction against a sale under a deed of trust to sureties on a postmaster's bond to enable them to settle an embezzlement by the postmaster and prevent a prosecution against him, was refused on the ground that the parties were in pari delicto, the contract was fully executed, and that in such case the court would leave the parties where it found them.

And in Cowles v. Raguet, 14 Ohio, 38, land had been sold under a second mortgage subject to a prior mortgage, but for full value. The court held that the surplus after paying the second mortgage should be used to redeem from the first mortgage, although it was void as having been given to induce the mortgagee to refrain from instituting a criminal prosecution against the mortgagor's son, even though the mortgagor objected to the redemption. In this case the court held that the mortgage was an executed, and not an executory, contract, and that a refusal to permit the redemption would amount to an injunction against an executed illegal contract; and that it is the policy of the law in cases of such contracts to leave the parties where it finds them.

In England, on the contrary, an injunction has been granted in such cases.

Thus, in Osbaldiston v. Simpson, 13 Sim. 513, 7 Jur. 736, an injunction was granted against negotiating or suing on notes given to prevent a prosecution for cheating at cards.

And in Williams v. Bayley, L. R. 1 H. L. 200, 35 L. J. Ch. N. S. 717, 14 L. T. N. S. 802, 12 Jur. N. S. 875, an injunction was granted to restrain an action on an agreement entered into by a father to prevent a prosecution of his son for forgery, although no direct threat was made and no distinct promise not to prosecute was given, the court holding that it was in effect the compounding of a felony, and that

Indeed, it appears from the written agreement executed contemporaneously with the mortgage, that he was the moving party in the transaction. The proposition was made by him, and it is perfectly clear that his guilt is equal, if not greater, than that of the defendant. Again, if it be conceded that he is entitled to relief on the ground that a part of the contract (the note) is executory, the court would only grant it upon terms; and as the mortgagee has, under the agreement, so credited the note that everything is eliminated except certain expenses and counsel fees and a pre-existing debt, leaving only a balance of about $200, it would seem very clear that the court, even if it interfered, would not place him in any better condition. The expenses and counsel fees were actually expended in furtherance of his own proposition, and it would seem a complete reversal of the maxim, In pari delicto melior est conditio defendentis, to so use the equitable power of the court as to extricate the plaintiff from the position in which he has placed himself, and put the entire expense of carrying out his own proposition upon the shoulders of the defendant. No clearer case can, in my opinfor purposes of public utility it should be stamped with invalidity.

VIII. Miscellaneous.

In McGuire v. Ashby, 1 Rand. (Va.) 76, an injunction was granted to prevent a sale under a deed of trust given for the benefit of an unchartered bank, and therefore void under the Virginia statutes. The court in this case said that a court of equity, as well as a court of law, would interfere to prohibit the effect of contracts made in violation of laws enacted for the public good.

In Carey v. Smith, 11 Ga. 539, an action to enjoin the assignee of an insolvent bank from recovering from a stockholder, who participated in the bank's doing business before its capital stock was paid in, on his liability for the redemption of bank bills issued, the court said that where parties are concerned in illegal transactions, whether mala prohibita or mala in se, courts of equity will not interfere to grant any relief.

In Cone v. Russell, 48 N. J. Eq. 208, 21 Atl. 847, an injunction was allowed against the use of a proxy irrevocable for five years to vote corporate shares of stock, executed in pursuance of an agreement by the one to whom the proxy was given to so vote the shares that one of those giving the proxy should be continually employed as manager of the corporation at a specified salary. The court in this case held that the complainant was seeking to undo, as far as possible, the wrong done by virtue of the illegal agreement, and that in such case the maxim In pari delicto potior est conditio defendentis, did not apply.

In Roberts v. Roberts, 4 Eng. Exch. Rep. 448, the court granted an injunction against an action of ejectment pending a suit to set aside the deed on the ground that it had been executed solely for the fraudulent purpose of giving the grantee, who was the grantor's brother, a colorable qualification to kill game. The injunction was subsequently dissolved and the ejectment suit tried, the case being reported in 2 Barn. & Ald. 367, resulting in a verdict in favor of the plaintiff therein on the ground that the defendant could not prove his own fraud to set aside a deed valid on its face.

In McWilliams v. Phillips, 51 Miss. 196, a note had been given to the county treasurer in consideration of a license to sell liquor in violation of a statute requiring payment in money. The maker brought an action to enjoin foreclosure of a mortgage securing the note, and an injunction was granted, the court holding on affirming the injunction order that the note was void and the parties in pari delicto. The opinion states that the complainant appeals to the court on the ground that the parties are equally guilty, and therefore the court ought not to allow one party to get the fruits of the illegal act, and the holding of the court is 48 L. & A.

that such defense may be set up against an executory illegal contract, but not where it has been fully executed.

In Yard v. Pacific Mut. Ins. Co. 10 N. J. Eq. 480, 64 Am. Dec. 467, an injunction against an action at law on bonds given for capital stock of an insurance company asked for on the ground that the company should have required payment in cash, and could not legally take individual obligations in lieu of stock and proceed with its business before the stock was actually paid in, was refused on the ground that the complainant was a party to the illegality, and could not invoke the aid of equity to relieve him from his own voluntary acts, and that public policy required the enforcement of payment rather than the contrary.

The chancellor in the court below held that a court of equity ought not to interfere with the proceedings at law to aid the complainant in the legal defense, if it was one sought to be set up against payment of the bonds.

In Ellicott v. Chamberlin, 38 N. J. Eq. 604, 48 Am. Rep. 327, an injunction against an action on a note given by a legatee to the executor in consideration of the latter's renouncing his trust was refused on the ground that, although such contract was illegal as against public policy, the defense could be set up in a court of law.

In Simpson v. Howden, 3 Myl. & C. 97, 1 Jur. 703, the court refused to entertain a suit to enjoin an action at law on an agreement by promoters of a railroad to pay a specified amount to an owner of land on the intended line in consideration of his not opposing the bill, and with the understanding that a bill to change the line should subsequently be passed, as the question as to the legality of the agreement might be decided at law.

In Evans v. Richardson, 3 Meriv. 469, an injunction against an action on a contract between a citizen of the United States and a citizen of the United States and also of England for the exportation of goods from England to America during time of war was dissolved on the ground that the contract was illegal, and that the parties should therefore be left to their remedy at law.

In Creath v. Sims, 5 How. 192, 12 L. ed. 111, and Sample v. Barnes, 14 How. 70, 14 L. ed. 330, the plaintiff asked for an injunction to stay proceedings upon a judgment on a note for the purchase price of slaves on the ground that their purchase was designed to be, and was, a fraud on the Constitution and laws of Mississippi forbidding the introduction of slaves as merchandise. The injunction was refused on the ground that the parties were in pari delicto, and must be left in the position in which they had placed themselves. Although judgments had been rendered in these cases the decisions do not seem to have been affected thereby.

J. H. H.

ion, be conceived for the application of the rule, than the present.

Furthermore, it is a fundamental principle that a court of equity never interferes where there is a complete defense at law. High, Inj. § 473. In the present case it is said that the mortgage is utterly void. If this be so, there is no occasion for equitable relief, not even on the ground that it is necessary to discover and preserve the evidence of its illegality, as the contemporaneous agreement executed by all of the parties is plenary proof of the vitiating element. 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 700. This consideration, as well as the firmly established rule, in pari delicto, etc., is also a complete bar to the prayer that the deed be canceled on the ground that it is a cloud upon plaintiff's title. Ibid. Public policy will be far better subserved by leaving the plaintiff where his illegal conduct has placed him, than by encouraging him in another attempt to violate the law by the assurance that a court of equity will always stand ready to relieve him against the consequences of his unsuccessful experiments. "The suppression of illegal contracts is far more likely, in general, to be accomplished by leaving the parties without remedy against each other, and by thus introducing a preventive check naturally connected with a want of confidence, and a sole reliance upon personal honor. And so accordingly the modern practice is established." 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 293. The case of Patterson v. Donner, 48 Cal. 369, cited in the opinion to the effect that a mortgage given to secure money upon an agreement against public policy does not divest the title, does not aid the plaintiff; for, if the title is not divested, there is certainly no occasion for resorting to a court of equity, where the illegality is evidenced, as in this case, by the contemporaneous agreement referred to. The case, however, decides the other way. It holds that the title passes, but that the performance of the illegal condition will not divest the title of the grantee. The case cited from Indiana is equally inapplicable, as it was an action at law to enforce an illegal executory agreement; and it was, of course, held that the defendant could plead the illegality of the consideration. The case from Maryland is also inapplicable, as it was an action to foreclose a mortgage given upon an illegal consideration, and the court refused relief. It is no authority that the court would have aided the mortgagor, had he been seeking a decree for cancellation. The case of Williams v. Bullmore, 33 L. J. Ch. N. S. 461, cites no authority. It seems, however, that the mortgagee was seeking foreclosure, and that this action was consolidated with one brought by the mortgagor for cancellation. Under these circumstances, there was a decree for cancellation. It is doubtful whether the court would have made such a decree had not the mortgagee been seeking foreclosure. However this may be, it cannot be regarded as sufficient authority to overturn the well-established rule embodied in the maxim which I have quoted. There is nothing in the reference to Pomeroy's Equity Jurisprudence which at all countenances relief under the circumstances of this case. The defendant has already agreed to terms as favorable as would be imposed by a court of equity. I think that A. M. Basket has no standing in a court of equity, and that under the circumstances he is entitled to no relief. To interfere in his behalf would be giving aid and comfort to the moving party in this illegal transaction.

WISCONSIN SUPREME COURT.

Theodore KERSTEN, Resp't.,
v.

City of MILWAUKEE, Impleaded, etc.,
Appt.

(.....Wis.....)

1. Assessing lots for so-called benefits in proportion to their frontage, and making the aggregate of benefits closely approximate the total cost of the work, are circumstances too significant not to arouse suspicion that benefits were not considered, although the board making the assessment say they viewed the premises and exercised their judgment,—especially when there was a deep cut opposite some of the lots, and a deep fill opposite others.
2. An assessment purporting to be made according to benefits will not be sustained, although the board making it say they viewed the premises and exercised their judgment, if the facts and circumstances show quite conclusively that they could not have exercised their judgment in arriving at the result.

3. The remedy by appeal from a wrongful assessment under the charter of Milwaukee, subchap. 7, § 11, is not exclusive of a remedy in equity, where the assessment is shown to be arbitrary and fraudulent.
4. A petition from abutting lotowners is not a necessary condition of the improvement of an alley, under the charter of Milwaukee, subchap. 7, § 6, when the council follow the technical course of procedure therein mapped out.
5. An assessment for grading an alley, based solely on the cost of the work in front of the abutting lots, without regard to benefits, and apportioned by the front foot, is arbitrary and void.
6. An injunction against a wrongful assessment for the grading and paving of an alley, where the work has been legally authorized, should not include an order for the restoration of the alley to its original condition, but should extend only to a stay of proceedings under the invalid assessment, and under Rev. Stat. 1898, § 1210c, the court may direct a reassessment.

NOTE.—As to necessity of special benefits to sustain local assessments, see Asberry v. Roanoke (Va.) 42 L. R. A. 636, and note; Detroit v. Chapin (Mich.) 42 L. R. A. 638; Weed v. 48 L. R. A.

Boston (Mass.) 42 L. R. A. 642; Rolph v. Fargo (N. D.) 42 L. R. A. 646; Hutcheson v. Storie (Tex.) 45 L. R. A. 289; and Schroder v. Overman (Ohio) 47 L. R. A. 156.

(February 2, 1900.)

APPEAL by defendant city from a judgment of the Superior Court for Milwaukee County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to enjoin the grading of an alley in the rear of plaintiff's property. Reversed.

Statement by Bardeen, J.:

This action was brought by the plaintiff to restrain the city of Milwaukee and its contractors from grading an alley at the rear of his lot in Muskego Avenue Heights, in the eleventh ward of the city, said lot being described as "lot 15 of block 1," and has a frontage on the alley of 28.23 feet. The alley runs south from Burnham street to a point about 110 feet from the south line of the block, and then turns west, and opens into Eighteenth avenue. A profile of the alley shows that before it was improved the surface of the ground was very irregular, there being hills and depressions to such an extent as to render it impassable. Towards the north end was a hill, and near the turn where plaintiff's lot was situated there was a depression requiring a fill of several feet. The grade of the alley was duly fixed and established by an ordinance of the common council on June 8, 1896. On August 3, 1896, the board of public works recommended to the council that this alley be graded and paved from a point 235 feet south of the south line of Burnham street to its western terminus on Eighteenth avenue, and made the proper estimate of cost. On the same day a resolution was introduced in the council, which recited that it was necessary for the public interests to grade and pave this alley, for the reason that it was "inadequate, inconvenient, and unsafe for the public use thereof, for the passage of foot passengers and vehicles, and for the drainage of water therefrom," and that it was necessary to cause said work to be done without a petition therefor from the owners of the property fronting thereon, for the reason that they had negligently failed to make said alley "in a safe and suitable condition for public use, and had negligently failed to present to this common council a lawful petition therefor;" and the board was authorized to have the work done in accordance with their recommendation. The resolution was countersigned by the city comptroller, and referred to a committee on August 3, who recommended its adoption. It was again referred to a special committee on August 17, who likewise recommended its adoption, and was duly adopted by the council at a meeting held on August 31, 1896. No petition for the work was ever presented to the council. After the adoption of this resolution, the board of public works made an assessment of benefits against the adjoining lots, which the court finds was arbitrary and fraudulent, for the reason that the board did not consider the benefit to the owners of adjoining property, and did not consider, with reference to the lots, the injury which might result to the owners by reason of said work, but made an arbitrary assessment, based solely upon the cost of the work in front or abutting upon said lots, respectively, at the uniform rate of $1 per foot front. Bids were duly called for, and on June 11, 1897, the board entered into a contract for doing the work with the defendants Riemer and Miller. On the following day the contractors commenced their work. This action was commenced, and an injunction sought, which was denied by the court. During the pendency of the suit the work proceeded, and earth was filled in at the rear of plaintiff's lot from 4 to 6 feet deep. In doing the work the contractors placed earth, which extended upon the plaintiff's lot, for the lateral support of the embankment in the alley, from 11 inches to 13 feet. A fence at the rear of the lot was broken down, and access to a watercloset at the rear end of the lot was obstructed. The court found that the plaintiff's property had been damaged to the extent of $500, and that he had sustained no benefits therefrom; that all of the lots on the east side of the alley running north and south were similarly affected and encroached upon, and no damages in any instance had been awarded. The maps and profiles in evidence show quite a large hill at the north end of the proposed improvement, and lesser hills and depressions along the line of the alley, so that along some of the lots there would be a cut of considerable depth, and others a fill of several feet. The court found, as conclusions of law, that the assessment of benefits made by the board of public works was in violation of the charter of the city, a fraud upon plaintiff, and consequently void; that the work done was performed without lawful authority, and created an obstruction in the alley, and was a nuisance; that the taking of plaintiff's property for the purpose of grading the alley was without lawful authority, and constituted a continuing trespass. A judgment for plaintiff was entered in substance as follows: (1) That the city and its contractors and servants be perpetually enjoined from filling, paving, or otherwise obstructing the alley under the resolution of the council or assessment of benefits mentioned. (2) That the same parties be perpetually enjoined from depositing earth or other materials upon plaintiff's lot, or otherwise encroaching thereon. (3) That the city and its contractors be required to restore said alley for its entire length, covered by the resolution for grading, "to its original grade and condition as the same was immediately prior to the grading, filling, and paving thereof," by removing therefrom the earth, etc., deposited thereon in doing such work. (4) That the city and its contractors be required to restore the plaintiff's premises to their original condition they were in prior to said work. (5) That the city be restrained from issuing any certificates to the contractors by reason of the assessment of benefits made by the board herein referred to. (6) That the plaintiff recover costs. Due exceptions to the findings were filed, and the city appeals from those portions of the judgment herein numbered 1 and 3.

48 L. R. A.

Messrs. Carl Runge and A. B. May, for appellant:

The power to establish grades of alleys and streets must be exclusive in the common council.

Brandt v. Milwaukee, 69 Wis. 386, 34 N. W. 246.

Of the necessity or expediency of its exercise, the governing body of the corporation, and not the court, is the judge.

2 Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. § 686.

Where public safety and public convenience require the street to be graded to render it safe and suitable for public use, the city is not liable for damages unless the statute expressly provides for them.

Wallich v. Manitowoc, 57 Wis. 9, 14 N. W. 812; Smith v. Eau Claire, 78 Wis. 457, 47 N. W. 830.

The city is not liable for damages if the street be embanked or raised in reducing it to the grade line, so as to cut off or render difficult of access adjacent property.

2 Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. § 990; O'Connor v. Pittsburgh, 18 Pa. 187.

All the proceedings required by the charter were complied with for the grading of the alley in question.

All of the board were present to view the premises, and they assessed the benefits and damages after such view, and the assessment was the judgment of the three commissioners, and not reviewable here.

Johnson v. Milwaukee, 40 Wis. 324.

The assessment of damages by the board was of a quasi-judicial nature, involving the exercise of deliberate judgment and large discretion, and the honest and careful exercise of such judgment and discretion is not subject to revision by the court except on appeal.—in this case provided by charter.

15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 1148; Fath v. Koepfel, 72 Wis. 289, 39 N. W. 539.

The grading and paving were not performed without lawful authority, and as performed do not create and constitute an obstruction, and the said alley is not a nuisance.

Colclough v. Milwaukee, 92 Wis. 188, 65 N. W. 1039; Smith v. Eau Claire, 78 Wis. 457, 47 N. W. 830.

If the assessment of damages by the board was not satisfactory to respondent, he had a remedy under the provisions of the charter by appeal, and is not entitled to an injunction.

Nichols v. Salem, 14 Gray, 490; Reckner v. Warner, 22 Ohio St. 275.

On petition for rehearing.

Where a litigant makes his choice of remedies, he is bound by that choice, and cannot change a suit in equity to one at law or vice versa.

Fraserich v. Flieth, 64 Wis. 185, 25 N. W. 48 L. R. A.

28; Brothers v. Williams, 65 Wis. 401, 27 N. W. 157; Fischer v. Laack, 76 Wis. 314, 45 N. W. 104.

If the respondent is not entitled to any damages under the charter, then he is clearly not entitled to any damages in any court or in any proceeding.

The mere grading of the alley is not a taking of respondent's land, and the city is not liable for the consequential damages, there being no provision in the charter for the payment of damages of that kind.

Alexander v. Milwaukee, 16 Wis. 247; Harrison v. Milwaukee County Supers. 51 Wis. 663, 8 N. W. 731; Smith v. Eau Claire, 78 Wis. 459, 47 N. W. 830; Colclough v. Milwaukee, 92 Wis. 185, 65 N. W. 1039.

Mr. Edgar L. Wood, for respondent:

The cost of raising or lowering damaged premises to correspond with the altered grade of a public highway is an element of damage and proper to be included, but is not the sole test or evidence of the damage sustained.

Meinzer v. Racine, 74 Wis. 171, 42 N. W. 230.

The alleged assessment of benefits and damages made by the board of public works comes within the repeated condemnation of this court, and is void, and all subsequent proceedings founded upon it are likewise invalidated by it.

Liebermann v. Milwaukee, 89 Wis. 346, 61 N. W. 1112; Brown v. Oneida County, 103 Wis. 149, 79 N. W. 216.

The honest opinion and judgment of assessors, boards of review, and other taxing officers is conclusive upon the question of valuation, benefits, and damages; but where the inequalities or overvaluations are shown to be so great as to be evidence of bad faith or failure to exercise judgment, and are shown to be grossly unfair and unequal, and fail to take into consideration all of the requirements of the law and the charter, and assess property on any other rule than that of benefits, taking into consideration the actual damages, they will be set aside as void by a court of equity; and such proceedings will be held to a strict compliance with the law on all points affecting the substantial justice of such assessment.

Pittelkow v. Milwaukee, 94 Wis. 651, 69 N. W. 803; Boyd v. Milwaukee, 92 Wis. 458, 66 N. W. 603; Hayes v. Douglas County, 92 Wis. 441, 31 L. R. A. 213, 65 N. W. 482; Dietz v. Neenah, 91 Wis. 426, 64 N. W. 299; Liebermann v. Milwaukee, 89 Wis. 346, 61 N. W. 1112; Wright v. Forrestal, 65 Wis. 341, 27 N. W. 52; Watkins v. Milwaukee, 52 Wis. 101, 8 N. W. 823; Watkins v. Zwietusch, 47 Wis. 513, 3 N. W. 35; Johnson v. Milwaukee, 40 Wis. 315; Dean v. Borchsenius, 30 Wis. 236; Dean v. Charlton, 27 Wis. 522; Foot v. Milwaukee, 18 Wis. 275.

The charge of special assessments for local improvements against adjacent property can be sustained as a lawful exercise of the power of taxation only when such assessment is made and levied upon the basis of benefits actually received from such improvement by the property assessed.

Norwood v. Baker, 172 U. S. 269, 43 L. ed. 443, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 187; Weed v. Boston, 172 Mass. 28, 42 L. R. A. 642, 51 N. E. 204; Detroit v. Judge of Recorder's Ct. 112 Mich. 588, sub nom. Detroit v. Chapin, 42 L. R. A. 638, 71 N. W. 149; Asberry v. Roanoke, 91 Va. 562, 42 L. R. A. 636, 22 S. E. 360.

The board did not base their conclusion upon the question of increase or decrease in the value of the property, but solely upon an arbitrary assumption that the construction of the alley was a benefit to the amount of $1 per running foot.

Drummond v. Eau Claire, 85 Wis. 563, 55 N. W. 1028.

Where the actual damages are so grossly disproportionate to the findings of the board of public works as to leave no inference but that the action of the board, while an apparent compliance with the charter provision, was, in fact, an actual disregard of such rule,—a total failure to exercise any judgment in the premises,—it is such a substantial noncompliance with the charter provision as to render their acts wholly void and nugatory.

Brown v. Oneida County, 103 Wis. 149, 79 N. W. 220; Boyd v. Milwaukee, 92 Wis. 458, 66 N. W. 603; Dietz v. Neenah, 91 Wis. 426, 64 N. W. 299; Liebermann v. Milwaukee, 89 Wis. 346, 61 N. W. 1112; Johnson v. Milwaukee, 40 Wis. 315.

The estimate of cost, and the certificate against the plaintiff's property, include the cost and expense of the filling in upon the plaintiff's own lot to furnish lateral support for the alley; and the entire assessment, being based upon a foot-front rule including the entire assessment as to all the lots similarly situated, includes this unlawful and unauthorized element, which so involves the entire assessment as to vitiate the whole.

Boyd v. Milwaukee, 92 Wis. 458, 66 N. W. 603.

The appropriation of the plaintiff's property and that of the adjoining owners to furnish lateral support for this embankment was without authority of law, and was a taking of private property for public use without a pretense of compensation thereof, or proceedings for the condemnation thereof, or the consent of the owner.

Harrison v. Milwaukee County Supers. 51 Wis. 645, 8 N. W. 731; Vanderlip v. Grand Rapids, 73 Mich. 522, 3 L. R. A. 247, 41 N. W. 677; Smith v. Eau Claire, 78 Wis. 461, 47 N. W. 830.

The proceedings under which the grading and paving of the alley was to be done being void, the plaintiff was not confined to the charter remedy of appeal from the assessment of the board of public works as approved by the common council, but was entitled to proceed by injunction to restrain the doing of the work and the issuance of the certificate therefor against his property.

Crossett v. Janesville, 28 Wis. 426; Wilson v. Mineral Point, 39 Wis. 160; Watkins v. Milwaukee, 55 Wis. 338, 13 N. W. 222; Meinzer v. Racine, 68 Wis. 244, 32 N. W. 139; 70 Wis. 566, 36 N. W. 260; 74 Wis. 166, 42 48 L. R. A.

N. W. 230; Boyd v. Milwaukee, 92 Wis. 458, 66 N. W. 603; Pittelkow v. Milwaukee, 94 Wis. 656, 69 N. W. 803.

The unauthorized grading and filling of the alley, whether abutting upon the plaintiff's property or otherwise, constitute a threatened nuisance, properly restrainable by injunction.

Buchner v. Chicago, M. & N. W. R. Co. 60 Wis. 273, 19 N. W. 56; Oshkosh v. Milwaukee & L. W. R. Co. 74 Wis. 534, 43 N. W. 489.

On petition for rehearing.

It is res judicata that the plaintiff has sustained great damages by grading done by the city, without lawful authority, upon the alley adjoining his property.

In such case the plaintiff may recover his full damages in an action brought for that purpose.

Drummond v. Eau Claire, 85 Wis. 560, 55 N. W. 1028; 79 Wis. 102, 48 N. W. 244; Pittelkow v. Milwaukee, 94 Wis. 656, 69 N. W. 803; Addy v. Janesville, 70 Wis. 405, 35 N. W. 931; Meinzer v. Racine, 68 Wis. 245, 32 N. W. 139; 70 Wis. 566, 36 N. W. 260; Dore v. Milwaukee, 42 Wis. 118; Crossett v. Janesville, 28 Wis. 426; Owens v. Milwaukee, 47 Wis. 461, 3 N. W. 3; Smith v. Eau Claire, 78 Wis. 463, 47 N. W. 830.

If the plaintiff is entitled to damages, ought not the court in this action to award them, as found, and end the litigation?

Pinkum v. Eau Claire, 81 Wis. 310, 51 N. W. 550; Turner v. Pierce, 34 Wis. 658.

Bardeen, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The court has found that the assessment made by the board of public works was arbitrary, and based solely upon the cost of the work in front of the abutting lots. A similar assessment was before this court for review in the case of Liebermann v. Milwaukee, 89 Wis. 336, 61 N. W. 1112. The facts are not the same, but the form of the assessment in that case varies in no material respect from the one under consideration. There it was said that the assessment was void on its face for a failure to show affirmatively that it was made in conformity with the requirement of the charter. But we are not to dispose of this assessment by what alone appears upon the face of the proceedings, as in Hennessy v. Douglas County, 99 Wis. 129, 74 N. W. 983. With the accompanying facts and circumstances, it shows quite conclusively that the board could not have exercised their judgment in arriving at a result. That this assessment of benefits to each of the adjoining lots should correspond in each case to as many dollars as the abutting lot had feet of frontage, and that the aggregate of benefits should very closely approximate the total cost of the work, are circumstances too significant not to arouse suspicion. Especially is this so when it is shown that opposite some of the lots there was a deep cut and others a deep fill. It is not enough for the board to say that they viewed the premises, and exercised their judgment, if the facts negative that assertion. Here the facts cry out so loudly against the conclusion reached that we find no difficulty in agreeing with the court's estimate of the board's procedure. Hayes v. Douglas County, 92 Wis. 429, 31 L. R. A. 213, 65 N. W. 482. But we cannot, by any means, agree with the court's judgment. It seems to be conceded that the city has, under its charter, ample power to establish the grade of alleys, and that it did, on May 27, 1896, duly adopt and pass an ordinance fixing and establishing the grade of the alley in question. This was the initial step, without which any attempt to improve the alley would have been without foundation. In following out the line of procedure indicated by § 6 of subchapter 7 of the charter, the board of public works made the proper estimate of the cost of the work proposed to be done, and made the usual recommendation to the council. Thereupon a resolution was introduced in the council, which declared that it was necessary to grade and pave such portion of this alley, for the reason that it was inadequate, inconvenient, and unsafe for public use, and for the drainage of water therefrom; and that it was necessary to cause said work to be done without a petition from the abutting owners, for the reason that such owners had failed to make the alley in a suitable condition for public use. This resolution was first referred to the local committee of the eleventh ward,—being the ward where the alley was located,—who recommended that it be adopted. It was then referred to a special committee of five members, no one of whom was a resident of said ward, who likewise reported recommending its adoption. The resolution was presented to the council August 3, and passed and adopted by the council on August 31 by a vote of thirty-nine members in the affirmative. This was, as we regard it, a proper compliance with the charter requirements. Boyd v. Milwaukee, 92 Wis. 456, 66 N. W. 603. The contention that § 6 does not permit the improvement of an alley without a petition from abutting lot-owners is altogether too technical to receive approval. A fair construction of the rather indefinite provisions of that section has led us to the conclusion that such grading may be done without petition, when the council follow, as they did in this case, the technical course of procedure therein mapped out. The initial steps leading up to the improvement of this alley having been taken in conformity to the charter requirements, the city was invested with jurisdiction to proceed. The next step—the assessment of benefits and damages—was, as we have seen, wrongfully taken, and rendered subsequent action void. Section 11 of subchapter 7 provides that the owner of any lot who feels himself aggrieved by any assessment might appeal to the circuit court, and have his grievance therein determined; and it is urged that this gives him an ample and exclusive remedy. In cases where the initial steps have been such as to give the city jurisdiction to proceed, this argument appeals to us with considerable force; but this court, having held in a long line of decisions that the remedy by appeal is not exclusive where the assessment is shown to be arbitrary and fraudulent, we feel compelled to follow them. Harrison v. Milwaukee, 49 Wis. 247, 5 N. W. 326; Watkins v. Milwaukee, 52 Wis. 98, 8 N. W. 823; Liebertmann v. Milwaukee, 89 Wis. 336, 61 N. W. 1112. Admitting that plaintiff may maintain a standing in a court of equity, the trial court should have considered and applied a very important and salutary provision of law, apparently enacted to cover just such cases as this. We refer to § 1210a, Rev. Stat. 1898. This section provides that in actions of this kind, if the court shall determine that such an assessment is invalid by reason of a defective assessment of benefits and damages, it shall stay proceedings in such action until a new assessment therefor be made, and thereupon the proper city authorities shall proceed to make a new assessment, as is required by law in the case of such original assessment. It also gives the plaintiff the right to contest such new assessment, and points out the method of procedure. When the proper assessment is finally determined, the court shall make an order requiring the plaintiff to pay the same as a condition of judgment. The fact that the plaintiff seeks relief for the invasion of his premises need not interfere with the complete application of this statute to the situation. It being found that the city has the right to grade the alley, a court of equity may readily adjust and fix the rights of the parties as to the matters not connected with the reassessment, and give the appropriate relief, and still obey the statute in regard to the procedure for reassessment. Independent of this statute, we cannot quite understand how a court of equity could have felt warranted in requiring the defendants to restore the alley to its original condition. The intrusion upon plaintiff's lot by the city and its contractors was wholly unwarranted, as they have admitted by not appealing from that portion of the judgment requiring them to restore his premises to their original condition. The only other question of which the plaintiff has any right to complain is that a proper assessment of benefits has not been made. Other people besides plaintiff have rights in this alley, and, before the court should have required a restoration to the original condition, some proof as to the situation should have been taken. It is fairly inferable from the case that the original condition was unsafe and dangerous. Suppose it was shown that all the other owners had acquiesced in the change, and had paid their assessment of benefits, would a court of equity be warranted in making a judgment which seriously interfered with their rights, and did not benefit the plaintiff? A mere statement of the query would seem to furnish an answer to it. The judgment in this regard was wholly unwarranted under any view of the case.

We summarize our conclusion as follows: That the city has the power to and has properly established the grade of this alley; that the action of the council in directing the grading and paving of the alley, under the proofs offered, was proper and legal; that the assessment made by the board of public works was arbitrary and illegal; that the situation presented is such that the court should order a stay of proceedings in so far as relates to the assessment of damages and benefits for the improvement of the alley, and direct a reassessment and proceedings, under § 1210e, Rev. Stat. 1898.

To this end, those portions of the judgment appealed from are reversed, with costs, and the cause is remanded for further proceedings in accordance with this opinion.

So ordered.

Rehearing denied March 20, 1900.

Ludwig FRANKE et al., Respts.,

v.

Albert MANN et al., Appts.

(.....Wis.....)

1. Prejudicial error must be made affirmatively to appear in order to cause the reversal of a judgment.
2. Notice of an attempt to organize a church, and of the time and place of forming the organization, as required by Rev. Stat. § 1990, is not necessary where the incorporators are not members of a religious organization, but desire to organize a corporation in connection with a church of their own peculiar tenets to be associated therewith.
3. A religious corporation de facto is created where an attempt in good faith is made to comply with a statute which authorizes the formation of such corporation, articles are drawn and signed in form as the statute requires, except as to the acknowledgment, and they are recorded, the corporation organized, and the right to exercise the franchise of being a corporation asserted for several years.
4. A majority of the members of a church corporation organized as a body of Christian believers of a particular sect cannot devote its property to a use inconsistent with the purposes of the corporation by employing a pastor whose teachings are inconsistent with those of the sect to which the church belongs.

(February 27, 1900.)

A PPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Lafayette County in favor of plaintiffs in a proceeding brought to prevent defendants from perverting property of a religious society. Affirmed.

NOTE.—As to right of a majority of the members of a religious organization to divert the church property to the support of new and different doctrines, see Finley v. Brent (Va.) 11 L. R. A. 214; Mt. Zion Baptist Church v. Whitmore (Iowa) 13 L. R. A. 198; Smith v. Pedigo (Ind.) 19 L. R. A. 433; Schlichter v. Kelter (Pa.) 22 L. R. A. 161; Bear v. Heasley (Mich.) 24 L. R. A. 615; Philo-
48 L. R. A.

Statement by Marshall, J.:

Equitable action to prevent members of a religious corporation from perverting the use of its property.

The issues made by the complaint were decided by the trial court substantially as follows:

(1) May 13, 1888, for some years theretofore, and ever since, the German Evangelical Synod of North America has existed in Wisconsin and other states as a religious corporation separate and distinct from all others, and has been and is made up of people whose beliefs on religious and church questions differ materially from those of any other church or sect, particularly from the belief of the members of the Lutheran or German Lutheran Church.

(2) At the time stated Wisconsin was a district of such synod, having a form of government binding the different church societies composing it to the distinct belief of the sect known as the "German Evangelical Church."

(3) May 13th, aforesaid, at the town of Wayne, Lafayette county, Wisconsin, several persons named in the complaint, competent for the purpose, members of the German Evangelical Church and its Synod of North America, for the purpose of forming a religious society of such sect and synod, made a certificate of organization for a church corporation, in good faith, intending to comply with the laws of this state on that subject, but failed to have the execution of such certificate acknowledged, though they caused the same to be recorded in the office of the register of deeds of Lafayette county, May 29, 1888, and thereafter, on May 4, 1897, seven of the fifteen signers of the certificate duly acknowledged the same and caused the certificate thereof to be recorded in the margin of the record of the articles.

(4) The day the articles of organization were signed the signers held their first meeting and duly elected trustees, and thereafter a corporate organization was maintained, the right to be a corporation asserted, and the corporate franchise accordingly used down to the time of the commencement of this action, the defendants, except the defendant Schlichting, being then the trustees.

(5) The corporation, till 1898, submitted to the government and direction of the German Evangelical Synod of North America, and recognized its authority as a superior governing power in all respects according to the ecclesiastical law of the synod. The Wayne Church Society, together with two other such organizations, was presided over during the time mentioned by ministers of the German Evangelical Church, designated for that purpose by the synod of the sect for math College v. Wyatt (Or.) 26 L. R. A. 68; Krecker v. Shirey (Pa.) 29 L. R. A. 476; Park v. Champlin (Iowa) 31 L. R. A. 141; and Smith v. Pedigo (Ind.) 32 L. R. A. 838.

As to power of local church society to withdraw from the general body of the church, see Fuchs v. Meisel (Mich.) 32 L. R. A. 92, and note.

North America, and took part, in the manner provided by the rules of the sect, in the district conferences and conventions of the church for the district of Wisconsin.

(6) Substantially all members of the society, including plaintiffs and defendants, signed their names in a book kept for that purpose, as did the members of the other churches of the sect presided over by the same minister, as aforesaid, purporting thereby to adopt the synodical rules and regulations prescribed for such purposes. Such rules were not formally adopted by a vote of the members of the society or by any formal corporate act. The individual members of the society signed the book at the request of the minister as and for a submission of the society to the rules, and such rules were submitted to by the society and the members thereof up to about the year 1896.

(7) The subordinate organizations of the German Evangelical Synod of North America are bound by its constitution and system of government to submit thereto in all matters, including the religious belief of the church and its forms and ceremonies, and not to employ a pastor other than a member of the German Evangelical Church, ordained by the synod of such church for North America, holding its certificate of good character and behavior, and who shall subscribe a written promise to be faithful to the rules and regulations of such society and synod.

(8) The society built a church edifice on lands described in the complaint, donated to the society for that purpose by Wilhelm Taufmann, one of the plaintiffs. The conveyance was made in form to the trustees of the German Evangelical St. Paul's Society of the Town of Wayne, Lafayette county, Wisconsin, for the use of such society. It was accepted by the corporation with knowledge of its provisions by substantially all the members of the society, and without objection as to the use declared. There was some talk by individual members of the church about the property being made free to all sects except Roman Catholics, but that was never favored by the society as such.

(9) The church building was paid for by money contributed by its members, was duly dedicated as property of a society of the German Evangelical Synod of North America, and was used in harmony therewith till some time in 1896, when, on account of difficulty about obtaining a minister to serve the society, defendant Schlichting, a minister of the Lutheran Church and sect, materially different in its religious belief and distinct from that of the Wayne society, was employed to serve it for one year, at the end of which period a majority of the members of the society again employed Schlichting, the minority protesting, on the ground that they desired and were entitled to have a minister in harmony with the society as a member of the German Evangelical Church Synod of North America. Pursuant to such employment, notwithstanding such protest, Schlichting served the society till interfered with by the temporary injunction granted in this action, and in so doing confined his ministrations in harmony with the sect to which he belonged, the German Lutheran Church, preaching the belief of such sect, which, as before indicated, was materially out of harmony with the religious belief of the German Evangelical Church of the Synod of North America, and assumed the right to, and did, prevent the use of the church edifice by a minister of the society to which the church belonged.

On such facts the court concluded:

(1) The German Evangelical St. Paul's Society of the Town of Wayne, Lafayette county, Wisconsin, since May, 1888, has been a church corporation under the laws of this state, subject to the system of church government of the German Evangelical Synod of North America.

(2) The title to the church edifice and property described in the complaint is held in trust by the trustees of the Wayne society, for the use of such society as an organization of the German Evangelical Synod of North America, and for the exclusive use of such society in harmony with the religious views of the German Evangelical Church and such synod of such sect.

(3) Defendants having perverted the property of such society from its legitimate use, plaintiffs, though constituting a minority of the members of the society, have a right to such redress as will prevent the further perversion of its property, and as will compel the use of such property in conformity with the religious belief of the German Evangelical Church, and the system of government of the synod of such church for the district in which the society is located.

(4) Plaintiffs are entitled to judgment accordingly and as prayed for in the complaint.

Judgment was rendered in accordance with the aforesaid conclusions, from which this appeal was taken.

Messrs. Wilson & Martin for appellants.

Messrs. Orton & Osborn and Thomas Luchsinger, for respondents:

There are no exceptions to the facts or conclusions of law by the circuit court which can be considered on this appeal, for the reason that such exceptions are not incorporated in the bill of exceptions.

Cramer v. Hanaford, 53 Wis. 85, 10 N. W. 15; Evenson v. Bates, 58 Wis. 24, 15 N. W. 837; Treloar v. Osborne, 98 Wis. 461, 74 N. W. 99; Newton v. Williams, 94 Wis. 222, 68 N. W. 990.

This religious society was legally incorporated, notwithstanding the articles of association were not acknowledged.

St. Jacob's Lutheran Church v. Bly, 73 N. Y. 323; Fadness v. Braunborg, 73 Wis. 257, 41 N. W. 84.

But, if never a corporation de jure, it was a corporation de facto.

Methodist Episcopal Union Church v. Pickett, 10 N. Y. 482; Supreme Court of I. O. of F. v. Supreme Court of U. O. of F. 94 Wis. 234, 68 N. W. 1011; Beach, Priv. Corp. §§ 13, 14; 2 Morawetz, Priv. Corp. § 745; Ashland v. Wheeler, 88 Wis. 617, 60 N. W. 818; Finnegan v. Noerenberg, 52 Minn. 239, 18 L. R. A. 778, 53 N. W. 1150; 7 Thomp. Corp. § 8207; Re Gibbs's Estate, 157 Pa. 59, 22 L. R. A. 276, 27 Atl. 383; Eaton v. Walker, 76 Mich. 579, 6 L. R. A. 102, 43 N. W. 638; Stout v. Zulick, 48 N. J. L. 599, 7 Atl. 362; Baker v. Neff, 73 Ind. 68; Williamson v. Kokomo Bldg. & Loan Fund Assn. 89 Ind. 389; Renwick v. Hall, 84 Ill. 163.

A substantial compliance with the law is not essential to a de facto corporation. That makes a corporation de jure.

7 Thomp. Corp. § 8207; Finnegan v. Noerenberg, 52 Minn. 239, 18 L. R. A. 778, 53 N. W. 1150.

As to the qualifications, required by the statute, of corporators, to wit,—that they be persons over twenty-one years of age, and not members of any religious congregation at the time, no proof is required, the articles of incorporation themselves being presumptive evidence of the existence of such qualifications.

Methodist Episcopal Union Church v. Pickett, 19 N. Y. 482.

When property and its uses are involved, courts of equity will consider theological questions, to the end that property acquired for the religious uses of any church, sect, or denomination of Christians may be sacredly preserved for such particular uses and purposes, and that it shall not be perverted to other uses, even by a majority of the members of the organization.

Fadness v. Braunborg, 73 Wis. 257, 41 N. W. 84; Miller v. Gable, 2 Denio, 492; Krecker v. Shirey, 163 Pa. 534, 29 L. R. A. 476, 30 Atl. 440; Ferraria v. Vasconcellos, 31 Ill. 54; Mount Zion Baptist Church v. Whitmore, 83 Iowa, 138, 13 L. R. A. 198, 49 N. W. 81; White Lick Quarterly Meeting of Friends v. White Lick Quarterly Meeting of Friends, 89 Ind. 136; White v. Rice, 112 Mich. 403, 70 N. W. 1024; Watson v. Jones, 13 Wall. 679, 20 L. ed. 666; Lamb v. Cain, 129 Ind. 486, 14 L. R. A. 518, 29 N. E. 13; Sohnorr's Appeal, 67 Pa. 138, 5 Am. Rep. 415; Stebbins v. Jennings, 10 Pick. 171; Baker v. Pales, 16 Mass. 503; Kniskern v. Lutheran Churches of St. John & St. Peter, 1 Sandf. Ch. 439; Smith v. Pedigo, 145 Ind. 361, 19 L. R. A. 433, 33 N. E. 777, 44 N. E. 363; Hale v. Everett, 53 N. H. 9, 16 Am. Rep. 82; Roshi's Appeal, 69 Pa. 462, 8 Am. Rep. 275.

The property acquired by the trustees of a religious society not incorporated is bound by the uses and practices of such unincorporated society equally as if it were incorporated.

Fuchs v. Meissl, 102 Mich. 357, 32 L. R. A. 92, 60 N. W. 773; Lynd v. Menzies, 33 N. J. L. 164; Auracher v. Yergler, 90 Iowa, 558, 58 N. W. 893; Schweiker v. Husser, 146 Ill. 399, 34 N. E. 1022; Russie v. Brazzell, 128 Mo. 93, 30 S. W. 526; Schlichter v. Keiler, 156 Pa. 119, 22 L. R. A. 161, 27 Atl. 46.

Marshall, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Thirty-six exceptions were filed to the finding—

ings of fact, but counsel for appellants made no specific assignment of error in regard to such findings in accordance with the rules and settled practice of the court. We find in counsel's brief a statement of their claim in a general way, and a statement that the court erred in so far as the findings and conclusions of law are inconsistent with such view, and on that we are referred to the pages of the printed case where the findings and conclusions of law may be found, and in like manner to the exceptions thereto, particularly to twelve of such exceptions by their numbers. No attempt was made by counsel in their brief to point out evidence that is contrary to the findings or want of evidence to support them, but it is suggested that we carefully study the printed case of 143 pages, with a view of discovering whether any of the exceptions were well taken or not. With such a presentation of the appeal, judicial duty requires only a sufficient examination of the case to determine whether the findings and pleadings support the judgment. Error is presumed against on appeal, and unless, as to the facts at least, that is met by some distinct assignment of error or errors, and some attempt to discuss such assignments and to point out evidence or want of evidence to warrant them or some of them, it will prevail. The general rule is that a judgment on appeal will be affirmed, unless prejudicial error not only exist, but be made to affirmatively appear. Eaton v. Patchin, 20 Wis. 486; Milwaukee Harvester Co. v. Teasdale, 91 Wis. 59, 64 N. W. 422; Mear v. Beebe, 102 Wis. 342, 78 N. W. 601; Alexander v. Irwin, 20 Neb. 204, 29 N. W. 385; Pottawattamie County v. Marshall County, 56 Iowa, 410, 9 N. W. 326; McVey v. Johnson, 75 Iowa, 165, 39 N. W. 249; Papke v. Papke, 30 Minn. 260, 15 N. W. 117. That rule means more than that error may be discovered in the record. It requires that the person alleging error must point it out and make it affirmatively appear in accordance with the rules and practice of the court. That requires error to be definitely assigned and a good-faith attempt made to present it to the court for consideration; and where the claim is that a finding of fact is contrary to the evidence, that the evidence, or want of evidence, bearing on the question, be brought to the attention of the court.

From the foregoing it is plain that this court would be justified in disregarding all contentions of the appellants' counsel that the findings of fact are contrary to the evidence. However, the labor put upon the case indicates so clearly that the appeal was taken in good faith, and that the omission to comply with the rules and practice governing the matter was not intentional, that the neglect may be easily excused in the interest of justice, particularly to the parties whose rights are involved. That has been done, and the record examined carefully, and with more labor than would have been necessary, had the evidence or want of evidence relied upon been definitely pointed out.

We are unable to discover any substantial conflict in the evidence on many of the material points, and no clear preponderance of evidence against any of the facts found. The evidence appears to be all one way that the church corporation was formed for the purposes of a religious sect known as the "German Evangelical Church," under the jurisdiction and subject to the government of the established body of that church in this country, and in the Wisconsin district thereof, known as the "German Evangelical Synod of North America;" that such sect has distinguishing characteristics of a material character, wherein it differs from all other churches, particularly from the German Lutheran Church, both as regards religious belief and church organization and government; that the land upon which the church edifice was constructed was deeded to the corporation in trust for its use in harmony with the purposes of the organization, and none other; that the edifice was erected and paid for with the same view, and that it was dedicated to religious uses according to the religious belief, customs, and government of the German Evangelical Church, particularly of the synod of such church of North America; that the church society was conducted, and its property used, in strict harmony with the purposes of its organization till a short time before the commencement of this action; that the defendants perverted the property of the society to purposes foreign to the legitimate use thereof, and that there was no practicable way of redressing the wrong to the corporation and the minority of its members, except by invoking the power of the court.

It is said that when the deed of the land on which the church edifice stands was delivered to the society, the grantor promised that it should be free, except to Roman Catholics, and that subscriptions were made to aid in the construction of the edifice with the same view. Further, that the persons who organized the church society were not members of the German Evangelical Church, but were members of the German Lutheran Church. We fail to find evidence in the record to sustain such claims. True, as the court found, there was some talk by members of the church society, respecting the church edifice being free to all sects except Roman Catholics, but the deed was in fact made and delivered to the society for the purposes of its organization, indicated in its articles of organization, and the society accepted it for that use. That fixed the status of the property irrevocably, as regards the power of the corporation over it, acting by defendants, whether by the will of a part or all of its members. Fodness v. Braunborg, 73 Wis. 257, 41 N. W. 84; McBride v. Porter, 17 Iowa, 203; Sutter v. First Reformed Dutch Church, 42 Pa. 503; Lawson v. Kolbenson, 61 Ill. 405. The rule in that regard, as it prevails generally, was stated in McBride v. Porter, 17 Iowa, 203, in the following language: "The grantees took the title, therefore, subject to this limitation, and it is not in the rightful power of the minority, or of the majority, or even of the whole congregation, to divert the property from the use and trust for and with which it was thus conveyed. The parties receiving the title took the same subject to the trust and it is peculiarly within the province of a court of equity to enforce the trust, and, in its enforcement, the court will look to the trust specified and intended, and must disregard all questions as to majorities or as to religious creeds and beliefs except so far as shall be necessary to ascertain the trust intended and the application of the property accordingly."

It is further suggested that no notice was given of the purpose to organize a church corporation May 13, 1888, when the articles of organization were signed, as required by § 1990, Rev. Stat., hence that such articles are void, and the findings of fact inconsistent with that view contrary to the evidence. To that there are at least two conclusive answers. Where incorporators are not members of a religious organization, but desire to organize a corporation in connection with a church of their own peculiar tenets to be associated therewith, no notice of an intent to so organize, or the time or place of forming the organization, is necessary. Such were the circumstances under which the society in question was organized, according to findings supported by evidence. But waiving that, there was a statute permitting the formation of such a corporation, an attempt in good faith to comply therewith, and articles were drawn and signed in form as the statute required, except as to the acknowledgment. They were recorded, the corporation was organized, and the right to exercise the franchise of being a corporation asserted and such franchise in good faith used, all the persons who are parties to this action concurring, except defendant Schlicting, for several years. Such circumstances created a corporation de facto at least, which is sufficient for the purposes of this case. Bergeon v. Hobbs, 96 Wis. 644, 71 N. W. 1056; Slocum v. Head (decided February 2, 1900; Wis.) 81 N. W. 673.

It is further contended, as a reason why the finding of fact, to the effect that a corporation of the German Evangelical Church of the Synod of North America was organized by and pursuant to the articles signed May 13, 1888, is contrary to the evidence, that such was not the intention of those who participated in what occurred at the time. There seems to be but very little room, if any, for controversy on that point. The person who drew the articles of organization, and under whose direction they were signed, was a minister of the denomination of Christians known as the "German Evangelical Church," and a minister of the synod of such church for North America. He framed such articles for the purpose of forming a corporation of his church, and in harmony with the wishes of those who signed them. There is ample evidence as to that. The articles were signed at a meeting at which substantially all who had been accustomed to meet in Wayne to listen to religious teaching of the German Evangelical Church were present. The minister read the articles and ex-

Indeed, it appears from the written agreement executed contemporaneously with the mortgage, that he was the moving party in the transaction. The proposition was made by him, and it is perfectly clear that his guilt is equal, if not greater, than that of the defendant. Again, if it be conceded that he is entitled to relief on the ground that a part of the contract (the note) is executory, the court would only grant it upon terms; and as the mortgagee has, under the agreement, so credited the note that everything is eliminated except certain expenses and counsel fees and a pre-existing debt, leaving only a balance of about $200, it would seem very clear that the court, even if it interfered, would not place him in any better condition. The expenses and counsel fees were actually expended in furtherance of his own proposition, and it would seem a complete reversal of the maxim, in pari delicto melior est conditio defendentis, to so use the equitable power of the court as to extricate the plaintiff from the position in which he has placed himself, and put the entire expense of carrying out his own proposition upon the shoulders of the defendant. No clearer case can, in my opinfor purposes of public utility it should be stamped with invalidity.

VIII. Miscellaneous.

In McGuire v. Ashby, 1 Rand. (Va.) 76, an injunction was granted to prevent a sale under a deed of trust given for the benefit of an unchartered bank, and therefore void under the Virginia statutes. The court in this case said that a court of equity, as well as a court of law, would interfere to prohibit the effect of contracts made in violation of laws enacted for the public good.

In Carey v. Smith, 11 Ga. 539, an action to enjoin the assignee of an insolvent bank from recovering from a stockholder, who participated in the bank's doing business before its capital stock was paid in, on his liability for the redemption of bank bills issued, the court said that where parties are concerned in illegal transactions, whether mala prohibita or mala in se, courts of equity will not interfere to grant any relief.

In Cone v. Russell, 48 N. J. Eq. 208, 21 Atl. 847, an injunction was allowed against the use of a proxy irrevocable for five years to vote corporate shares of stock, executed in pursuance of an agreement by the one to whom the proxy was given to so vote the shares that one of those giving the proxy should be continually employed as manager of the corporation at a specified salary. The court in this case held that the complainant was seeking to undo, as far as possible, the wrong done by virtue of the illegal agreement, and that in such case the maxim in pari delicto potior est conditio defendentis, did not apply.

In Roberts v. Roberts, 4 Eng. Exch. Rep. 448, the court granted an injunction against an action of ejectment pending a suit to set aside the deed on the ground that it had been executed solely for the fraudulent purpose of giving the grantee, who was the grantor's brother, a colorable qualification to kill game. The injunction was subsequently dissolved and the ejectment suit tried, the case being reported in 2 Barn. & Ald. 387, resulting in a verdict in favor of the plaintiff therein on the ground that the defendant could not prove his own fraud to set aside a deed valid on its face.

In McWilliams v. Phillips, 51 Miss. 196, a note had been given to the county treasurer in consideration of a license to sell liquor in violation of a statute requiring payment in money. The maker brought an action to enjoin foreclosure of a mortgage securing the note, and an injunction was granted, the court holding on affirming the injunction order that the note was void and the parties in pari delicto. The opinion states that the complainant appeals to the court on the ground that the parties are equally guilty, and therefore the court ought not to allow one party to get the fruits of the illegal act, and the holding of the court is 48 L. & A.

that such defense may be set up against an executory illegal contract, but not where it has been fully executed.

In Yard v. Pacific Mut. Ins. Co. 10 N. J. Eq. 480, 64 Am. Dec. 467, an injunction against an action at law on bonds given for capital stock of an insurance company asked for on the ground that the company should have required payment in cash, and could not legally take individual obligations in lieu of stock and proceed with its business before the stock was actually paid in, was refused on the ground that the complainant was a party to the illegality, and could not invoke the aid of equity to relieve him from his own voluntary acts, and that public policy required the enforcement of payment rather than the contrary.

The chancellor in the court below held that a court of equity ought not to interfere with the proceedings at law to aid the complainant in the legal defense, if it was one sought to be set up against payment of the bonds.

In Ellicott v. Chamberlin, 38 N. J. Eq. 604, 48 Am. Rep. 827, an injunction against an action on a note given by a legatee to the executor in consideration of the latter's renouncing his trust was refused on the ground that, although such contract was illegal as against public policy, the defense could be set up in a court of law.

In Simpson v. Howden, 3 Myl. & C. 97, 1 Jur. 703, the court refused to entertain a suit to enjoin an action at law on an agreement by promoters of a railroad to pay a specified amount to an owner of land on the intended line in consideration of his not opposing the bill, and with the understanding that a bill to change the line should subsequently be passed, as the question as to the legality of the agreement might be decided at law.

In Evans v. Richardson, 3 Meriv. 469, an injunction against an action on a contract between a citizen of the United States and a citizen of the United States and also of England for the exportation of goods from England to America during time of war was dissolved on the ground that the contract was illegal, and that the parties should therefore be left to their remedy at law.

In Creath v. Sims, 5 How. 192, 12 L. ed. 111, and Sample v. Barnes, 14 How. 70, 14 L. ed. 330, the plaintiff asked for an injunction to stay proceedings upon a judgment on a note for the purchase price of slaves on the ground that their purchase was designed to be, and was, a fraud on the Constitution and laws of Mississippi forbidding the introduction of slaves as merchandise. The injunction was refused on the ground that the parties were in pari delicto, and must be left in the position in which they had placed themselves. Although judgments had been rendered in these cases the decisions do not seem to have been affected thereby.

J. H. H.

ion, be conceived for the application of the rule, than the present.

Furthermore, it is a fundamental principle that a court of equity never interferes where there is a complete defense at law. High, Inj. § 473. In the present case it is said that the mortgage is utterly void. If this be so, there is no occasion for equitable relief, not even on the ground that it is necessary to discover and preserve the evidence of its illegality, as the contemporaneous agreement executed by all of the parties is plenary proof of the vitiating element. 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 700. This consideration, as well as the firmly established rule, in pari delicto, etc., is also a complete bar to the prayer that the deed be canceled on the ground that it is a cloud upon plaintiff's title. Ibid. Public policy will be far better subserved by leaving the plaintiff where his illegal conduct has placed him, than by encouraging him in another attempt to violate the law by the assurance that a court of equity will always stand ready to relieve him against the consequences of his unsuccessful experiments. "The suppression of illegal contracts is far more likely, in general, to be accomplished by leaving the parties without remedy against each other, and by thus introducing a preventive check naturally connected with a want of confidence, and a sole reliance upon personal honor. And so accordingly the modern practice is established." 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 293. The case of Patterson v. Donner, 48 Cal. 369, cited in the opinion to the effect that a mortgage given to secure money upon an agreement against public policy does not divest the title, does not aid the plaintiff; for, if the title is not divested, there is certainly no occasion for resorting to a court of equity, where the illegality is evidenced, as in this case, by the contemporaneous agreement referred to. The case, however, decides the other way. It holds that the title passes, but that the performance of the illegal condition will not divest the title of the grantee. The case cited from Indiana is equally inapplicable, as it was an action at law to enforce an illegal executory agreement; and it was, of course, held that the defendant could plead the illegality of the consideration. The case from Maryland is also inapplicable, as it was an action to foreclose a mortgage given upon an illegal consideration, and the court refused relief. It is no authority that the court would have aided the mortgagor, had he been seeking a decree for cancellation. The case of Williams v. Bullmore, 33 L. J. Ch. N. S. 461, cites no authority. It seems, however, that the mortgagee was seeking foreclosure, and that this action was consolidated with one brought by the mortgagor for cancellation. Under these circumstances, there was a decree for cancellation. It is doubtful whether the court would have made such a decree had not the mortgagee been seeking foreclosure. However this may be, it cannot be regarded as sufficient authority to overturn the well-established rule embodied in the maxim which I have quoted. There is nothing in the reference to Pomeroy's Equity Jurisprudence which at all countenances relief under the circumstances of this case. The defendant has already agreed to terms as favorable as would be imposed by a court of equity. I think that A. M. Basket has no standing in a court of equity, and that under the circumstances he is entitled to no relief. To interfere in his behalf would be giving aid and comfort to the moving party in this illegal transaction.

WISCONSIN SUPREME COURT.

Theodore KERSTEN, Resp't.,
v.

City of MILWAUKEE, Impleaded, etc.,
Appt.

(.....Wis.....)

1. Assessing lots for so-called benefits in proportion to their frontage, and making the aggregate of benefits closely approximate the total cost of the work, are circumstances too significant not to arouse suspicion that benefits were not considered, although the board making the assessment say they viewed the premises and exercised their judgment,—especially when there was a deep cut opposite some of the lots, and a deep fill opposite others.
2. An assessment purporting to be made according to benefits will not be sustained, although the board making it say they viewed the premises and exercised their judgment, if the facts and circumstances show quite conclusively that they could not have exercised their judgment in arriving at the result.

3. The remedy by appeal from a wrongful assessment under the charter of Milwaukee, subchap. 7, § 11, is not exclusive of a remedy in equity, where the assessment is shown to be arbitrary and fraudulent.
4. A petition from abutting lotowners is not a necessary condition of the improvement of an alley, under the charter of Milwaukee, subchap. 7, § 6, when the council follow the technical course of procedure therein mapped out.
5. An assessment for grading an alley, based solely on the cost of the work in front of the abutting lots, without regard to benefits, and apportioned by the front foot, is arbitrary and void.
6. An injunction against a wrongful assessment for the grading and pavplained them, and did likewise with the rules of the church. There is no sufficient evidence to rebut the presumption that all the signers of the articles knew what they contained. In them is the following language: "The undersigned, . . . and those who are or may become associated with them for the purposes herein specified, have organized themselves into a religious society of the German Evangelical Synod of North America, located in the town of Wayne, county of Lafayette, state of Wisconsin." There is no mistaking the meaning of such language.

NOTE.—As to necessity of special benefits to sustain local assessments, see Asberry v. Roanoke (Va.) 42 L. R. A. 636, and note; Detroit v. Chapin (Mich.) 42 L. R. A. 638; Weed v. 48 L. R. A.

Boston (Mass.) 42 L. R. A. 642; Rolph v. Fargo (N. D.) 42 L. R. A. 646; Hutcheson v. Storie (Tex.) 45 L. R. A. 289; and Schroder v. Overman (Ohio) 47 L. R. A. 156.

The contention that the deed of the land on which the church stands was made for the use of a free church, barring only Roman Catholics, and that the finding is contrary to the evidence on that point, is quite as infirm in its supports as the claim in regard to the intent of the incorporators to form a society of the German Evangelical Synod of North America. As before indicated, the language of the deed vests the title to the property in the grantee for its church purposes, meaning, obviously, such church purposes as the society was organized for. That read into the instrument, in effect, the words "as a religious society of the German Evangelical Synod of North America." If we look to the circumstances under which the deed was executed, the fair preponderance of the evidence is that the grantor and the grantee intended that the property should be devoted exclusively to the purposes for which the grantee was organized; that is, the purposes of a society of the German Evangelical Synod of North America. Before the deed was drawn, the grantor, with several members of the church, took advice as to how it should be worded, particularly as to the grantees, having present at the time the articles of organization of the society. The grantor testified that he made no promise before the deed was delivered, except to give the land to the society. When the deed was delivered it was read carefully, a large number of the members of the society being present, and there was evidence that it was afterwards read publicly in church and was fully approved.

We will not further discuss the evidence, but close this branch of the case by saying that a careful reading of the record leads to a satisfactory conclusion that all of the findings, to the effect that the property in question is held by the church society for its use as an organization of Christians of the belief of the German Evangelical Synod of North America, and as a church society of such synod, are in the main supported by the uncontradicted evidence or the preponderance of the evidence, and that no material question, at least, was determined contrary to the clear preponderance of the evidence.

We come now to the broad question of whether a majority of the members of a church corporation, organized as a body of Christian believers of a particular sect, can devote its property to a use inconsistent with the purposes of the corporation. That question, it would seem, on the most familiar principles, requires a negative answer. It 48 L. R. A.

is the law of such corporations, the same as of all others, that they cannot lawfully divert their property to uses in disregard of the limitations contained in the acts creating them. There is no difference between church and other corporations in that regard. Church corporations are creatures of the law the same as business or municipal corporations, and when it comes to property rights a court of equity has the same power to protect the minority in the one as in the other. If every taxpayer in a city but one were to favor the use of public property for a purely private use, the one, backed by the power of the court, would prevail. If all of the stockholders of a business corporation but one were to favor the use of the corporate property for something entirely foreign to the purposes of the corporation, the one stockholder, with right on his side, and the power of the court to enforce it, would control and prevent the mischief. The power of a religious corporation as to the use of its property is limited by its organic act the same as any other. When it exceeds such limitations its acts are ultra vires, and the court, at the suit of a member of it, will apply the proper preventative or restorative remedy where there are no superior equities in the way.

The law as above indicated was definitely declared by this court in Fadness v. Braunschweig, 73 Wis. 257, 41 N. W. 84. Attention was there called to the wording of the various provisions of chapter 91, Rev. Stat., under which church corporations are created. Section 1990 authorizes the creation of such corporations, each limited, however, in its purposes, to those of a particular sect and a particular society of such sect, or to persons of a particular religious belief and a single society thereof. Other sections place such corporations, in all essential particulars, under the same restrictions as to their business affairs as those of other corporations existing under the statutes. It was said in the Fadness Case, in effect, that if officers temporarily in charge of the corporate affairs divert its property from the legitimate uses of the corporation, as limited by the grant of such property to it, or the purposes of its organization as regards the particular religious faith it was organized to promote, a court of equity has ample power to interfere to protect the minority; for, as to such matters, the right of each member of the church society is the equal of every other, and the rights of all are referable to the terms of the trust upon which the corporation property is held, which trust, as indicated, may be declared in the conveyance of the property to the corporation so far as not inconsistent with its corporate powers, or by the articles of organization limiting and defining its rights and those of its members. By submitting to the law of the state in forming a corporation under the statutes, and vesting the title to the property of a church society in it, the members thereof become irrevocably bound by the limitations upon corporate power incident to such artificial bodies.

Evenson v. Ellingson, 67 Wis. 634, 31 N.

W. 342, is to the same effect. It was there suggested that the policy of the state was to limit the purposes of a church corporation under the statute, to those of a single society, particular sect or body of persons of like religious belief, to avoid just such dangers as threatened the minority of the society under consideration,—the danger of schismatic differences causing contentions among factions for the control and use of the property of the society. The law wisely precludes the hope of factional, exclusive enjoyment of property, furnishing stimulus to church differences. Experience has taught that the cohesive power of mutual material interests, even those that are aids to spiritual enjoyment and welfare, present and future, is generally as powerful to promote, in church affairs, the dwelling together of brothers in harmony, as matters of doctrine. The benefit of that influence is secured where persons are incorporated as members of a particular sect and church, and vest the title to their church property in such corporation. So fenced about, a faction of a church community, however large, can neither withdraw and claim a part or any of the church property, nor remain and divert its use to purposes foreign to the purposes of the corporation.

Cases exist, involving corporate control over property not impressed with a trust for a particular use by the instrument of conveyance or by the act of incorporation, some of which have been brought to our attention, and many more might have been cited; but they do not apply. 2 N. Y. Rev. Laws 1813, chap. 60, § 3, p. 212, that forms the basis for some of such decisions, and which are referred to in other adjudications as authority, was said in Petty v. Tooker, 21 N. Y. 267, to expressly confer upon trustees of a church corporation organized under it absolute power of control as regards the religious use to which the property may be devoted. Here the statutes give to trustees of a religious corporation formed under them the same control over its property as is given to other corporations. The power is limited to the particular purposes expressly or impliedly named in the act of incorporation.

What has been said is in harmony with the law regarding trusts for religious uses, whether the trustees be officers of a religious corporation or of an unincorporated ecclesiastical body, as indicated by the numerous authorities cited in the brief of counsel for respondent, among which are the following: Ferraria v. Vasconcellos, 31 Ill. 25; Mount Zion Baptist Church v. Whitmore, 83 Iowa, 138, 13 L. R. A. 198, 49 N. W. 81; White Lick Quarterly Meeting of Friends v. White Lick Quarterly Meeting of Friends, 89 Ind. 136; Lamb v. Cain, 129 Ind. 486, 14 L. R. A. 518, 29 N. E. 13; Miller v. Gable, 2 Denio, 492; Schnorr's Appeal, 67 Pa. 138, 5 Am. Rep. 415; Stebbins v. Jennings, 10 Pick. 172; Baker v. Fales, 16 Mass. 503; Smith v. Pedigo, 145 Ind. 361, 19 L. R. A. 433, 33 N. E. 777, 44 N. E. 363; Hale v. Everett, 53 N. H. 9, 16 Am. Rep. 82.

The governing idea in all such cases is 48 L. R. A.

that property held by the trustees of a church society has impressed upon it a character in harmony with the creation of the trust, and that any change of such character is a violation of such trust. If property be conveyed to trustees for use of the corporation, and its organic act proclaims the religious belief of its members, and sect to which it belongs, so as to indicate clearly the particular use intended by the grantor, or the conveyance expressly indicates the limitations upon such use, or if a corporate organization be formed as a society of a particular church and it becomes possessed of property in any way in trust to that end, in either case the property is held in trust for the use so indicated, and such use cannot be perverted without consent of all the parties to the trust.

Our attention is called to Watson v. Jones, 13 Wall. 679, 20 L. ed. 686, as supporting the view of appellants, but it is in strict harmony with the foregoing. Justice Miller there classified controversies that had been before the courts, concerning rights of property held by ecclesiastical bodies, as follows:

(1) Cases where property forming the subject of controversy was, by the terms of the deed or will of the donor, or other instrument by which the property is held, devoted to the teaching, support, or spread of some specific form of religious doctrine or belief.

(2) Where property is held by a religious congregation which, by the nature of its organization, is strictly independent of other ecclesiastical associations, and, so far as church government is concerned, owes no fealty or obligation to any higher authority.

(3) Cases where the religious corporation or ecclesiastical body holding the property is but a subordinate member of some general church organization in which there are superior ecclesiastical tribunals with a general and ultimate power of control, more or less complete, in some supreme judicatory, over the whole membership of that general organization.

In the first class of cases it was said the property cannot legally be diverted from the purposes of the trust, whether the donee be an independent church or the member of a larger church organization to which it owes obedience. In the second class it was said, where the character of the organization is such that its members, in such manner as may be prescribed by the plan of organization, may freely deal with its property, and such property is not impressed with any trust other than that of the general use for the purposes of the organization as a religious society, its trustees, for the time being, in power, according to the rules of the society, can control the use of the property within the general purposes of its ownership. In the third class of cases it was said, where the control of property is dependent upon the question of doctrine, discipline, ecclesiastical law, rule or custom, or church government, and that has been decided by the highest church tribunal within the organization, the civil court will accept and follow the ecclesiastical determination.

It will be seen that the idea which prevails at every point is that a trust impressed upon property, if there be one, cannot be legally violated. As was said, in effect, in Miller v. Gable, 2 Denio, 492, a single member of a church will prevail against a dozen to prevent a violation of a trust for a particular religious use of the church. And in Mount Zion Baptist Church v. Whitmore, 83 Iowa, 138, 13 L. R. A. 198, 49 N. W. 81, a minority of the members of the church, however small, may prevent the perversion of the property held by it in trust to promulgate a particular religious faith.

The instant controversy cannot properly be located in the second class mentioned in Watson v. Jones. The Wayne society is not strictly an independent church society. It was made, by its articles of organization, a society of the German Evangelical Synod of North America. Again, the property was conveyed to the church, as has been stated, for a particular use, within the first class of cases mentioned. This is not a case where there is no specific trust impressed on the corporate property in the hands of the church; neither is it a cause dependent upon a determination of some ecclesiastical question.

Again, we are not dealing with a controversy regarding which of two factions, claiming to belong to the same sect, is entitled to control its property, the decision involving some question of doctrine, or other ecclesiastical question, as in Wehmer v. Fokenga, 57 Neb. 510, 78 N. W. 28; nor is it a case where a corporation, organized without reference to synodical relations, afterwards gave allegiance to a particular synod, and later a faction attempted to sever such allegiance, as in Fadness v. Braunborg, 73 Wis. 257, 41 N. W. 84, and Lawson v. Kolbenson, 61 Ill. 405. The controversy is whether members of a corporation, created as a synodical church society, and expressly limited by its organic act as to its association with other churches, and the trust character of its property, and by the conveyance of such property to it, merely because they are in the majority, can violate that trust and be free from the power of a court of equity to remedy the wrong at the suit of the minority. The answer to that has been indicated. The decision of the circuit court was right.

The judgment must be affirmed.

So ordered.

TENNESSEE SUPREME COURT.

Samantha J. CARLAND, Appt.,
v.

Charles A. AURIN.

(.....Tenn.....)

1. The owner of a city lot has not the right to fill in or raise the surface so as to prevent the natural flow upon it of surface water from the higher ground of an adjoining owner, but is subject to the same rule which governs rural property.
2. The occupant of premises, whether owner in fee, life tenant, or lessee, may maintain an action for damages, measured by the injury to his particular estate or interest in the property, by an obstruction of the flow of surface water therefrom.
3. One who causes noxious vapors to rise upon the land of an adjoining proprietor by wrongfully obstructing the natural drain of surface water therefrom is liable for the damage the same as if such vapors had been wrongfully caused to rise on and from his own land.
4. An allegation that the wrongful creation of a stagnant pond caused the ill health of the plaintiff is sufficient without averring in terms that such wrong was the natural and proximate cause of the sickness.

(November 18, 1899.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Knox County in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover damages for the alleged wrongful obstruction of a natural drain for surface water. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Henry H. Ingersoll, for appellant:

Lower lands are burdened with the servitude of receiving surface water from upper lands adjacent.

Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Hays, 11 Lea, 382, 47 Am. Rep. 291.

And those lower proprietors filling in their lots, or lands, so as to back surface water must provide sufficient culverts for its escape.

Carriger v. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. 7 Lea, 388; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Mossman, 90 Tenn. 159, 16 S. W. 64.

Nuisance injures occupation; therefore action lies to the injured occupant without alleging title to land.

Allen v. Suseng, 1 Coldw. 205.

Messrs. Green & Shields, for appellee:

Surface water is a common enemy which every proprietor may fight or get rid of as best he may.

2 Dill. Mun. Corp. 3d ed. § 1039.

In the case of urban property, a man may protect his premises against the fall of rain or snow, even to the extent of preventing its fall upon his ground altogether.

Cooley, Torts, 2d ed. pp. 574, 681.

The reason of the difference in the rule

NOTE.—As to rights in flow of surface water, see note to Gray v. McWilliams (Cal.) 21 L. R. A. 593; also Sheehan v. Flynn (Minn.) 26 L. R. A. 632; Edwards v. Charlotte, C. & A. R. Co. 48 L. R. A.

(S. C.) 22 L. R. A. 246; Albany v. Sikes (Ga.) 26 L. R. A. 653; Jacobson v. Boening (Neb.) 52 L. R. A. 229; and Churchill v. Beebe (Neb.) 35 L. R. A. 442.

between country property and city property is clearly stated in the New York case of Vanderviele v. Taylor, 65 N. Y. 341.

An owner of vacant and unimproved city lots is not liable to an action for his failure to prevent mere surface water, accumulating thereon from natural causes, from passing thence upon the land of an adjoining proprietor to his injury.

Morrill v. Hurley, 120 Mass. 99.

An owner of a city lot on which surface water accumulates by the raising of a street and the adjacent land, and becomes stagnant, is not liable for the nuisance.

Barring v. Com. 2 Duv. 95.

The damages sought to be recovered for injury to plaintiff's health are not the natural and proximate result of the alleged wrongs, and are too remote.

Waggoner v. White, 11 Heisk. 748; South-ern R. Co. v. Brigman, 95 Tenn. 628, 32 S. W. 762.

The gist of plaintiff's action is injury to the real estate in her possession. The measure of her damages under this phase of the declaration must be the impairment of the enjoyment of the premises, which would be determined by their rental value or the cost of putting them in repair.

Under the other phase of the declaration a totally different element of damages arises, the gist of which is not injury to the real estate, but injury to the person, to the health. These causes are so diverse as that they can only be asserted by means of separate suits.

Caldwell, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action of damages brought by the occupant of a city lot against the owner of an adjacent and lower lot, for creating an alleged private nuisance by filling such lower lot with earth, garbage, etc., and thereby obstructing the natural drain of surface water, and backing the same upon plaintiff's lot, and there making a stagnant pond, which impaired the use of the premises, and, through noxious vapors emitted, caused sickness to the plaintiff. The defendant demurred upon four grounds: (1) That, being within the city limits, the defendant had the legal right to fill or raise his lot, as it is alleged he did, though he thereby impeded and prevented the passage of surface water from the plaintiff's lot over his own; (2) that plaintiff, being only the occupant, and not the owner, of the lot alleged to have been injured, cannot maintain this suit; (3) that since the noxious vapors complained of are alleged to have risen from the lot occupied by the plaintiff, and not from that of defendant, there is no cause of action on account thereof against the defendant; and (4) that the plaintiff does not allege that the wrongs complained of were the natural and proximate cause of her sickness.

Two distinct rules have been administered in the various states of the Union with respect to the right of a lower proprietor to obstruct and repel surface water flowing from the land of a higher proprietor; one being called the "common-law rule," and the other the "civil-law rule." Under what is known as the "common-law rule," the holding is that the right of the lower proprietor to occupy and improve his land, in such manner and for such purposes as he may see fit, either by changing the surface or by the erection of buildings or other structures thereon, is not restricted or modified by the fact that such improvements or occupation will obstruct and repel surface water that would otherwise naturally flow thereon from adjacent and higher land, even though the land of the upper proprietor may be injured thereby. This rule is based largely upon the maxim, Cujus est solum ejus est usque ad cælum et ad inferos, and seems to be administered in the states of Connecticut, Indiana, Kansas, Maine, Massachusetts, Minnesota, Missouri, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, and perhaps in Texas (except as to railroads), Vermont, and Wisconsin. On the contrary, by the rule of the civil law, the proprietor of the lower land may not obstruct, by any means, the natural flow of surface water, and turn it back, to the injury of the higher lands of his neighbor; the latter owner having, by the law of nature, an easement or servitude of drainage over the lands of the former for the flow of surface waters. This rule is based partly upon the necessity of the situation, and partly upon the maxim, Sic utere tuo ut alienum non lædas, and appears to prevail in Arkansas, Alabama, California, Georgia, Illinois, Iowa, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland, Michigan, Nevada, North Carolina, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Tennessee, Texas (as to railroads), Virginia, and West Virginia. There have seemingly been some changes from one rule to the other in Arkansas, Missouri, Iowa, New Hampshire, and some of the other states; and South Carolina appears to occupy a kind of middle ground between the two, allowing the lower owner to make any reasonable use of his land which may not unreasonably injure adjacent property above. The two rules are considered, and most of the adjudged cases cited, in 24 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 907-922, inclusive; in Gray v. McWilliams (Cal.) 21 L. R. A. 593, 608, and note; in Sheehan v. Flynn (Minn.) 26 L. R. A. 632, and note; in Vanderviele v. Taylor, 65 N. Y. 341, 345; in Barkley v. Wilcox, 86 N. Y. 141; in Waverly v. Page (Iowa) 40 L. R. A. 465, and note, and in Cooley, Torts, pp. 574-580, inclusive. Judge Dillon, adopting the remark of Lord Tenterden (King v. Commissioners of Sewers, 8 Barn. & C. 355, 360), in reference to the rights of owners along the seacoast, says that the law largely regards surface waters a common enemy, which every proprietor may fight or get rid of as best he may. 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. § 1039. The cases decided by this court are Carriger v. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. 7 Lea, 388; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Hays, 11 Lea, 382, 47 Am. Rep. 291; and Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Mossman, 90 Tenn. 167, 16 S. W. 64. All of these cases give distinct recognition and application to what is called the "civil-law rule," without so naming it, or mentioning the other rules. In the first of them, the following language was quoted and adopted from Addison, Torts, Wood's ed. p. 95, viz.: "Land cannot be cultivated or enjoyed unless the springs which rise on the surface and the rains that fall thereon be allowed to make their escape through the adjoining and neighboring lands. All lands, therefore, are, of necessity, burdened with the servitude of receiving and discharging all waters which flow down to them from lands on a higher level; and if the owner or occupier of the lower lands interposes artificial impediments in the way of the natural flow of the water through or across his lands, and by so doing causes the higher lands to be flooded, he is responsible in damages for infringing the natural right of the possessor of such higher land to the natural outflow and drainage of the soil, unless he has gained a right to pen back water by contract, grant, or prescription. So that if the proprietor of the higher lands alters the natural condition of his property, and collects the surface and rain water together at the bottom of his estate, and pours it in a concentrated form and in unnatural quantities upon the land below, he will be responsible for all damages thereof caused to the possessor of the lower lands." Judge Cooley, after noting the fact that some of the states apply the one rule and some the other, says that "no doubt all the states would recognize an exception [to the civil-law rule] in favor of the owner of a town lot, who must be at liberty to cut off drainage across it, or his lot would be worthless for many purposes. In respect to agricultural lands, strong reasons may be given for either view, and it is probable that each will continue to find supporters thereafter as heretofore." Cooley, Torts, *577. Elsewhere it is said: "In some states a distinction has been made between urban and rural property, and it has been held, or, at all events, an opinion has been expressed, that the rule of the civil law that the lower proprietor holds his land subject to the burden of receiving the surface water which naturally drains from the higher lands does not apply to city and village lots." 24 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 915. In support of the last statement, the author cites cases from Alabama, Iowa, Michigan, and Pennsylvania, four of the states in which the civil-law rule prevails as to rural lands, and two cases from New York, one of the states in which the common-law rule prevails. In a later case from Iowa, however (Waverly v. Page, 105 Iowa, 225, 40 L. R. A. 465, 74 N.W. 938), the civil-law rule was applied in favor of the owner of a city lot, and that, too, as against the municipality itself; and the same rule seems to have been applied as to urban property in Georgia (Goldsmith v. Elsas, 53 Ga. 136), in Illinois (Gormley v. Sanford, 52 Ill. 159), in Kentucky (Kemper v. Louisville, 14 Bush, 87), in Louisiana (Bowman v. New Orleans, 27 La. Ann. 501), in Virginia (Smith v. Alexandria, 33 Gratt. 208), and in other states. We are unable to see any difference in principle between the reciprocal rights and duties of adjacent urban proprietors and those of adjacent rural proprietors, and hence we do not think it wise to apply one rule to city lots and a different rule to agricultural lands, especially in the same state. Having heretofore, in the three cases mentioned, determined the rights of adjacent rural proprietors by the civil-law rule, and still deeming that the better doctrine, we now apply it to urban lots, and in doing so overrule the first ground of demurrer.

48 L. R. A.

As to the second ground of demurrer, it need only be said that the rightful occupant of a lot, whether he or she be owner in fee, life tenant, or lessee, if injured in his or her possession by the wrong of another, may recover damages for the injury done, that damage to be measured by the injury to his or her particular estate or interest in the property.

If it be true, as averred in the declaration, that the defendant wrongfully caused noxious vapors to rise on and from the plaintiff's lot, and that she was injured thereby, the defendant is liable therefor the same as if such vapors had been wrongfully caused to rise on and from his own lot. Hence the third ground of demurrer is not well taken.

The remaining assignment of demurrer is likewise bad, because it was not incumbent on the plaintiff to aver in terms that the wrongs of the defendant were the natural and proximate cause of her sickness. It was sufficient on this point to aver that the wrongful creation of the stagnant pond by the defendant caused the ill health suffered by the plaintiff.

Reverse and remand.

RÉSUMÉ OF THE DECISIONS PUBLISHED IN THIS BOOK.

SHOWING the Changes, Progress, and Development of the Law during the Fourth Quarter of the Judicial Year Beginning with October 1, 1899, Classified as Follows:

- I. PUBLIC, OFFICIAL, AND STATUTORY MATTERS.
- II. CONTRACTUAL AND COMMERCIAL RELATIONS.
- III. CORPORATIONS AND ASSOCIATIONS.
- IV. DOMESTIC RELATIONS.
- V. FIDUCIARIES OR REPRESENTATIVES.
- VI. TORTS; NEGLIGENCE; INJURIES.
- VII. PROPERTY RIGHTS; LIENS; WILLS; TRUSTS.
- VIII. CIVIL REMEDIES.
- IX. CRIMINAL LAW AND PRACTICE.

I. PUBLIC, OFFICIAL, AND STATUTORY MATTERS.

The adoption of constitutional amendments is held to be a judicial question, although the legislature may have attempted to determine the matter, and a proposed amendment is held not to be adopted where the proposition included several different amendments in one, contrary to the constitutional requirements. (Miss.) 652.

Regulation of business.

See also infra, III.

The requirement of a license for a barber is held to be a valid exercise of the police power because the business involves the public health. (Minn.) 88.

An ordinance requiring a license for the sale of cigarettes is held constitutional and within the grant of police power to make necessary police ordinances, and especially to preserve public health. (Ill.) 230.

Ordinances prohibiting the sale of provisions and intoxicants in department stores are held illegal as arbitrary interferences with the rights of the citizen. (Ill.) 261.

A statute making it unlawful to sell goods of more than one class without a license, and requiring a separate license for each class of goods fixed by the statute, is held unconstitutional as an interference with business which is unreasonable and not based on the police power. (Mo.) 265.

A statute prohibiting the gift of trading stamps to purchasers of an article by which they are entitled to obtain certain defined articles from a third person is held unconstitutional as an invasion of individual liberty. (R. I.) 775.

A statute requiring inspection of mines at the cost of mine owners is held to be within the police power, and constitutional provisions making it a duty to pass laws for ventilation and escapement shafts are not deemed restrictive. (Ill.) 554.

One who solicits orders for goods, without carrying or exposing any for sale, except as he carries goods to fill previous orders, is 48 L. R. A.

held not to be a peddler under a statute requiring a license for peddlers. (N. H.) 99.

A territorial statute requiring a license for the sale of coal oil is held unconstitutional as applied to the sale of original packages from another state. (N. M.) 417.

Flax stored in a warehouse is held to be "grain," within the meaning of statutes regulating warehousemen. (Minn.) 92.

Courts.

The right to administer in a state court in an action at law the Federal statute for limitation of liability is sustained in an action for death caused by collision. (Pa.) 33.

Officers.

An acceptance by an officer of another office when the statute prohibits him from holding both of them is held to terminate his de jure title to the first office, but not to prevent him from being a de facto officer, if he continues to perform its duties. (N. J.) 412.

Taxes.

Discrimination between judgments is held to make a statute for the taxation of personal judgments for money void, where it exempts various classes of judgments; including those rendered on mortgages until after sale. (Kan.) 238.

The situs of railroad cars while held within a state, under lease from a foreign corporation which has no place of business in the state, is held to be in that state for the purpose of taxation. (Utah) 790.

Houses occupied by the professors of an academy and their families are held to be occupied for the purpose for which the institution was incorporated, within the meaning of a statute exempting such property from taxation. (Mass.) 550.

Houses occupied by a college president and professors, where the dominant purpose of the occupation seems to be for the performance of their duties to the institution, are held to be exempt from taxation. (Mass.) 547.

Highways and bridges.

The question whether a bridge may properly be used for the passing of a steam traction engine drawing a water tank is held to be for the jury, depending on the question whether such use is usual in that locality so that it ought to have been anticipated. (Ohio) 455.

A bay window extending more than 4 feet into a street, though at a point 8 feet above the surface, where it does not interfere with travel, is held to be an indictable nuisance, where the statute makes it a nuisance to build any structure that obstructs the highway or lessens its full breadth. (N. H.) 102.

An ordinance making it a penal offense to have a sign suspended over a sidewalk is held void as applied to a sign that does not in any way hinder or endanger the use of the sidewalk. (N. C.) 446.

Assessments.

The power of the legislature to require a town to contribute a portion of the cost of maintaining a highway or bridge wholly outside of its territorial bounds is upheld where the town is specially benefited. (Conn.) 465.

A city is held not to be liable for refusal to proceed to lay a new special assessment for a street improvement after the original assessment has been set aside, where the contractor agreed to look only to the assessment for compensation, and take the risk of its invalidity, while the statute expressly provides that the claim shall not become a public charge in any event. (C. C. A. 7th C.) 326.

An undertaking to maintain a new pavement for a series of years, required as a guaranty of the perfection of the work, is held not to be a contract for repairs within the meaning of a statute requiring contracts for repairs to be let to the lowest bidder. (Mo.) 279, 285.

Property abutting on a cul de sac is held not to be subject to assessment for an extension of the improvement which will convert the cul de sac into an open street. (Pa.) 274.

Sewers.

An ordinance providing that a city shall itself provide the materials and do the work of making sewer connections up to within 3 feet of the building to be connected is held void as an invasion of the rights of property owners. (N. C.) 442.

An annual charge for the use of a sewer is held to be constitutional, although the person charged therefor may have originally paid part of the cost of building the sewer. (Mass.) 277.

Liability of a city for casting sewage upon oyster beds, causing the destruction of the oysters, is sustained on the ground that it 48 L. R. A.

constitutes a taking of property. (N. Y.) 421.

The right of the legislature to confer on cities authority to use tidal streams as outlets for public sewers is sustained. (N. J.) 717, 722.

Counties.

A statute authorizing the recovery of a penalty against a county for death caused by mob violence is held constitutional. (Ohio) 738.

Municipalities.

A city is held not to be liable for a nuisance caused by the pollution of water by employees and a chain gang in operating a rock quarry outside the limits of the city, which the city had no authority to operate, unless it was implied from provisions which, coupled with the power, conferred a denial of liability for its misuse. (Va.) 331.

A municipality is held not to be liable for acts of its officers when participating in a conspiracy or in a mob. (Okla.) 620.

Bonds issued to refund indebtedness are held not to create any new or additional debt within the meaning of a constitutional limitation on municipal indebtedness. (S. D.) 785.

The cost of supplying a city with water is held not to be a necessary expense within the meaning of a Constitution prohibiting indebtedness or taxation, except for necessary expenses, without a two-thirds vote. (N. C.) 444.

The power of the mayor to veto action by the board of aldermen in passing upon the election of one of its members, of which the board is made by statute the final judge, is denied, although the statutes provide that he shall have a negative upon their action in all matters. (N. H.) 613.

Schools.

The right of colored children to attend the same schools as white children is denied where separate schools have been provided for them that are equal in their facilities and accommodations. (N. Y.) 113.

A statute providing for the selection of text-books for all the schools of the state by a commission, and for the purchase thereof from the lowest bidder, is held constitutional. (Tenn.) 167.

The power of the voters of a school district to rescind a vote for a tax to build a school-house is held to be implied in the power to vote the tax, when exercised at a regular meeting subsequent to that at which the tax was voted, but before the collection or levy or certification of the tax. (Iowa) 535.

Appropriations for the expenses of a state normal school maintained by a private corporation are held not to be in violation of the constitutional provision against assuming the debts of, or loaning credit to, any corporation, where they are made in consideration of the gratuitous education of teachers for the common schools, and the Constitution requires the maintenance of such schools. (Ill.) 575.

II. CONTRACTUAL AND COMMERCIAL RELATIONS.

See also supra, I., as to regulations of business.

A general assignment for creditors, made by a contractor, is held not to constitute an abrogation or breach of his existing contracts. (N. Y.) 685.

A contract by which a sheriff, who is also tax collector, turns over his tax list to another person, who engages to collect the taxes for a certain commission, is held void on grounds of public policy. (N. C.) 441.

A contract to draft a bill, have it introduced in the legislature, advocate its passage before committees, and do all things needful and proper to secure its passage, without any compensation unless the passage of the bill, which is an appropriation act, is procured, and without fixing the fees to be paid in the event of success,—is held void on grounds of public policy. (Neb.) 294.

The denial of a remedy to persons in pari delicto is not to require the refusal of equitable relief against the enforcement of a mortgage which is against public policy because given for services to procure an appointment to an office. (S. C.) 842.

Covenant.

A covenant in a deed of a railroad right of way, for the running of certain trains, is held to be binding on a subsequent purchaser of the railroad, although it was not expressly made binding on assigns. (Tenn.) 160.

Sale; stoppage in transitu.

Logs driven down a river by a log-driving company, of which each logowner is by statute a member, are held to be in the possession of such company, and not of the owner; and, although the company is not a common carrier, the logs in transit from a seller to a purchaser are held to be subject to the right of stoppage in transitu. (Me.) 50.

Physician's services.

The rule in railroad cases by which an employer is held liable for the services of a physician engaged in case of emergency for an injured employee is denied application in case of an accident at a laundry. (Mich.) 396.

Auction.

A bid at auction by one who is employed to bid by persons interested in having the property bring a good price is held not to constitute "puffing" if the persons for whom he bids are not conducting the sale so as to be able to release him from responsibility for his bid. (Ga.) 345.

Banks.

The rule that a collecting bank is not entitled to send paper directly to the drawer for collection without instructions is followed in a case which holds that instructions to send it to the drawer were in fact given. (Mich.) 583.

The holder of a check drawn by a bank which becomes insolvent before its presentation, upon which the deposit is applied by 48 I. R. A.

the drawee bank to its own claims without knowledge of the check, is held entitled to subrogation to any collateral which the drawee bank may have after its own claims are satisfied. (Ill.) 565.

Carriers.

A recovery for the loss of a sample trunk is sustained on a contract for its transportation as freight, where it was checked as baggage on payment of an excess charge, which was the same for baggage and for sample trunks, and no misrepresentation was made as to its character, while the baggageman had constructive notice of its character, though he checked it in violation of a rule of the carrier which prohibited his doing so without taking a release of liability. (N. Y.) 115.

A usage which will authorize passengers to take small packages of merchandise into passenger cars is held to require strict proof and construction, and not to be established by a practice that had been acquiesced in for a time by railroad employees as a mere matter of accommodation. (N. J.) 744

Insurance.

A member of a mutual benefit society is held not to be obliged to pay assessments, when his contract does not provide that he shall pay them or make any provision as to nonpayment, except for the forfeiture of his certificate. (Ind.) 362.

A liability on an indemnity against liability for damages from claims of injured employees is held to arise as soon as an employee is injured, although the employer is insolvent and cannot pay the claim, and such liability is held assignable. (Or.) 770.

The amputation of a part of a foot is held not to give a right to the whole amount of insurance under a by-law of an association providing for full payment on the "amputation of a limb (whole hand or foot)." (Mich.) 86.

An attempt by a traveling salesman to get upon a moving train is held not to constitute a voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger, as a matter of law. (Ill.) 359.

A mere agreement to buy real property, which is definite only as to the price to be paid, is held not to affect a policy which provides that it shall be void if the interest of the assured becomes other than the entire, unconditional, unencumbered, and sole ownership. (Ark.) 510.

The loss of property after an oral contract to insure it, but before the issuance of a policy, is held to give a right of action only in accordance with the conditions of the standard policy of insurance, and not to authorize a recovery of the value of the property as damages for breach of the contract to insure and deliver a policy, where the failure to deliver the policy caused no damage because the oral contract was itself a complete contract of insurance. (N. Y.) 424.

III. CORPORATIONS AND ASSOCIATIONS.

Consolidation.

The consolidation of railroads is held not to violate a constitutional provision against the ownership by one company of stock of another, or the making of contracts which will create a monopoly or lessen competition, where the competition lessened by such consolidation is merely incidental, at particular points. (Ga.) 351.

A consolidation of street railway companies is held not to violate a constitutional provision against the purchase by one company of shares in another, or the making of contracts between them, when the effect will be to create a monopoly or lessen competition, if the consolidation in question will result in giving increased facilities at less cost to the public. (Ga.) 520.

Regulation of business.

A street railway company which by its franchise is required to sell tickets in quantities at a reduced price on every car from the town which grants the franchise to a neighboring city is held to be under obligation to sell such tickets at that price to a passenger anywhere on the line, though he gets on a car and offers to buy the tickets outside the township. (Mich.) 84.

The doctrine established by the Supreme Court of the United States, that a state statute compelling the issuance of railroad mileage books at reduced rates is unconstitutional because it deprives the carrier of property without due process of law, is held inapplicable to a railroad company which is incorporated and acquires its franchises and property after the passage of the statute. (N. Y.) 689.

A statute compelling railroad companies to carry shippers of stock free to and from the destination of the stock is held unconstitutional as a deprivation of property without due process of law, and a denial of the equal protection of the laws. (Kan.) 251.

Preference of creditors.

A director of a bank which is about to fail, who gives information thereof to a corporation of which he is president, and signs a check for the withdrawal of the money, is held not to violate a statute prohibiting a preference in contemplation of insolvency by such banks or any officer thereof. (N. Y.) 122.

Inspection of books.

The right of stockholders to inspect books of the corporation is held absolute, and not dependent upon their motive or purpose. It is also held to include the right to take copies from the books and writings. (Ohio) 732.

Lien on stock.

An equitable lien on shares of stock in a national bank under a by-law which is in conflict with the act of Congress on the subject is denied, although a loan was made on the faith of the by-law, and its provisions were printed on the certificates of stock so as to be notice to all persons dealing with them. (N. Y.) 107.

Surety company.

A statute permitting trustees to charge against the estates in their hands such sums as they have paid to a surety company for their bonds is held to give no lien in favor of the company, and the statute is held not to give any unconstitutional privilege to such companies. (Pa.) 587.

News associations.

A corporation engaged in collecting and selling news is held to have a business affected with a public interest, and to be precluded from discriminating between newspaper publishers who may wish to buy its news. A by-law prohibiting a member from receiving news from any other association declared antagonistic is held void as tending to create a monopoly. (Ill.) 568.

Church.

The attempt of the majority of the members of a religious corporation to employ a pastor whose teachings are inconsistent with those of the sect to which the local church belongs is held to be a violation of the purposes for which the church property is held. (Wis.) 856.

Camp-meeting association.

A camp-meeting association which has leased cottages without restriction except as to such rules and regulations as it may adopt is held to have no right to impose a revenue tax on persons soliciting orders for provisions, fruits, etc., on the grounds. (Me.) 272.

IV. DOMESTIC RELATIONS.

See also infra, VII.

The remarriage of a divorced woman to one whose ability to support her is unquestionable is held to terminate her right to alimony out of the income of a testamentary trust created for the support of the former husband. (N. Y.) 686.

A decree in conformity to a contract between husband and wife after separation, by which a certain sum per month is given her for maintenance, is held to be final as an irrevocable contract, so that it cannot be modified without her consent on account of the husband's change of financial condition. (Or.) 766.

tween husband and wife after separation, by which a certain sum per month is given her for maintenance, is held to be final as an irrevocable contract, so that it cannot be modified without her consent on account of the husband's change of financial condition. (Or.) 766.

V. FIDUCIARIES OR REPRESENTATIVES.

Failure of an executor to apply for an extension of a vacancy permit for insured premises which continue vacant on the expiration of the time for which such permit had been granted is held to be negligence which will make him liable for the resulting loss of the insurance in case the property is destroyed. (Ky.) 49.

The power of a court of equity to authorize the use of trust property for the benefit of infant remaindermen during the life tenancy is denied where the rights are created by a trust which makes the estate of the remaindermen contingent on the exercise of a power of appointment by the life tenant among such of them as survive. (Wis.) 809.

VI. TORTS; NEGLIGENCE; INJURIES.

Injury to unborn child.

An infant before birth is held to have no such separate existence that an injury then received can give a right of action to the child after birth against the person causing the injury. (Ill.) 225.

Conspiracy.

A conspiracy to ruin the business of a dealer by refusing to deal with him and inducing others to do likewise, when entered into maliciously and not to promote any legitimate interests of the conspirators, is held actionable. (Minn.) 90.

Libel.

A publication in a church paper, made in good faith by officers of the church, in the performance of what they deem their duty to other members of the church, making defamatory statements as to their pastor, is held to be privileged, although it may be read by some who are not church members. (Kan.) 236.

Deceit.

A false statement by the cashier of a bank, authorized by the directors, in a certificate to the insurance commissioners respecting the depositors of an insurance company, on which a license is obtained, and publication of the same statement in the public press, to which the bank was privy, made with a view of selling stock it held as collateral, are held insufficient to make the bank liable for deceit to a person who purchased such stock, which proves to be worthless. (C. C. App. 6th C.) 210.

Killing dog.

The right to kill a trespassing dog is held not to exist merely because the owner has been notified to keep the dog off the premises. (Miss.) 95.

Contagious diseases of cattle.

For the communication of Texas fever by infected cars to cattle transported in them a railroad company is held liable. (Ill.) 175.

Dangerous road.

The want of a barrier on the side of an approach to a bridge is held not to be the proximate cause of an accident when a horse became frightened and unmanageable. (Mich.) 644.

Dangerous pond.

The drowning of children while skating on a pond without permission or invitation of the owner of the premises is held to create no liability on the part of the owner. (Mo.) 291.

48 L. R. A.

Dangerous wall or building.

In the construction of a wall the person constructing it is held liable for failure to use due care to prevent its falling and injuring persons lawfully on the premises. (N. J.) 106.

One who buys a building and continues to use it, or permit it to be used, with knowledge that it was so negligently constructed that it was liable to fall of its own weight, is held liable for damages caused by its fall to a person lawfully standing in front of it. (S. D.) 167.

Damage by water from roof.

One who discharges water collected from a roof, through an aperture in a gutter, upon a neighbor's land, causing a wall to fall, is held liable without regard to the defective construction of the wall; and his liability is held not to be limited by the exercise of ordinary care. (Mass.) 278.

Pollution of stream by sewers.

A striking and exceptional decision in Indiana in favor of the right of a city to discharge sewage into a stream without liability to injured landowners holds that no actionable wrong will result if it is done in conformity to statute and without negligence. (Ind.) 707.

On the other hand, the right to discharge sewers of a city into a stream to the damage of landowners, without just compensation, is denied in Missouri, notwithstanding the necessity of sewers and the provisions of a statute requiring them to follow the natural drainage of the country, and although private sewers, causing some pollution of the water, but not amounting to a nuisance, had been discharged into the stream for many years. (Mo.) 711.

The drainage of sewers into a river, polluting the waters and causing a nuisance to lower proprietors, is held, in Connecticut, to create a liability on the part of a city for the damages thereby caused, as the injury constitutes a taking of property under the constitutional provision requiring just compensation. (Conn.) 691.

Riparian owners in New Jersey are held entitled to compensation for damage to their property by the pollution of a river at a place above the ebb and flow of the tide, but not at a place where the tide ebbs and flows. (N. J.) 717. See also 722.

Injury to servant.

The conductor of a freight train is held to be within the scope of his employment when he takes the engine and goes forward to inspect the track, under orders of the road superintendent, after a heavy storm. (Ind.) 531.

A brakeman leaving his working clothes in a caboose according to custom, although he may have a license to go into the caboose to get his clothes for the next trip, is held not to be within the scope of his employment or of his license in jumping on and off such caboose when the train is in motion, in search of his clothes. (Minn.) 796.

An employee whose special business it is to oil a shaft and bearing is held not to be entitled to a warning of the danger of a set screw fastening a collar near the end of the shaft, although it projects in such a manner as to be likely to catch the clothing of persons coming near it. (Mass.) 96.

The performance of service outside of the scope of employment, in obedience to the order of a foreman, is held not to involve an assumption of the risks, unless they are such that an ordinarily prudent man would not encounter them. (Ill.) 753.

On assurance of an employee by the employer that work required to be done is safe, it is held that the servant's knowledge, or a statement by a third person, that the work is not safe, does not necessarily make him guilty of negligence. (Mass.) 542.

A railroad company's violation of a statute requiring the blocking of guard rails and frogs is held to relieve an employee from the effect of what would otherwise be an assumption of the risk, but not from the effect of contributory negligence. (C. C. App. 6th C.) 68.

A charge that a master should instruct his employee as to the nature, force, and probable effect of an explosion of a pot of molten metal in case it comes in contact with water, and that it is not sufficient to instruct merely that an explosion is likely to follow such contact, is held proper. (Mich.) 649.

Injury by fellow servant.

A servant of a truckman sent by his master to drive the latter's horse in operating hoisting apparatus at a warehouse is held not to be a fellow servant of the warehouseman's employees, by whose negligence in putting the pulley block and tackle in place he is injured. (N. Y.) 673.

A railroad company is held not to be liable to an employee for injuries caused by incompetence of a coemployee on account of negligence in employing him, if his incompetence was not with respect to acts for the performance of which he was employed. (Mo.) 368.

The so-called departmental theory of fellow servants is criticised, and seems to be substantially repudiated, by a recent Missouri case holding that a conductor as well as an engineer of a freight train is a fellow servant of the fireman, when their negligence causes a derailment of the train, by which the fireman is injured. (Mo.) 399.

VII. PROPERTY; RIGHTS; LIENS; WILLS; TRUSTS.

Entireties.

An estate by entireties, and not by joint tenancy, is held to be created by deed to husband and wife jointly. (Ind.) 234.

Family exemptions.

The exemption of property allowed to the head of a family is held properly claimed by a wife, when her husband has been adjudged insane and is confined in a hospital. (S. D.) 155.

Life estates.

Notes given to a life tenant for rent are held to belong entirely to the estate of the life tenant, though not due at the latter's death, and though a crop was still standing on the land at that time, where the lease had expired and the lessee had the right to the crop which was still standing. (Ohio) 735.

Deeds.

Restrictions in a deed as to the building line are held not to be enforceable by a prior grantee of a lot on the same street, subject to the same restrictions, where it did not appear that these were imposed as a part of a general scheme for the benefit of all the purchasers. (Md.) 54.

Adverse possession.

Adverse possession by third persons of land conveyed to a purchaser is held to give no ground of complaint to his subsequent vendee after the former had bought in the outstanding title. (Ky.) 537.

A parol transfer of the right of a person holding adversely is held sufficient to give his transferee a right to tack the two possessions for the purpose of acquiring title by adverse possession. (Wis.) 830.

Fisheries.

A right to fish in a pond on private land is held not to arise by prescription or by custom because of long usage by the public. (N. J.) 616.

Railroad trade fixtures.

Railroad improvements put on a right of way purchased from a mortgagor are held to be trade fixtures which do not become subject to the mortgage, but may be removed on foreclosure. (Kan.) 241.

Partnership realty.

A conveyance of an undivided half of partnership lands to a copartner for partnership uses and as partnership property, requiring payment to the grantor of the portion belonging to him on closing up the business, is held to disclose an intention to change the grantor's interest from lands to surplus. (N. Y.) 299.

Oil wells.

The right to use a gas pump to increase the production of an oil well is upheld, although it diminishes the production from wells on adjoining property. (Pa.) 748.

Failure to bore a well for oil and gas within ninety days is held ground of forfeiture of a lease, where the only substantial consideration therefor was the prospective royalties, although the lease purported to be made for five years, and longer if oil or gas was found in paying quantities, and provided a forfeiture of $50 if the well was not completed within ninety days. (C. C. A. 4th C.) 320.

License to cut timber.

A written contract for the sale of an undivided interest in land is held to revoke pro tanto a license to another person to cut timber thereon. (Wis.) 839.

Surface water.

A city lot which the owner attempts to fill in or raise is held to be subject to the civil-law rule prohibiting the obstruction of surface water from adjoining property, to the same extent as if the premises were rural. (Tenn.) 862.

For pollution of water, see supra, VI.

Liens.

See also supra, III., as to lien on stock.

A lien upon a street railway for a paving assessment to which the company is subject under its charter is held to be superior to the lien of a mortgage upon the property. (Ind.) 41.

Judgment.

A judgment is held to create no lien on lands previously conveyed in fraud of creditors. (Ark.) 334.

Mortgage.

A bona fide purchaser of a mortgage given without consideration, though unaccompanied by any negotiable obligation, is held to have a valid lien as against creditors of the mortgagor. (Md.) 63.

Wills.

A will is held not to be subscribed at the end as required by statute, where it consists of four pages in one sheet folded lengthwise down the middle, where the signature is on the second page after a portion of the will, while the third page contains other portions of the will without anything to connect those portions with what appears above the signature. (N. Y.) 662.

An antenuptial contract by which a wife, for a specified sum, agrees to release all claims on her husband's estate in order that his property may pass under his will, is held binding on her so as to prevent her from contesting the rights of the beneficiaries under the will on the ground that it was revoked by the marriage. (Ill.) 557.

A legacy conditioned on the legatee's being declared at the expiration of a certain time to be a reformed man is held to make a condition precedent, and the condition is not void for uncertainty. (Mich.) 580.

A will giving a young man an estate for his education, requiring him to complete a course at one of two universities named, and providing that the estate shall pass from him if, through his own disinclination or incapacity or the indifference of his parents or guardians, he shall fail to do so, is held to vest the estate in him, subject to the condition subsequent, so that his death during his college course will not deplete his estate or prevent it from passing to his heirs. (Md.) 58.

Trusts.

An allowance out of the income of a trust estate for the maintenance of an infant is made, although the trust provided for its use only for his education, where the infant's mother, who was the only other person interested in the income, agreed to the allowance. (R. I.) 783.

The premium paid on an investment of trust funds the income of which is given by will to testator's daughter for life, with remainder to nephews and nieces, is held not to have been intended by the testator to be deducted from the daughter's income in order to restore the principal of the fund. (N. Y.) 126.

Charitable gifts.

A charitable gift to a foreign city is upheld under a treaty provision authorizing such gifts to citizens of the foreign country, and notwithstanding the fact that the capacity of the city was for a time suspended by the necessity of obtaining a permit from the council of state. (La.) 77.

A trust for the saying of masses is upheld as a charitable use because the public service is religious and the money expended therefor supports the clergy. (N. H.) 100.

VIII. CIVIL REMEDIES.

Appearance.

The voluntary appearance of a defendant without reservation and without objection to jurisdiction in a divorce proceeding, in which he seeks the advantage of the decree in opposition to an application for an amendment to allow alimony, is held to authorize a binding judgment against him, although the original decree was void for want of service of process. (N. J.) 679.

Legal notices.

The fact that a newspaper published at regular, or nearly regular, intervals is devoted particularly to some class of business, is held insufficient to destroy its character as a newspaper with respect to the publication of legal notices therein. (Neb.) 409.

48 L. R. A.

Withdrawing juror.

The practice of withdrawing a juror in a civil case as a means of postponing the trial is not recognized in Oregon. (Or.) 432.

Appeal.

A finding of facts made after the expiration of the term at which judgment was rendered, and after the time for an appeal has expired without an appeal being taken, is held to be beyond the power of the court to make part of the record of judgment. (Conn.) 217.

Costs.

A statute allowing the successful plaintiff in a mechanic's lien case an attorney's fee in addition to costs otherwise allowed is held to be in violation of a constitutional provision that courts of justice shall be open to every person, and that justice shall be administered without sale, denial, or delay. (Colo.) 340.

Foreign judgments.

The probate in common form of a will under statutes making it an exercise of judicial power, and the judgment conclusive as to all matters properly cognizant in probate proceedings, and as to the property covered by the will, is held to be, so far as regards personalty, within the constitutional provision as to giving full faith and credit in every state to the judicial proceedings in every other state. (Tenn.) 130.

Evidence.

The provision of the war revenue act requiring stamps on instruments before they can be used in evidence is held inapplicable to state courts. (Nev.) 305.

Pleading.

The use of inconsistent defenses is discussed at length, with the conclusion that they cannot stand if the admission of the truth of one proves the falsity of the other, and that the averment in an answer of a fact which has been denied makes proof of it unnecessary. (Wash.) 177.

Damages.

The measure of recovery in trover by one who had regained title to the property only as security for the purchase price is held limited to the balance due thereon, less any depreciation by use authorized by the contract. (R. I.) 773.

Meane profits.

A defaulting vendee is held chargeable with meane profits for the time he withholds possession of land pending ejectment against him. (N. C.) 751.

Statute of limitations.

Concealment of the defalcation of a bank teller is held to prevent the running of the statute of limitations, not only in his favor, but also in favor of his surety, until the discovery of the defalcation. (Del.) 514.

A special statute of limitations governing liabilities under acts of incorporation is held to be by implication a part of a subsequent act of incorporation, and therefore binding in a suit in another state to enforce the liability of a stockholder in such corporation. (C. C. A. 4th C.) 625.

Subrogation.

A peculiar case as to subrogation holds that a purchaser on foreclosure, who voluntarily pays a claim for taxes before the sale is affirmed, but without knowledge of any dispute as to the validity of the taxes, is entitled to subrogation to a claim for such part of the taxes as was certainly valid, but the court refuses to require a receiver to recognize the payment of the disputed part of the taxes, or to assume the burden of any litigation concerning it. (C. C. A. 4th C.) 503.

Garnishment.

A debt of an insurance company for loss in another state is held to have no situs in a third state for the purpose of garnishment therein, by reason of the fact that the insurance company had an agent therein on whom process could be served. (N. C.) 452.

Partition.

A decree of partition setting off a part of the property to a life tenant, made upon a petition which shows that the plaintiff was only a life tenant, is held void on collateral attack for want of jurisdiction. (Kan.) 257.

Injunction.

The rule that equity will not enjoin criminal prosecutions is applied in a case for an injunction against the enforcement of a statute requiring the inspection of beer. (Mo.) 596.

An injunction against the passage of an ordinance which will create a contract is held to be in excess of jurisdiction, whether the ordinance will be valid or not if passed. (Wis.) 819.

An injunction against a wrongful assessment for paving is held properly limited to that assessment, where the order for the paving was legal, thus leaving opportunity for a new assessment. (Wis.) 851.

IX. CRIMINAL LAW AND PRACTICE.

Conviction of being a suspicious person, when the suspicion is wholly undefined, without reference to any particular crime, is held to be in violation of the constitutional provisions against unreasonable searches and seizures, and against cruel and unusual punishments. (D. C.) 220.

A state statute making it an offense to solicit a seaman to desert from any vessel within the jurisdiction of the state is held not to be in violation of the constitutional provision as to commerce, in the absence of any act of Congress to the contrary. (Or.) 153.

Indictment.

An indictment found on a legal holiday is held not to be invalid for that reason, where the statutes do not provide that courts shall not sit on holidays. (Ohio) 459.
48 L. R. A.

Double jeopardy.

A plea of former jeopardy is held not to constitute in itself a jeopardy, or a discharge thereon an acquittal. (Kan.) 254.

A sentence imposed after reversal of a former sentence on the prisoner's application is held not to constitute double jeopardy, although he had partly served the first sentence, including one day's solitary confinement, which was included also in the second sentence. (Mass.) 393.

INDEX TO NOTES

(The General Index follows this.)

Admission; by pleading inconsistent defenses, see PLEADING.		Evidence; presumption as to probate of will in other state	126
Adultery; injunction against enforcing contracts for illicit intercourse	842	Effect of omission of stamp upon use of instrument as	305
Adverse possession; conflict of laws as to	635	Federal laws. See COURTS.
Betting; injunction against enforcement of contract of	844	Gambling; injunction against enforcement of contract of	844
Blocked frogs. See MASTER AND SERVANT.		Guaranty. See SURETY COMPANIES.
Compounding crime; injunction against enforcing contracts for	848	Husband and wife; injunction against enforcing invalid contracts relating to marriage	842
Confederate money; injunction against enforcing contracts for	848	Inconsistent defenses. See PLEADING.
Conflict of laws; when statute of limitations will govern action in another state or country:—(I.) General rule; (II.) exceptions; (III.) where there is no statutory provision in forum as to effect of bar of other state; (a) contracts: (1) in general; (2) cases in which the doctrine that the law of the forum governs questioned or denied; (3) when right of action extinguished, as well as the remedy affected; (b) judgments: (1) in general; (2) where right of action extinguished as well as the remedy affected; (c) decedent's estates; (d) adverse possession; (e) usury; (f) liability of stockholders; (g) personal injuries; (h) death; (4) miscellaneous cases; (IV.) where statutes of forum provide as to effect of bar of other state	625	Injunction; allowing injunction in favor of party in pari delicto, against enforcing or otherwise proceeding with illegal contract:—(I.) Introductory; (II.) contracts for assistance in obtaining office; (III.) contracts as to Confederate money; (IV.) contracts relating to marriage: (a) in general; (b) marriage brokerage bonds; (V.) contracts for illicit intercourse; (VI.) betting and gambling contracts: (a) in general; (b) in case of assignment; (c) relief at law generally; (d) judgments; (VII.) contracts for compounding crime; (VIII.) miscellaneous	842
Constitutional law. See DEPARTMENT STORES; MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.		Against draining sewage into stream	707
Contempt; by board of health in disobeying injunction	708	Internal revenue; effect of omission to stamp an instrument on which the law requires a stamp, or to cancel the stamps on such an instrument:—(I.) Applicability of revenue laws to state courts: (a) provisions excluding unstamped instruments from evidence; (b) provisions invalidating unstamped instruments; (c) provisions as to recording; (II.) intent as affecting consequences of omitting stamp: (a) generally; (b) presumption and burden of proof as to intent; (III.) scope of acts, generally; effect of repeal; (IV.) effect of omission: (a) generally; (b) upon use of instrument as evidence: (1) as primary evidence; (2) secondary and parol evidence; copies; (3) as collateral evidence; (c) upon writs, processes, and orders of court; (d) in Confederate states; (e) miscellaneous; (V.) subsequent stamping: (a) what remedy available: (1) by party or collector; (2) stamping copies; (b) time; (c) application to collector: (1) who may apply; (2) to what district; (3) power of deputy collector; (4) miscellaneous; (d) what stamps required; (e) effect; (VI.) pleading and practice: (a) raising objection by demurrer; (b) necessity and sufficiency of averments as
Continuance; by withdrawal of juror	432
Contracts; injunction against enforcing illegal contract	842
Corporations. See also SURETY COMPANIES.
Conflict of laws as to limitation of actions against stockholders	637
Costs. On withdrawal of juror	432
Courts; administration of Federal laws in state courts:—(I.) Introductory; (II.) civil laws; (III.) criminal and penal laws	33
Death; conflict of laws as to limitation of actions for	639
Department stores; legal restrictions on	261
Drains; pollution of wates by, see WATERS.
Eminent domain; taking or damaging property by discharging sewers into waters	698
48 L. R. A.			873

- to omission: (c) who may raise or waive objection; (d) time of raising objections; (e) questions of fact; presumptions generally; (f) stamp not part of instrument; (VII.) failure to cancel; defective cancelation; (VIII.) foreign laws 305
- Judgment; conflict of laws as to limitations of actions on 632
- Effect of probate of a will in another state:—(I.) As to personal property; (II.) wills of real estate; (III.) presumption; (IV.) as to full faith and credit; (V.) conclusiveness of decree of probate from another state: (a) generally; (b) after filing for record; (VI.) classification by states 130
- Jurisdiction. See COURTS.
- Jury. See TRIAL.
- License; to pollute waters 705
- Limitation of actions. See CONFLICT OF LAWS.
- Master and servant; liability of an employer for injuries received by servants owing to the want of blocking at switches:—(I.) Want of blocking not negligence per se apart from statute; (II.) statutes requiring frogs, etc., to be blocked; (III.) want of blocking considered as a risk assumed by the servant 68
- Right of a servant to recover for injuries caused by projecting screws in shafts and other moving machinery:—(I.) Discussion of the question whether the maintenance of a set screw imports negligence at common law; (II.) liability of master under statutes; (III.) defenses of assumption of risks and contributory negligence 96
- The duty of a master with respect to the employment of his servants:—(I.) General principles: (a) nature and extent of the master's duty stated; (b) duty considered as creating an exception to the doctrine of common employment; (c) standard of care obligatory upon the master in regard to the selection of his servants; (d) what constitutes an incompetent servant; (e) plaintiff's recovery dependent upon proof of master's actual or constructive knowledge of coservant's unfitness; (f) duty to inquire into the fitness of a servant at the time he is hired; (g) duty of the master to keep himself informed as to the fitness of a servant already in his employment; (II.) probative value of various facts as tending to show culpability on the master's part: (a) incompetence of servant; (b) race and color of delinquent servant; (c) appearance and manner of the servant while testifying; (d) language of delinquent servant himself indicating recklessness of character; (e) minority; (f) previous experience of the servant; (g) acts of negligence prior to the accident; (h) acts of negligence which caused the accident; (i) temporary unfitness at the time of the accident; (j) derelictions of duty subsequent to the injury in suit; (k) disclaimer of fitness by delinquent servant himself; (l) specific statements as to unfitness made by co-employees of delinquent servant; (m) reputation of delinquent servant: (1) admissibility, generally; (2) reputation not evidence of actual unfitness; (3) nicknames as evidence against the master; (n) length of the period during which the unfitness has continued; (o) a promise by the master to discharge the delinquent servant; (III.) duty to employ an adequate number of servants: (a) generally; (b) whether the master has performed his duty 368
- Effect of an assurance of safety given by the master or a coservant:—(I.) General rule; (II.) illustrative cases; (III.) rationale of rule; (IV.) when an assurance of safety is not conclusive in the servant's favor; (V.) whose assurances bind the master 542
- Servant's right of action for injuries received in obeying a direct command:—(I.) Introductory; (II.) direct orders an immaterial factor, where the risk to which they exposed the servant was one of those assumed; (III.) contributory negligence, when not predicated of compliance with a direct order; (IV.) master and servant not upon the same footing; (V.) servant usually entitled to act on the assumption that his master has performed and will perform his duty; (VI.) rationale of the servant's right to rely on the master: (a) order an implied assurance of safety; (b) order tends to throw servant off his guard; (c) necessity for prompt obedience; (d) direct order tends to negative voluntariness of action; (VII.) when direct orders will not justify the servant's obedience; (VIII.) negligence in respect to the manner of carrying out the order; (IX.) specific order no excuse unless the servant's act was induced by it; (X.) by whose orders the master is bound 756
- Liability for injuries received by the servant in the performance of duties outside the scope of his original contract:—(I.) Introductory; (II.) no recovery where servant undertakes new functions proprio motu and without master's acquiescence; (III.) when negligence is predicated of a command to do work outside the scope of original contract; (IV.) risks of work outside scope of employment, when deemed to be assumed; (V.) doctrine of common employment qualified as regards servants working outside the scope of their employment; (VI.) contributory negligence as a defense; (VII.) absence of compulsion, an essential element of assumption of risks and contributory negligence: (a) generally; (b) protest or objection by servant; (c) fear of losing position 706

Money. See CONFEDERATE MONEY.

Municipal corporations; turning sewage into waters, see WATERS.

Power of the legislature to impose burdens upon municipalities, and to control their local administration and property:—(I.) Introductory; (II.) power to impose burdens: (a) generally; (b) public and quasi-public improvements; (c) compelling payment of nonlegal demands; (d) validating defective obligations; (III.) power in respect to officers and local administration; (IV.) power in respect to property and franchises 463

Negligence. See MASTER AND SERVANT.

Nuisance. See WATERS.

Officers; injunction against enforcing contracts to obtain office 842

Pleading; right to plead inconsistent defenses:—(I.) Scope of note; (II.) inconsistency in single plea; (III.) original common-law rule as to inconsistency between pleas; (IV.) the rule under the statute of Anne: (a) with reference to inconsistent facts; (b) with reference to different modes of trial; (c) relaxation of the rule; (V.) The rule in equity; (VI.) the rule under reform procedure: (a) general statement of the doctrine; (b) what defenses are inconsistent: (1) distinction between inconsistency in fact and inconsistency by implication of law; (2) test as to what inconsistency is objectionable; (c) application of the rule to particular actions: (1) actions pertaining to contracts generally; (2) actions pertaining to bills and notes; (3) actions pertaining to sales; (4) actions pertaining to negligence and for assault; (5) actions pertaining to personal property; (6) actions pertaining to realty; (7) actions for libel or slander; (8) miscellaneous actions; (VII.) effect of inconsistency as a waiver or admission: (a) the prevailing rule; (b) exceptions to the rule; (c) explanation of the apparent conflict; (VIII.) inconsistency, how taken advantage of; (IX.) conclusion 177

As to omission of stamp from instrument 317

Principal and surety. See SURETY COMPANIES.

Railroads. See MASTER AND SERVANT.

Set Screws. See MASTER AND SERVANT.

Sewers; pollution of waters by, see WATERS.

Stamp tax. See INTERNAL REVENUE.

Surety companies; legal powers and privileges of surety and trust companies:—(I.) In general; (II.) special act creating: (III.) Granting special or exclusive privileges to; (IV.) power to act as guardian, etc., without bond; (V.) power to act as surety: (a) in general; (b) on appeal bond; (VI.) right to counter security; (VII.) right to relief from suretyship; (VIII.) right to tax, amount paid to, as costs; (IX.) right of personal representative, etc., to credit for amount paid to; (X.) foreign companies: (a) power to act as surety; (b) power to act as trustee, etc. 587

Switches. See MASTER AND SERVANT.

Taxes. See INTERNAL REVENUE.

Trial; withdrawal of juror:—(I.) Power to withdraw juror: (a) in civil cases; (b) in criminal cases: (II.) effect of withdrawal of juror in civil cases: (a) English cases: (1) in general; (2) as to costs; (b) American cases; (III.) effect of withdrawal of juror in criminal cases 432

Trust Companies. See SURETY COMPANIES.

Usury; conflict of laws as to limitations of actions for 637

Waters; right of municipal corporation to drain sewage into waters:—(I.) Introduction; (II.) statutory authority; (III.) taking or damaging property; (IV.) miscellaneous 661

Wills. See JUDGMENT.

48 L. R. A.

GENERAL INDEX

TO

OPINIONS, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

(Separate Index to Notes precedes this.)

ACADEMY.

See TAXES, 6.

ACCIDENT.

See EVIDENCE, 6.

ACCIDENT INSURANCE.

See INSURANCE, 5, 6.

ACQUITTAL.

See CRIMINAL LAW, 2.

ACTION OR SUIT.

1. The motives inspiring those who induce the governor to institute an action in the name of the state to prevent the violation of Ga. Const. art. 4, § 2, ¶ 4 (Civ. Code, § 5800), are not material in determining whether the action is well brought and maintainable, but that matter depends upon the pleadings and evidence. Trust Company of Georgia v. State (Ga.) 520

2. The provision of a penalty for violation of a statute enjoining upon railroad companies the duty of blocking switches does not make that remedy exclusive of actions by persons injured by the neglect to do so, unless that intention is to be inferred from the whole purview of the statute. Narramore v. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. (C. C. App. 6th C.) 68

3. The invalidity of a provision impairing a contract between the state and a bridge company for the construction of a bridge, in a statute charging the burden of the bridge upon a city and towns specially benefited, instead of upon the state, will not avail to relieve the city and towns of their liability,—especially after a settlement between the state and the company. State ex rel. Bulkeley v. Williams (Conn.) 465

4. One who causes noxious vapors to rise upon the land of an adjoining proprietor by wrongfully obstructing the natural drain of surface water therefrom is liable for the damage the same as if such vapors had been wrongfully caused to rise on and from his own land. Carland v. Aurin (Tenn.) 862

5. The occupant of premises, whether owner in fee, life tenant, or lessee, may maintain an action for damages, measured by the injury to his particular estate or interest in the property, by an obstruction of the flow of surface water therefrom. Id.

6. When an action is begun, the object of which is only to determine the validity of an act or thing done by an officer, and not 48 L. R. A.

involving his integrity or want of good faith, the officer himself is not a necessary party to the suit. Oliver v. Jersey City (N. J. Err. & App.) 412

7. One not a party, but having an interest in the subject-matter of a pending action, that may be adversely affected by the suit, will be permitted by the court, upon a proper showing, under Burns's (Ind.) Rev. Stat. 1894, § 273, to come into the case for the protection of whatever right or interest he may have in the subject-matter. Union Trust Co. v. Richmond City R. Co. (Ind.) 41

8. The heirs of a deceased partner are not necessary parties to a proceeding to adjust the partnership affairs, although a part of the assets consists of real estate, if, as between the partners and their representatives, it has been converted into personalty. Darrow v. Calkins (N. Y.) 299

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Action; appearance as waiver of lack of jurisdiction. 681

Necessity of city as party in construing ordinance. 506

Right to intervene. 42

Preservation of common-law remedies; adoption of suitable process. 434

ACT OF GOD.

See REAL PROPERTY.

ADMISSION.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Admission by Pleading Inconsistent Defenses, see PLEADING.

ADULTERY.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Adultery; injunction against enforcing contracts for illicit intercourse. 843

ADVERSE POSSESSION.

See also CHAMPERTY.

1. Actual hostile exclusive occupancy of land without any presumption or claim of right is sufficient to ripen into title under the statute of limitations. Illinois Steel Co. v. Budzisz (Wis.) 830 possessions into one continuous, uninterrupted possession referable to the first entry, for the purpose of acquiring title by adverse possession. Id.

2. A parol transfer by the first to the second occupant of property held adversely, and the latter's succession in possession under it, may be sufficient to unite the two 877

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Adverse possession; conflict of laws as to. 635

Sufficiency of; tacking possessions. 832

AFTERBORN CHILDREN.

See UNBORN CHILDREN.

ALIMONY.

See APPEAL AND ERROR, 2, 18; JUDGMENT, 6; HUSBAND AND WIFE, 4, 5.

ALLEY.

See PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS, 1, 8.

AMENDMENTS.

Of Constitution, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 4, 5.

See also PLEADING, 5, 6.

ANIMALS.

Opinion as to Value of, see EVIDENCE, 7.

See also CARRIERS, 7; TRIAL, 5.

A trespassing dog cannot lawfully be killed merely because the owner has been notified to keep the dog off the premises. Hodges v. Causey (Miss.) 95

ANTENUPTIAL CONTRACT.

See HUSBAND AND WIFE, 2, 3.

APPEAL AND ERROR.

See also JUDGMENT, 1.

1. A judgment on demurrer to an intervening petition, which makes a final disposition of the case so far as concerns the petitioners, may be appealed from. Union Trust Co. v. Richmond City R. Co. (Ind.) 41

2. An appeal as from a final order in a special proceeding or a final judgment in an action lies from an order of the appellate division of the supreme court to the court of appeals, reversing an order of a special term, which modified provisions of a former decree in a divorce proceeding as to payment of income of a trust fund as alimony, which proceeding was instituted in accordance with permission contained in the former decree upon affidavits that were given the effect of pleadings, the facts becoming the subject of reference, and the order being based upon the report of the referee. Wetmore v. Wetmore (N. Y.) 666

3. Judicial inquiry on a general appeal from a judgment in an equitable action to sell part of a trust estate, presenting the question whether the judgment is proper on the undisputed facts, is not by any means circumscribed by the assignment of errors. Ruggles v. Tyson (Wis.) 809

4. A party fearing that an instruction will be taken by the jury in a broader sense than he deems consistent with the law must call the court's attention to the language, to render it subject to review. McKee v. Tourtellotte (Mass.) 542

Transfer of cause.

5. An appeal by the owners of the property from a decision establishing a mechanic's lien can be maintained without joining other defendants, under Mill's (Colo.) Ann. Stat. § 1085, which provides that appeals may be taken by any person aggrieved. Davidson v. Jennings (Colo.) 340

6. An executor acting in his individual capacity is competent as surety on an appeal bond for a legatee who has appealed. Succession of Meunier (La.) 77

7. The amount of a suspensive appeal bond may be fixed by the trial judge, where the judgment annulled a will and probate thereof, recognizing plaintiffs as heirs, but did not in terms send them into possession or make an award against the executors specifically for the net proceeds of the estate in their hands. Id.

Record and case in appellate court.

8. The special finding of facts provided for by Conn. Pub. Acts 1897, chap. 194, § 6, is not for the purpose of spreading those facts upon the records as part of the judgment, but is only to be made after judgment has been rendered, to become part of an appeal, and it cannot be made in the absence of an appeal and after the expiration of the time for taking one. Corbett v. Matz (Conn.) 217

9. A statement in an order of the appellate division, that it reverses the judgment of the trial court "upon the law and the facts," will not prevent a review by the court of appeals if the only question is whether the transaction as disclosed by the facts was forbidden by a statute. O'Brien v. East River Bridge Co. (N. Y.) 122

Review of discretion.

10. The grant of an injunction will not be disturbed on appeal, unless the discretion of the court was abused. Platt Bros. & Co. v. Waterbury (Conn.) 691

Review of verdict or findings.

11. All controverted facts and all inferences therefrom must be deemed conclusively established in favor of the party for whom judgment is rendered, when both parties are in the position of having asked for a direction of the verdict. Trimble v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (N. Y.) 115

12. Both parties are deemed to have asked for a direction of the verdict, where defendant's counsel, after moving unsuccessfully for a nonsuit, replied to an inquiry from the court, that he did not care to have any question submitted to the jury, and, after a request by plaintiff's counsel for the direction of a verdict, stated that he desired to stand on his motion for a nonsuit, while neither party asked to have any question of fact submitted to the jury. Id.

13. A general verdict for plaintiff is not conclusive in the appellate court upon the question whether or not the declaration states a cause of action. Pontiac v. Talbot Paving Co. (C. C. App. 4th C.) 326

14. The sufficiency of facts found to support a judgment may be raised by writ of error, when the facts are made part of the record of the judgment. Corbett v. Matz (Conn.) 217

Prejudicial errors.

15. Prejudicial error must be made affirmatively to appear in order to cause the reversal of a judgment. Franke v. Mann (Wis.) 856

16. The failure to specify in the order of record granting a new trial the ground on which it was granted, as required by Mo. Rev. Stat. 1889, § 2241, is not reversible error. Smith v. Sedalia (Mo.) 711

17. Sustaining a demurrer to special defenses is not prejudicial error, when defendant has had the benefit on the trial of all evidence that could have been introduced under those defenses. Platt Bros. & Co. v. Waterbury (Conn.) 691

18. The fact that defendant in a divorce suit is guilty of contempt in refusing to come into the jurisdiction of the court and submit to cross-examination is not sufficient, where the record does not show a reversal on the facts and the statute requires the reviewing court under such circumstances to presume it was on the law, to authorize the court of appeals to affirm an order of the appellate division of the supreme court which reversed an order of the special term modifying a decree awarding the income of a fund held in trust for his benefit, as alimony, but some legal error in the order must be pointed out. Wetmore v. Wetmore (N. Y.) 666

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Appeal; finding of facts as basis for writ of error; limit of time for making. 217

Right to reargument. 666

APPORTIONMENT.

See LIFE TENANTS, 3.

APPROACHES.

See HIGHWAYS, 3.

APPROPRIATIONS.

See PUBLIC MONEY, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

ASSESSMENTS.

Of Benefit Society, see INSURANCE, 2.
See also PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS.

ASSIGNMENT.

Of Claim on Policy, see INSURANCE, 3, 4.

ASSOCIATIONS.

A camp-meeting association which has made perpetual leases of cottages on its grounds, without any restriction except that they are "subject to such rules and regulations as the association may from time to time adopt," and which also owns a store on the grounds which it has leased for a rental, cannot impose a revenue tax on the 48 L. R. A.

business of taking orders for fruit, groceries, and provisions from cottagers upon the grounds of the association. Northport Wesleyan Grove Camp Meeting Asso. v. Perkins (Me.) 272

ASSUMPSIT.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Assumpsit; recovering back forced payment. 505

ATTACHMENT.

See GARNISHMENT.

ATTORNEYS.

See EVIDENCE, 8.

AUCTION.

A bid at a public sale by one who does not desire the property, and who is employed to bid in the interests of persons who are interested in having the property bring a good price, but who are not conducting the sale so as to be able to release a bidder from responsibility, does not constitute "puffing" or such a fraud on other bidders as to release them from responsibility for their bids. McMillan v. Harris (Ga.) 345

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Auctions; effect of puffing; agreement between bidders. 345

BAGGAGE.

See CARRIERS, 6.

BANKS.

Notice to Cashier, see NOTICE.

See also BONDS, 1, 2.

1. A false certificate by the cashier of a bank, stating that an insurance company had on deposit subject to check certain amounts of paid-up capital and net surplus, made to assist the company to obtain a license, and authorized by the board of directors, who knew it to be false, and the publication of the same statement in the public press, to which the bank was privy, for the purpose of securing a large bank deposit and of selling stock held by the bank as collateral, render the bank liable for deceit to a person who bought worthless stock of the insurance company in reliance on these statements. Hindman v. First Nat. Bank (C. C. App. 6th C.) 210

2. The holder of a check drawn by a bank which becomes insolvent before its presentation, whereupon the drawee bank, without knowledge of the check, applies the deposit upon its own claims against the insolvent bank, is entitled to be subrogated to any collateral which the drawee bank has after its own claims are satisfied. Wyman v. Ft. Dearborn Nat. Bank (Ill.) 565

Collections.

3. Sending a certificate of deposit directly to the drawer for collection without instructions to do so constitutes negligence on the part of a collecting bank, for which it will be liable in case of a resulting loss.

First Nat. Bank v. Citizens' Sav. Bank (Mich.) 583

4. A collecting bank is impliedly instructed to send a certificate of deposit for collection directly to the bank which made it, when this is the only bank in the place and is rated and supposed to be responsible, and the instructions received by the collecting bank, after calling attention to the fact that it had a correspondent at that place, said, "Please collect for us at your best rate of exchange." Id.

Lien on stock.

5. The invalidity of a lien on shares of stock in a national bank, under a by-law in conflict with the national banking act of Congress, can be asserted by the owner of the stock to defeat the lien, and the right to raise the question of its invalidity is not restricted to the Federal government. Buffalo German Ins. Co. v. Third Nat. Bank (N. Y.) 107

6. An equitable lien in favor of a national bank upon its shares of stock cannot be asserted against a third person by virtue of a loan to a stockholder on the security of the shares, under a by-law providing that any liability of the stockholder should be a lien upon the stock, which by-law is printed on the face of the certificate of stock so as to be notice to all persons dealing therein, since such by-law is in conflict with the provisions of the national banking act of 1864, § 35, prohibiting any loan by such bank on the security of its own shares of stock. Buffalo German Ins. Co. v. Third National Bank (N. Y.) 107

Insolvency.

7. A withdrawal of the funds of a corporation from a bank that is about to fail, under advice of the president of the corporation, who also signed a check for the money, although he was also a director of the bank and his knowledge of its condition was acquired by him as such director, does not violate the New York stock corporation law, § 48, which prohibits any transfer of assets or payment by the bank or any officer, director, or stockholder thereof, with intent to prefer any creditor, when the bank is insolvent or its insolvency imminent. O'Brien v. East River Bridge Co. (N. Y.) 122

8. A communication by a director of a bank of his knowledge that it is about to fail, though made to a depositor which is a corporation of which he is president, does not violate the New York stock corporation law, § 48, which prohibits a bank which is insolvent or the insolvency of which is imminent, or any officer or director thereof, from giving a preference to any particular creditor by transfer of assets, payment, suffering judgment, the creation of a lien, or the giving of security. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Banks; published reports of, as a fraud on persons who rely upon them. 514

National; by-laws as to lien on stock; implied or equitable lien. 108

48 L. R. A.

Liability for fraud of officers; for false certificates as to deposits; reliance of public on reports to public officers. 112

Insolvency; prohibiting preference; payment of claims in which director has an interest. 122

Collections by; forwarding to drawee. 584

BARBERS.

Police Regulation of Business of, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 21.
See also EVIDENCE, 1.

BAY WINDOW.

See HIGHWAYS, 1.

BEER.

See CLOUD ON TITLE.

BENEVOLENT SOCIETIES.

See INSURANCE, 2.

BETTING.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Betting; injunction against enforcement of contract of. 844

BILLS AND NOTES.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Extension of time to release accommodation maker. 178

BLOCKED FROGS.

See MASTER AND SERVANT.

BLOCKING SWITCHES.

See ACTION OR SUIT, 2.

BONA FIDE PURCHASER.

See MORTGAGE, 1.

BONDS.

See also APPEAL AND ERROR, 6, 7.

1. Statements made by the cashier of a bank without authority, for the purpose of inducing a person to become a surety on the bond of a teller, will not bind the bank so as to relieve the surety if the statements are not true. Lieberman v. First Nat. Bank (Del.) 514

2. The published reports of a bank purporting to show its resources and liabilities, but which were not made to induce a person to sign the bond of an employee of the bank, will not relieve such surety, who relied upon them, from liability because the reports failed to show previous defalcations by such employee, which he had concealed by false entries. Id.

3. Certificates signed by the mayor, auditor, and attorney of a city, stating what steps had been taken preliminary to the issuing of certain bonds and as to the financial condition of the city, though used by the person who negotiated the bonds, are inadmissible in an action thereon to create an estoppel against the city's asserting that the bonds were in excess of the limit of the city's indebtedness, when the making of such a statement was not within the scope of the official duty of the officers making it. National Life Ins. Co. v. Mead (S. D.) 785

4. A recital in city bonds as to the amount of indebtedness of the city does not create an estoppel against showing that the indebtedness was greater, when the statutes require the public records of the city to show the amount of the existing indebtedness, as well as the amount of the taxable property. Id.

5. Bonds issued for the purpose of refunding an existing indebtedness are not to be regarded as creating any new or additional indebtedness, and should not be considered in determining whether or not a city had reached or exceeded its constitutional debt limit. Id.

6. The issuance of bonds to fund the floating indebtedness of a city, where the electors have voted therefor, is authorized by S. D. Laws 1890, chap. 37, art. 5, § 1, authorizing a city council to borrow money on the city's credit for municipal purposes and issue bonds therefor on a majority vote of the electors. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Bonds; rights of bona fide purchasers; estoppel by recitals. 785

BOYCOTT.

See also CONSPIRACY.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Boycott; illegality of; remedy against. 568

BRIDGE.

Constitutionality of Statute as to, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 13.

See also ACTION OR SUIT, 3; HIGHWAYS, 3; MANDAMUS; TRIAL, 7.

1. The legislature may require a town to contribute a portion of the cost of maintaining a highway or bridge wholly outside of its territorial bounds, but which specially benefits the town. State ex rel. Bulkeley v. Williams (Conn.) 465

2. A statute by which the maintenance of a bridge is taken upon the state has no element of a contract, and gives rise to no vested rights such that the legislature cannot afterwards charge the expense of the bridge upon towns specially benefitted thereby. Id.

3. The legislature may reconsider an apportionment of the expense of a highway and bridge over a river between a city and certain towns, although its former apportionment was based on a determination by judicial proceeding. Id.

4. Failure to require any estimate of the amount needed for the ensuing year to be submitted to a town by a bridge district which includes it, before the time for laying a tax, does not make void a statute charging the town with a portion of the expenses of the district on the ground that it does not provide the necessary means. Id.

5. A town tax for moneys to be paid over 48 L. R. A.

to the treasurer of a bridge or highway district in which the town is included, for district expenditures, may be required by the legislature. Id.

6. A person is not chargeable with contributory negligence in assuming that a bridge is in safe condition for travel over it in any usual and ordinary way. Hardin County v. Coffman (Ohio) 455

7. A person who chooses to subject a bridge to some extraordinary burden by placing upon it some unusual weight and causing it to be moved in an unusual manner takes upon himself the risk of any injury thereby sustained, although the bridge was defective and out of repair and he was not aware of its condition and did not have good reason to believe that it was insufficient to sustain the load. Id.

8. The duty of commissioners to keep bridges under their control in a safe condition extends to the use of the bridges for all usual and ordinary modes of travel and transportation of property over them, but does not require the commissioners to anticipate the unusual and extraordinary use, subjecting the bridge to an unusual and extraordinary burden involving peculiar danger. Id.

9. An action to recover damages caused by the negligence of the county commissioners in failing to keep a bridge in repair is properly brought under Ohio Rev. Stat. § 845, as amended April 13, 1894 (91 Ohio Laws, p. 142), against the board in its official capacity, and the county is bound for the payment of the judgment recovered. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Bridges; negligence as to condition of. 456

Power of legislature to compel maintenance of, by towns. 473

BUILDINGS.

See also COVENANT, 1, 2; NEGLIGENCE, 4.

1. The fact that a building has stood for ten years without falling is not sufficient to disprove that it was negligently constructed. Waterhouse v. Joseph Schlitz Brew. Co. (S. D.) 157

2. Ordinary care is not the full measure of the duty of one who arranges a roof and gutter in such a way that the first will collect water and the second discharge it through an aperture upon a neighbor's land. Fitzpatrick v. Welch (Mass.) 278

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Projecting bay window as a nuisance. 103
Liability for discharge of water from roof. 278

Restrictions in deed as to building line. 54

BURDEN OF PROOF.

See EVIDENCE.

BUSINESS.

Constitutionality of Regulations of, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 16-23.

BY-LAWS.

See also INSURANCE, 5; NEWSPAPERS, 2.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

By-laws; of press association; illegality of. 568

CAMP MEETINGS.

See ASSOCIATIONS.

CARRIERS.

Constitutionality of Regulations of, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 10, 11.

See also COMMERCE, 1.

1. The duty of a street-railway company to sell tickets in quantities at reduced rates on each car, by virtue of the terms of its franchise from a certain town from which it runs to a neighboring city, extends to a passenger on the line who gets on the car and offers to buy such tickets at a point outside the town. Rice v. Detroit, Y. & A. A. Ry. (Mich.) 84

2. A street-railway company which has assumed to comply with the terms of its franchise requiring sales of tickets at reduced prices for a certain trip, by providing separate tickets for different parts of the trip, without offering any through-trip tickets for sale, and which has accepted a ticket for one portion of the trip, cannot escape liability for refusing to sell tickets at the reduced price for the remaining part of the trip, on the ground that its franchise obliges it to sell through tickets only. Id.

3. A usage or practice of passengers to carry small packages of merchandise into a car in derogation of the common-law contract of carriage must, in order to become a part of a contract so that it may be relied upon by the passengers, be so general, certain, uniform, and notorious, and must be so clearly proved, that it can be concluded that the officers and agents of the carrier possessed knowledge of such usage and acquiesced therein as part of the contract. Runyan v. Central R. Co. (N. J. Sup.) 744

4. A habit of one particular passenger to carry a package of merchandise into the passenger cars, and with him on his journey, will not constitute a usage or practice which can be relied on by passengers as a general regulation of the railroad company. Id.

5. The mere indulgence by servants of a railroad company of the practice by passengers to carry packages of merchandise, when it is not in obedience to duty or contract, cannot bind the carrier or prevent it from discontinuing the practice. Id.

6. A railroad company is liable for the loss of a sample trunk on a contract for its transportation as freight, where it was checked without any misrepresentation, and without any release of liability or any request therefor, on payment of a charge for excess baggage, which was the same for sample trunks as for ordinary baggage, and the baggageman had constructive notice of the character of the trunk from its appearance and from other circumstances, although there was a rule of the company prohibiting 48 L. R. A.

the checking of sample trunks without a release of liability. Trimble v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (N. Y.) 115

7. The communication of Texas fever by infected cars to cattle transported in them renders the railroad company liable for the damages. Illinois C. R. Co. v. Harris (Ill.) 176

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Carriers; liability for loss of sample trunk; payment of excess baggage therefor; regulation restricting liability. 115

Compelling free transportation of shippers of stock. 251

Statute providing for mileage books. 670

CASHIER.

See BANKS, 1; BONDS, 1.

CERTIFICATE.

See BONDS, 3.

CERTIORARI.NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Certiorari; interest of prosecutor. 419

CHAMPERTY.

1. A deed of a tract of land by one in possession of only a part of it, at a time when third persons were in possession of the greater portion claiming under a superior title, is not absolutely void under the champerty statute, but only voidable at the instance of the parties in adverse possession. Fort Jefferson Improv. Co. v. Dupoyster (Ky.) 537

2. A deed to one who purchases when a portion of the tract is in adverse possession of third persons cannot be attacked by his vendee after the former has purchased in the outstanding title, to avoid taking the title tainted under the contract. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Champerty; in deed of land held adversely; effect as to innocent purchasers. 537

CHARITIES.

See also MASSSES.

1. A legacy to the commune of Carouge, canton of Geneva, Switzerland, which is directed to be placed at interest, and with the interest to endow annually two poor girls and to give a pension to ten old persons of the two sexes, is sustainable as a legacy to pious and charitable uses. Succession of Meunier (La.) 77

2. Permission given to trustees to receive donations and bequests for educational, charitable, or literary purposes, or for the benefit of institutions to promote those purposes, is restricted by La. act 1882, No. 124, to objects and institutions within the state. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Charities; incapacity of trustee to take gift; capacity subsequently acquired; trustee in foreign country; gift to foreign city. 78

CHECKS.NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Checks; as assignment of deposit. 565

CHURCH.

See RELIGIOUS SOCIETIES.

CIGARETTES.

See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 8; MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 6, 7.

CIVIL RIGHTS.

See also SCHOOLS, 1.

The right of colored children to attend any school they or their parents may choose, instead of being restricted to the separate schools established for colored children, is not conferred by N. Y. Pen. Code, § 383, which makes it a misdemeanor for teachers or officers of schools to exclude any citizen from the equal enjoyment of any accommodation or privilege, if the schools for colored children furnish facilities and accommodations equal to those which are furnished by the other schools. People ex rel. Cisco v. School Board (N. Y.) 113

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Civil rights; separate schools for colored children. 114

CLOUD ON TITLE.

A claim of the right to inspect beer under a statute cannot constitute a cloud upon title which equity may prevent, even if a cloud upon title can arise with reference to personal property, when the inspection law makes no charge against property and provides for no remedy except by indictment or criminal information against individuals. State ex rel. Kenamore v. Wood (Mo.) 596

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Cloud on title; necessity of plaintiff's possession. 320

COLLATERAL SECURITY.

See BANKS, 2; PLEDGE.

COLLECTION.

See BANKS, 3, 4.

COLLEGE.

See also TAXES, 2-5.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Colleges; character of buildings; community life in; occupancy of officers and students. 547

COLORED PERSONS.

See CIVIL RIGHTS.

COMMERCE.

See also TAXES, 7.

1. A state statute requiring the issuance of mileage books at reduced rates for transportation wholly within the state is not invalid as an attempt to regulate interstate commerce, although a railroad affected thereby extends into other states. Purdy v. Erie R. Co. (N. Y.) 669

2. A state statute making it an offense to solicit a seaman to desert from any vessel within the jurisdiction of the state is not in violation of U. S. Const. art. 1, § 8, subd. 3, as a regulation of foreign or interstate commerce, in the absence of any act of Congress repugnant thereto. Re Young (Or.) 153

3. A territorial statute which imposes a license fee as a condition upon which coal oil may be sold in the territory is unconstitutional and void, in so far as it applies to sales in original packages by the importer of coal oil produced and refined without the territory. Re Wilson (N. M.) 417

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Commerce; regulation of; statute imposing burden on. 418

Regulation of, by state statute, as to soliciting seamen to desert. 153

Regulation of, by statute, as to railroad mileage books. 669

COMMUNE.

See CHARITIES, 1.

COMPOUNDING CRIME.NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Compounding crime; injunction against enforcing contracts for. 848

COMPULSORY SERVICE.NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Compulsory service; by corporations impressed with public interest. 570

CONDITION.

Estate on, see REAL PROPERTY.

Of Legacy, see WILLS, 4, 5.

See also DEEDS, WILLS, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

CONFEDERATE MONEY.NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Confederate money; injunction against enforcing contracts for. 843

CONFLICT OF LAWS.

1. That promissory notes bequeathed by will are secured by mortgage on real estate does not deprive them of the character of personal property so as to prevent their passing by a foreign will duly probated at testator's domicile, and recorded in the state where the land is situated, as provided by the laws of the latter state. Martin v. Stovall (Tenn.) 130

2. A special statute of limitations applicable to liabilities arising under statutes, acts of incorporation, or by operation of the law, such as Ga. Code 1882, § 2916 (Code 1895, § 3766), is to be considered as forming a part of and as read into a subsequent act of incorporation as much as if it were formally incorporated therein, and therefore it will govern in an action in another state to enforce the liability of a stockholder in such corporation. Brunswick Terminal Co. v. National Bank of Baltimore (C. C. App. 4th C.) 625

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Conflict of laws; when statute of limitations will govern action in another state or country:—(I.) General rule; (II.) exceptions; (III.) where there is no statutory provision in forum as to effect of bar of other state: (a) contracts: (1) in general; (2) cases in which the doctrine that the law of the forum governs questioned or denied; (3) when right of action extinguished, as well as the remedy affected; (b) judgments: (1) in general; (2) where right of action extinguished as well as the remedy affected; (c) decedent's estates; (d) adverse possession; (e) usury; (f) liability of stockholders; (g) personal injuries; (h) death; (i) miscellaneous cases; (IV.) where statutes of forum provide as to effect of bar of other state. 625

CONSOLIDATION.

See STREET RAILWAYS.

CONSPIRACY.

See also MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 12.

A malicious conspiracy to injure a dealer by refusing to deal with him and by inducing others to do likewise, when not made with the purpose of serving any legitimate interest of the conspirators, renders them liable for the damages caused if his business is ruined in consequence. Ertz v. Produce Exchange (Minn.) 90

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also BOYCOTT.

Conspiracy; combination of dealers against another; attempt to drive him out of business. 90

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

As to Rights of Colored Person, see SCHOOLS, 1.

As to Effect of Judgments in Other States, see JUDGMENT, 5.

As to Right of Fishery, see FISHERIES, 2.

As to Taking or Damaging of Property for Public Use, see EMINENT DOMAIN.

As to Rights of Criminal, see CRIMINAL LAW.

As to Suspicious Persons, see DISORDERLY PERSONS.

Decision as to, see COURTS, 5.

See also TOWN, 1, 2.

1. No legislation is necessary to the operation of Ga. Const. art. 4, § 2, ¶ 4 (Civ. Code, § 5800), prohibiting the legislature from authorizing a corporation to buy stock or shares in another company or make any contracts with it, when the effect will be to create a monopoly or lessen competition, since this provision is simply the embodiment of a principle of the common law. Trust Company of Georgia v. State (Ga.) 520

2. There is no exercise of judicial power by the legislature in a statute providing for the recovery of a penalty against a county for the death of a person caused by lynching. Champaign County v. Church (Ohio) 733

3. Legislative power is not conferred upon a commission and the executive by a statute which authorizes the commission to select school books, make contracts with the lowest bidder for obtaining them for all the schools of the state from one publisher, and perfect the details of the general plan of providing all schools with such books, and gives to the commission and the governor, as an incident to this, the authority to announce when the details have been arranged so that the law may be put into operation. Leeper v. State (Tenn.) 167

Amendments.

See also VOTERS AND ELECTIONS.

4. The question whether a proposed constitutional amendment is in conformity with the constitutional requirements in constituting but a single amendment, and also the question whether the proposition has received such a majority as the Constitution prescribes for its adoption, are judicial questions for the courts to decide, notwithstanding the fact that the legislature has declared that the amendment is adopted and that it is a part of the Constitution of the state. State ex rel. McClurg v. Powell (Miss.) 652

5. A proposed constitutional amendment providing in one proposition for the election of all judges, and fixing their terms of office, as well as for the division of the state into circuit and chancery court districts, with party nominations by districts, while it proposes to repeal Miss. Const. §§ 145, 149, 151-153, one of which provides for the appointment of supreme court judges, another fixes their term of office, another provides for appointments to fill vacancies, another for the division of the state into circuit and chancery court districts, while the other provides for the appointment of circuit and chancery court judges, is void for lack of conformity to Miss. Const. 1890, § 273, requiring amendments, if more than one shall be submitted at one time, to be submitted in such manner and form that the people may vote for or against each amendment separately. Id.

Equal protection of the laws.

See also infra, 10.

6. A right to the equal protection of the laws is not secured to a municipal corporation as against the state by the 14th Amendment to the Federal Constitution, so as to limit in any way the power of the state legislature to charge the municipality with public obligations; nor have the inhabitants in their capacity of members of such corporation any greater rights or immunities. State ex rel. Bulkeley v. Williams (Conn.) 465

Due process of law.

See also CRIMINAL LAW, 3.

7. Due process of law is denied when any particular person of a class or of a community is singled out for the imposition of restraints or burdens not imposed upon, or to be borne by, all of the class or of the community at large, unless the imposition or restraint be based upon existing distinctions that differentiate the particular individuals of the class to be affected from the body of the community. State ex rel. Wyatt v. Ashbrook (Mo.) 265

8. An ordinance prohibiting the sale of cigarettes without a license does not violate the constitutional provision as to due process of law, or any constitutional rights. Gundling v. Chicago (Ill.) 230

9. An ordinance which provides that a city shall do the work and furnish the materials for making a sewer connection up to within 3 feet of the building to be connected is void as an unreasonable invasion of the rights of property owners, although the city may properly specify the materials to be used and provide that the work shall be done only by some person licensed by the city to make such connections, and that the work shall be done under the supervision of the city inspector. Slaughter v. O'Berry (N. C.) 442

10. The free transportation of shippers of stock to and from the destination of the stock, which is required of railroad companies by Kan. Laws 1897, chap. 167, is in violation of the constitutional guaranties of due process of law and of the equal protection of the laws. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Campbell (Kan.) 251

11. A railroad company which was incorporated and acquired its property rights and franchises after the enactment of N. Y. Laws 1895, chap. 1027, requiring such companies to issue 1,000-mile tickets at reduced prices, is not deprived of property without due process of law by the enforcement of such statute. Purdy v. Erie R. Co. (N. Y.) 669

12. Property of taxpayers is not taken without due process of law by a statute imposing a penalty upon a county for lynching and authorizing its collection in the tax levy. Champaign County v. Church (Ohio) 738

13. A town is not deprived of property without due process of law by a statute making it a part of an incorporated highway or bridge district under the control of commissioners who may draw upon the town for a fixed portion of the expenses of the district. State ex rel. Bulkeley v. Williams (Conn.) 465

14. An ordinance fixing the rate per thousand gallons to be paid for discharging a sewer from private premises into a common sewer is not invalid for failure to provide for a hearing on the question as to the rate to be fixed, although there is a mere possibility that the rate fixed may in fact exceed the benefit received. Carson v. Sewerage Comrs. (Mass.) 277

Police power.

15. To sustain a statute as an exercise of the police power, the courts must be able to see that its object to some degree tends toward the prevention of some offense or manifest evil, or that it has for its aim the preservation of the public health, morals, safety, or welfare. State ex rel. Wyatt v. Ashbrook (Mo.) 265

16. In order to sustain legislative interference with the business of the citizen by virtue of the police power, it is necessary that the act should have some reasonable relation to the subjects included in such power. Chicago v. Netcher (Ill.) 261

17. A statute which nowhere attempts to protect any public interest, or defend against any public wrong, which shows upon its face that regulation is not its purpose, but that revenue or undue restriction of a business in the interest of others is the aim in view, cannot be sustained as an exercise of the police power, although it purports to be "An Act to Regulate Business and Trade." State ex rel. Wyatt v. Ashbrook (Mo.) 265

18. The constitutional guaranties of liberty and the protection of property rights are violated by an arbitrary prohibition of the sale of provisions where dry goods, clothing, jewelry, and drugs are sold, since such a prohibition is not an exercise of the police power. Chicago v. Netcher (Ill.) 261

19. The sale in one store or building under one head or unit of management, of different articles enumerated in the different classes or groups designated by the Missouri anti-department store act of May 16, 1899, cannot be deemed harmful and dangerous so as to be subject to regulation by the police power, merely because fifteen or more persons may be employed in the establishment, if it is innocent and harmless to sell articles of any one class or group, and also to sell those of different classes or groups in establishments employing less than fifteen persons. State ex rel. Wyatt v. Ashbrook (Mo.) 265

20. A statute which prohibits a person who sells an article from giving to the purchaser as part of the same transaction a stamp, coupon, or other device which will entitle him to receive from a third person some other well-defined article in addition to the one sold, is an unwarrantable interference with individual liberty guaranteed by R. I. Const. 14th Amend. § 1. State v. Dalton (R. I.) 775

21. The business of a barber involves the public health and interests to such an extent that the requirement by Minn. Gen. Laws 1897, chap. 186, of a license or certificate as a condition of carrying on the business, is a valid exercise of legislative power. State v. Zeno (Minn.) 88

22. Imposing upon mine owners the burden of paying the cost of inspection of the mines, as provided by Ill. act July 1, 1895, as amended in July, 1897, is a valid exercise of the police power which does not depend upon any constitutional grant of power to legislate concerning mines. Chicago, W. & V. Coal Co. v. People (Ill.) 554

23. No restriction on the police power of the legislature to provide for the safety of miners by means of the inspection of mines or otherwise is made by Ill. Const. art. 4, §

29, which expressly requires the legislature to pass laws for the protection of operative miners by providing for ventilation and for the construction of escapement shafts or such other appliances as may secure safety in all coal mines. Id.

Guaranty of justice.

24. The allowance of an attorney's fee in addition to costs that would otherwise be allowed by law to successful lien claimants, in pursuance of Colo. Sess. Laws 1893, chap. 117, p. 325, § 18, which provides for such allowance only to plaintiffs, is in violation of Colo. Bill of Rights, § 6, providing that courts of justice shall be open to every person, and that right and justice shall be administered without sale, denial, or delay. Davidson v. Jennings (Colo.) 340

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also DEPARTMENT STORES; MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.

Deprivation of property without due process; equal privileges and immunities of citizens. 470

Ordinance depriving persons of liberty and property without due process of law. 230

Depriving of liberty without due process of law. 222

Taking property without due process, by regulating railroad rates; equal protection of laws. 670

Due process of law in statute creating penalty; judicial powers of legislature. 740

Delegation of power of taxation; arbitrary distinction between merchandise; interference with liberty; equal privileges and immunities of citizens. 266

Wanton and unwarrantable interference with freedom of industry and rights of property. 597

Validity of classification by legislation; equal protection of laws. 590

Limits of police power. 740

Extent of police power. 555

Extent of police power; due process of law; restriction of lawful business; equal protection of laws; class legislation. 775

Regulation of business; extent of police power; interference with lawful business; limiting sales of useful and harmless merchandise. 262

Police regulation as to health; regulation of business; taking property without due process of law. 89

Corporations not citizens. 419

Corporations as persons under 14th Amendment. 251

Amendments to Constitution; validity of submission of: submitting several propositions; question of passage of amendment. 652

CONTAGIOUS DISEASES.

Of Animals, see CARRIERS, 7.

CONTEMPT.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Contempt; by disobeying void injunction. 824

By board of health in disobeying injunction. 708

CONTINUANCE.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Continuance; by withdrawal of juror. 432

CONTRACTS.

Estoppel as to Acceptance of, see ESTOPPEL, 2.

Injunction against Enforcement of, see INJUNCTION, 5.

See also HUSBAND AND WIFE, 6; PRINCIPAL AND AGENT.

1. The construction which the parties themselves place upon a contract will be adopted by the court, when its terms are uncertain. Union Trust Co. v. Richmond City R. Co. (Ind.) 41

2. A contract by which a sheriff and tax collector turns over the tax list to another person, with an agreement to give him a certain commission for collecting the taxes for certain years, is illegal and void on grounds of public policy, under N. C. Code, § 2084, which provides that the sheriff shall not "let to farm in any manner his county or any part of it." Cansler v. Penland (N. C.) 441

3. A contract by which a person agrees to draft a bill, have it introduced in the legislature, explain it to, and make arguments in its favor before, committees of the legislature, and do all things needful and proper to secure its passage, such party to receive no compensation unless the passage of the bill (an appropriation act) is procured, if successful the fees not fixed, but to be liberal,—is vicious, illegal, and void, and, in the event of the passage of the bill, there can be no recovery of a fee in a suit upon the contract, nor as upon an implied contract, nor a quantum meruit for the services performed. Richardson v. Scotts Bluff County (Neb.) 294

4. An agreement for expenses and compensation for services to influence or procure appointment to office is void. Basket v. Moss (N. C.) 842

5. The rule denying a remedy to a person in pari delicto will not prevent equitable relief against the enforcement of the power of sale in a mortgage which is against public policy because it was given in compensation for services to influence or procure appointment to a public office. Id.

6. A general assignment for creditors made by a contractor does not abrogate the contract or constitute a breach of it so as to entitle the other party to take possession of the property on which the work is being done before the expiration of the time agreed upon for performance, although the assignment contains no provisions with respect to the assignee's power to carry out contracts. Vandegrift v. Cowles Engineering Co. (N. Y.) 685

7. Taking possession of a vessel which is being built by a contractor before its completion or the expiration of the time therefor, merely because the contractor has made an assignment for creditors, though it might be treated by his assignee as a trespass, may be regarded instead, at his option, as an acceptance under the contract. Id.

8. A penalty which by the terms of a contract is to be paid only by a deduction from the final payment cannot be recovered when no part of that payment has been made. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Contracts; for services in procuring legislation; ratification.	204
Of public, with monopoly.	280
Statute of frauds as to contract for timber.	840
Illegality in part; violating public policy; creating monopoly.	563
In violation of public policy.	441
Waiver of performance by breach.	687
Injunction against enforcing illegal contract.	842
Impairment of obligation of.	469

CONVERSION.

See TROVER.

CORPORATIONS.

As to Banks, see BANKS.

Injunction to Enforce Rights of Stockholder, see INJUNCTION, 6.

See also ASSOCIATIONS; CONFLICT OF LAWS, 2; PLEDGE; STREET RAILWAYS.

1. A constitutional provision against granting to any corporation any special or exclusive privilege is not infringed by an act allowing trustees, etc., to charge the estate a reasonable sum which they may have paid "to a company" authorized by law to do so, for becoming surety on their bonds. Re Clark (Pa.) 587

2. Power to authorize the purchase by a corporation of shares or stock in another corporation is denied to the general assembly by Ga. Const. art. 4, § 2, ¶ 4 (Civ. Code, § 5800), only when such purchases tend to create a monopoly or lessen competition. Trust Company of Georgia v. State (Ga.) 520

See also CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 1.

3. A combination of railroads is not in violation of Ga. Const. art. 4, § 2, ¶ 4 (Civ. Code, § 5800), prohibiting a corporation to buy shares or stock in, or make contracts with, any other corporation which shall have the effect of creating a monopoly or lessening competition, if, as a general result of the combination, the public at large, as distinguished from the people of special or particular communities, are in consequence benefited. State v. Central of Georgia R. Co. (Ga.) 351

4. As incident to a right to inspect books of a corporation is the right to have such inspection by a proper agent, and to take copies from such books and records. Cincinnati Volksblatt Co. v. Hoffmeister (Ohio) 732

5. The right to inspect books of a corporation does not depend upon the motive or purpose of the stockholder in demanding such inspection; and a petition which shows that the plaintiff is a stockholder, that he has requested the defendant to allow him to inspect the books and records of the corporation, and fix a reasonable time for the same, which request has been refused, states a cause of action. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also SURETY COMPANIES.

Corporations; combination of; owning stock of others; acts not authorized by charter. 520

Right to inspect books of. 732

Purchase of stock in other company; combination of competing railroads. 351

Illegality of contract against sale of stock. 568

Conflict of laws as to limitation of actions against stockholders. 637

Foreign; imposing burdens on. 419

COSTS.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Costs; on withdrawal of juror. 432

COTENANCY.

See HUSBAND AND WIFE, 1.

COUNTIES.

Compelling Payment of Penalty for Lynching, see EMINENT DOMAIN, 9.
See also BRIDGES, 9.

A county may be liable for the death of a person by mob violence under Ohio act April 10, 1896, although the individuals composing the mob had assembled without any unlawful purpose and had not afterwards specifically agreed to be a mob. Champaign County v. Church (Ohio) 738

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Counties; liability of, for mobs. 739

COURTS.

Passing on Constitutional Amendment, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 4, 5.

Constitutional Provisions as to, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 24.

See also RECEIVERS, 3.

1. The failure of the judges to apportion the labor of holding the courts among themselves, and issue an order specifying the terms to be held by each judge, as required by Ohio Rev. Stat. § 468, will not invalidate an indictment found and returned at a term held by one of them in his district. State v. Thomas (Ohio) 459

2. The limitation of liability of the owners of vessels, for maritime losses, by U. S. Rev. Stat. 1878, § 4283, may be administered in an action at law against them in a state court to recover for death caused by a collision. Loughin v. McCauley (Pa.) 33

3. State courts are not within the provision of the Federal statute for raising revenue to meet war expenditures that no instrument not stamped as required by the provisions of the statute shall be used in evidence in any court. Knox v. Rossi (Nev.) 305

4. The jurisdiction of the mayor over violation of an ordinance will not be defeated by the fact that a provision in the ordinance attempts to make his jurisdiction exclusive, if the laws give him at least a co-ordinate jurisdiction. State v. Higga (N. C.) 446

5. Doubt as to the constitutionality of an ordinance relating to the construction of a public improvement will be resolved in favor of the property rights of individuals as against the power of the city to invade them. Slaughter v. O'Berry (N. C.) 442

6. The construction given by the highest court of a state to a statute of limitations of that state will be followed by the Federal courts. Brunswick Terminal Co. v. National Bank of Baltimore (C. C. App. 4th C.) 625

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Courts; considering motives of legislature; passing on police laws. 588

What is jurisdiction; power to review legislative action; review of acts of municipal council. 824

Inquiring into effect and character of statute. 596

Power to consider policy, expediency, or propriety of statutes. 741

Rule upholding statutes. 775

Determining amendment to Constitution. 654

Federal; following state decisions. 320

Administration of Federal laws in state courts: (I.) Introductory; (II.) civil laws; (III.) criminal and penal laws. 33

Of state; jurisdiction over actions arising on navigable waters. 34

Terms of; judges of. 460

COVENANT.

1. A restriction as to the building line, inserted in a deed, cannot inure to the benefit of a prior grantee of another lot on the same street, which is conveyed subject to the same restriction, when the grantor did not impose any servitude upon the land he retained and the restrictions were not part of a general plan or scheme for the benefit of all the purchasers. Summers v. Beeler (Md.) 54

2. A general plan or scheme for the benefit of all the purchasers of lots sold on the same street as shown by a recorded plat does not appear from the fact that most of the lots are sold subject to the same restriction as to building line, where no restrictions are shown by the plat and none are imposed on some of the lots that are first sold, while purchasers of some of the other lots have violated the restrictions upon them, 48 L. R. A.

and such violations have not been resisted by other purchasers. Id.

3. A covenant in a deed of land for a railroad right of way, that certain trains shall be run on the road to be built thereon, which is the chief consideration of the conveyance, and in default of which for six months a forfeiture is provided, is a covenant running with the land, on which an action may be maintained against a subsequent purchaser of the railroad who fails to run such trains, notwithstanding the fact that the covenant had been broken by the original grantee before such transfer, and although the covenant does not expressly refer to assigns. Doty v. Chattanooga Union R. Co. (Tenn.) 160

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Covenant; as to things in esse and things not in esse; running with land; as to operation of railroad. 160

Restricting building line. 54

CREDITORS' BILL.

The superior diligence of a junior judgment creditor in bringing a suit to uncover land which had been conveyed after the judgments, in fraud of creditors, will entitle him to the proceeds. Dooster v. Manistee Nat. Bank (Ark.) 334

CRIMINAL LAW.

See also DISORDERLY PERSONS; HABEAS CORPUS; INJUNCTION, 1.

1. A discharge of a jury after they have been out for some time and their foreman has stated in the presence of all, without dissent by any, that there is no probability of their agreeing upon a verdict, will not sustain a plea of former jeopardy. State v. Hager (Kan.) 254

2. A hearing upon a plea of former jeopardy alone is not itself a jeopardy, and a discharge upon such a hearing is not an acquittal, since such plea does not involve the merits of the case. Id.

3. A sentence of conviction imposed under authority of Mass. Pub. Stat. chap. 187, § 13, after the reversal of a former judgment, on the application of the convict, because it was imposed under a statute that was passed after the offense was committed and was therefore unconstitutional so far as it related to that offense, does not violate the constitutional provision against double jeopardy, or abridge the privileges and immunities of the accused as a citizen, or deprive him of his liberty without due process of law, although he had partly served the invalid sentence before it was reversed, including one day's solitary confinement, to which each of the sentences condemned him. Com. v. Murphy (Mass.) 393

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Criminal law; effect of intent without unlawful act. 222

Former jeopardy in case jury was discharged. 255

Resentence after serving part of invalid sentence; double jeopardy. 394

CROPS.

See EMBLEMENTS, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

CUSTOM.

See also CARRIERS, 3, 4; EVIDENCE, 10, 16; TRIAL, 4.

Custom cannot give a public right to fish in a pond on private land because a common-law custom, as distinguished from a usage of trade, must be immemorial, and in New Jersey is therefore impossible, because a custom laid in the public is had for universality and because a right to take profit from the land of another cannot be acquired by custom. Albright v. Cortright (N. J. Err. & App.) 616

DAMAGES.

1. The measure of damages in ejectment for withholding possession of land is the actual rental value of the land, irrespective of what the defendant may have gathered from it. Credle v. Ayers (N. C.) 751

2. On condemnation of a railroad right of way after the railroad has been built on a strip of mortgaged land conveyed for that purpose by the mortgagor, and the entire premises, including the railroad, thereafter sold on foreclosure, the purchaser is entitled only to the value of the land occupied by the railroad, irrespective of the improvements. St. Louis, K. & S. W. R. Co. v. Nyce (Kan.) 241

3. The damages recoverable in trover by one who has retained title to the property as security for purchase money are limited to the balance due him thereon, less any depreciation in its value by the use which he had authorized. Wood v. Nichols (R. I.) 773

4. Fifteen thousand dollars is excessive to award an employee as damages for injuries resulting in severe pain for several months and in the loss of an eye, where he is not wholly incapacitated for labor, and the interest on the amount at 4 per cent would produce an income greater than his earning capacity before the injury. Ribich v. Lake Superior Smelting Co. (Mich.) 649

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Damages; compensation in eminent domain case; value of railroad previously built without right. 243

DEATH.

Liability of County for Killing by Mob, see COUNTIES.

Compelling Counties to Pay Damages for Lynching, see EMINENT DOMAIN, 9.

The provision of a state Constitution against limitation of liability for injuries resulting in death cannot prevail over the act of Congress permitting limitation of liability for maritime losses. Loughin v. McCauley (Pa.) 33
48 L. R. A.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Death; conflict of laws as to limitation of actions for. 639

DEEDS.

See also CHAMPERTY; VENDOR AND PURCHASER.

An instrument conveying a present interest from the grantor to her children, but postponing their enjoyment until after her death, is a conveyance, and is not testamentary in character. Love v. Blauw (Kan.) 257

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Deeds; conditions in, as to building line. 54

Construction of; granting life estate; of land held adversely. 537

DE FACTO.

See OFFICERS, 2, 3; RELIGIOUS SOCIETIES, 2.

DEFENSES.

See ACTION OR SUIT, 3.

DEFINITIONS.

Voluntary Exposure to Unnecessary Danger, see INSURANCE, 7.

Provisions, see MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 6.

Grain, see WAREHOUSEMEN, 1.

DELEGATION OF POWER.

See MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 8.

DEMURRER.

See PLEADING, 7.

DEPARTMENT STORES.

Constitutionality of Regulation of, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 18, 19.

See also LICENSE, 2; MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 9-11; STATUTES, 1.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Department stores; unconstitutional ordinance respecting. 262

Legal restrictions on. 261

Unconstitutional statute as to. 266

DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION.

A widow's release by an antenuptial contract, of all her claims on the estate of her husband, in consideration of a specified sum, does not preclude her from being deemed his widow, or entitle the descendants of his deceased mother to take his estate, under Ill. Rev. Stat. chap. 39, § 2, providing that, when there is no widow or children of the decedent, the estate shall go to his mother and her children and their descendants. Hudnall v. Ham (Ill.) 557

DISORDERLY PERSONS.

A conviction and sentence on the charge of being "a suspicious person" under the act of Congress of July 8, 1898, applicable to the District of Columbia, when the suspicion of which the accused is the object is wholly undefined and in no manner connected with any criminal act or conduct, either past or that might occur in the future, is in violation of U. S. Const. Amends. 4 and 8, prohibiting unreasonable searches and seizures and cruel and unusual punishments. Stoutenburgh v. Frazier (D. C. App.) 220

DOGS.

Opinion of Value of, see EVIDENCE, 7.
See also ANIMALS; TRIAL, 5.

DRAINS.

Vapors from, see ACTION OR SUIT, 4.
Constitutionality of Statutes as to, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 9, 14.
Easements of Drainage, see EASEMENTS, 2-5.
Pollution of Waters by, as a Taking of Property, see EMINENT DOMAIN.
Injunction against Discharging into Streams, see INJUNCTION, 7-10.
Right to Discharge into Stream, see WATERS, 3-8.
Pollution of Waters by, see WATERS, NOTES AND BRIEFS.
See also LIMITATION OF ACTIONS, 1; MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 2; PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS, 10.

Merely granting to a city authority to construct sewers for the convenience and benefit of its inhabitants does not necessarily make their use a governmental use in the sense that there can be no remedy, unless given by statute, for consequential injuries resulting therefrom. Platt Bros. & Co. v. Waterbury (Conn.) 691

DUE PROCESS OF LAW.

See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 6-14.

EASEMENTS.

1. A right to fish from a boat in water that covers the land of another person cannot be claimed as an easement because an easement is a privilege without profit. Albright v. Cortright (N. J. Err. & App.) 616

See also FISHERIES, 3.

2. There can be no right by prescription to maintain a nuisance by the pollution of a river so as to carry filth and noxious substances to the premises of a lower proprietor, thereby endangering his health, and destroying the value of his property. Platt Bros. & Co. v. Waterbury (Conn.) 691

3. A prescriptive right to discharge sewers into a stream will not arise from the mere fact that they are so discharged for more than the statutory period of prescription, "without objection or hindrance," unless it is shown that the user was under claim of right and exercised adversely, and not with permission. Smith v. Sedalia (Mo.) 711

4. The maintenance of private sewers discharged into a stream, causing some pollution, but not creating a nuisance, will not be sufficient to create an easement by prescription. L. R. A.

scription for the discharge into the stream of public sewers which cause much greater pollution of the stream and thereby create a nuisance. Id.

5. A prescriptive right to pollute a river in a certain manner does not justify pollution thereof by an additional and different use. Platt Bros. & Co. v. Waterbury (Conn.) 691

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Easement; covenant creating, as to building line. 54

EJECTMENT.

See also DAMAGES, 1; EVIDENCE, 14.

Meane profits are recoverable from a defaulting vendee in a land contract for the time that he withholds possession of the premises pending an action of ejectment against him, in which he gives a defense bond under N. C. Code, § 237. Credle v. Ayers (N. C.) 751

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Ejectment; damages on loss of title pending suit. 751

Interest of possessor. 831

ELEVATORS.

See EVIDENCE, 17; MASTER AND SERVANT, 13, 16.

EMBLEMENTS.

See also LIFE TENANTS, 3.

The right to harvest growing crops on land subject to a life lease is preserved to the administrator of the life tenant, or to a lessee of the life tenant, by Ohio Rev. Stat. §§ 6026, 6027, in case of the death of the life tenant after crops have been sown. Noble v. Tyler (Ohio) 735

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Emblements; right to, on termination of tenancy. 736

EMINENT DOMAIN.

As to Consequential Injuries, see also DRAINS.

See also DAMAGES.

1. The lessening of the value of an estate by destruction of the grass and the creation of some personal discomfort to the owner by the discharge of sewage thereon is not such a taking of his property as entitles him to compensation, where the damage results from the discharge of sewage into a stream by a city in a skilful manner and in conformity to statute, since the damage is merely consequential. Valparaiso v. Hagen (Ind.) 707

But see next case.

2. Property of riparian owners is taken for public use within the meaning of a constitutional provision as to eminent domain, when they are damaged by the pollution of the waters above the ebb and flow of the tide, but not when the water is polluted at a place where the tide ebbs and flows. Grey

ex rel. Simmons v. Paterson (N. J. Err. & App.) 717

3. Damages resulting to the property of riparian owners by the discharge of city sewage into a stream in a skilful manner and in conformity to statute are merely consequential, and give them no right to compensation. Valparaiso v. Hagen (Ind.) 707

But see cases following.

4. Damage to a riparian owner by noxious and filthy substances deposited on his premises in consequence of the pollution of the river by sewers emptying into it above his land is not a mere consequential damage, but a direct appropriation of his well-recognized property rights which are within the guaranty of the Constitution. Platt Bros. & Co. v. Waterbury (Conn.) 691

5. The pollution of a river by city sewers, though it may become justifiable when done for a public purpose, is subject to payment of compensation for the invasion of the property rights of riparian owners. Id.

6. Lack of charter authority to condemn the property rights of a riparian owner will not relieve a city from liability to make compensation for damage to such rights by the unlawful pollution of a river by sewers. Id.

7. The facts that sewers are necessary to a city, and that a statute directs that they shall follow as near as practicable the natural drainage of the country, do not justify the city in discharging sewers into a stream to the damage of a landowner, without just compensation to him, as required by a constitutional provision against taking or damaging private property without just compensation. Smith v. Sedalia (Mo.) 711

8. The destruction of oysters by the casting of sewage upon them, though the sewer was constructed by a city under legislative authority, is as clearly a taking of the property of the owner of the oyster bed, for which he has a constitutional right to compensation, as if there had been a physical removal and conversion of the oysters. Huffmire v. Brooklyn (N. Y.) 421

9. There is no taking of private property within the meaning of the constitutional provisions as to eminent domain by a statute making a county liable to a penalty, to be collected by taxation, for the death of a person caused by mob violence. Champaign County v. Church (Ohio) 738

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Eminent domain; taking or damaging property by discharging sewers into waters. 698

Taking property without just compensation for public use. 251

Compensation for consequential injuries. 714

Liability for consequential damages on account of public work. 421

EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY.

See INSURANCE, 3, 4.

48 L. R. A.

ENTIRETIES.

See HUSBAND AND WIFE, 1.

EQUITY.

Power over Trusts, see TRUSTS.

Setting up unconstitutionality of a statute in defense of a criminal information or indictment gives an adequate remedy at law against the statute, which will preclude equitable relief, where it can be enforced only by such criminal proceedings. State ex rel. Kenamore v. Wood (Mo.) 596

ERROR.

See APPEAL AND ERROR.

ESTOPPEL.

See also BONDS, 3, 4.

1. The mere silence of a person owning a one-fourth interest in a mine, with respect to his lack of interest in a contract for work and materials made by lessees of the mine, will not estop him from denying that his interest is subject to a lien for such work and materials, although, as an employee of the lessees, he may have given directions as to the performance of such contract, where the nature of the interests of all parties clearly appeared upon the records. Davidson v. Jennings (Colo.) 340

2. One who takes possession of a vessel which a contractor is building is estopped from denying that he has accepted it under the contract, when he could lawfully take it only by accepting it. Vandegrift v. Cowles Engineering Co. (N. Y.) 685

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Estoppel; of surety. 515

To contest public improvement. 285

To deny regularity or validity of contract. 294

EVIDENCE.

See also BONDS, 3; COURTS, 3; GRAND JURY, 1; PLEADING, 7.

Judicial notice.

1. Judicial notice may be taken of the fact that the people come in contact with and engage the services of barbers, and that a spreading of diseases may be caused by uncleanliness or incompetency of barbers. State v. Zeno (Minn.) 88

2. The court does not judicially know that it is important or advantageous to a shipper or the carrier for the former to accompany his stock to market. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Campbell (Kan.) 251

3. It is matter of common knowledge, of which the courts will take notice, that oil and gas lie far below the surface of the ground, and may flow unrestrained if the owner of adjoining land bores a well down to the stratum which holds them, so that they may be taken from the land without any compensation. Huggins v. Daley (C. C. App. 4th C.) 320

4. The court cannot take judicial knowledge of the history of railroad lines operated by a particular railroad company. Purdy v. Erie R. Co. (N. Y.) 669

Presumptions and burden of proof.

See also GRAND JURY, 1.

5. The burden of proof is upon the plaintiff in a libel suit to establish actual malice, where the communication is of a privileged character. Redgate v. Roush (Kan.) 236

6. The burden of proof that death by accident was within an exception in an accident insurance policy is upon the insurer after proof of accidental death. Fidelity & C. Co. v. Sittig (Ill.) 359

Opinions.

7. The value of a dog which has no market value may be shown by proving the pedigree, characteristics, and qualities of the dog, and then proving by witnesses who know these things their opinions as to the value. Hodges v. Causey (Miss.) 95

Declarations.

8. A conversation with an attorney upon a railway train with reference to a contemplated law suit, in which an opinion is sought and obtained from the attorney, but without any retainer or payment of any fee, and although there has been no relation of attorney and client between the parties, constitutes a privileged communication within the protection of Wis. Rev. Stat. 1898, § 4076. Bruley v. Garvin (Wis.) 839

9. Evidence that a foreman refused to take charge of premises because of a stench is admissible to prove that fact, though not to prove the fact of the stench. Platt Bros. & Co. v. Waterbury (Conn.) 691

Relevancy.

10. Evidence that it is not customary in factories to have collars with projecting set screws placed on revolving shafts near pulleys, where it is necessary for employees to go frequently, is not admissible to show the duty of a particular employer towards his employees. Ford v. Mt. Tom Sulphite Pulp Co. (Mass.) 96

11. Evidence that a person refused to work on certain premises because of a stench is not inadmissible because the refusal was made pending an action, although that fact might affect its weight. Platt Bros. & Co. v. Waterbury (Conn.) 691

12. Evidence that a city at a special meeting voted not to accept a certain act which provided for its acceptance at a meeting held for that purpose is inadmissible for the purpose of proving the construction of the act. Id.

13. Evidence of the acts of a city with respect to the construction of sewers is inadmissible for the purpose of showing that it was compelled to build a sewer. Id.

14. Evidence of the rental value of adjoining farms is not admissible on the question of the amount recoverable as mesne profits for withholding possession of land. Credle v. Ayers (N. C.) 751

15. An estoppel to deny liability under a contract made by others cannot be proved 48 L. R. A.

under a pleading which merely avers the execution of a contract. Davidson v. Jennings (Colo.) 340

Weight; sufficiency.

16. Proof of usage of passengers to carry packages of merchandise into a passenger car must not only be clear and explicit, but also distinguish it from mere acts of accommodation. Runyan v. Central R. Co. (N. J. Sup.) 744

17. That failure to comply with an ordinance requiring the openings into elevator shafts to be kept closed when not in use was negligence, and was the proximate cause of the death of a person who fell down the shaft, may be found from evidence showing that such person, who was attempting to ascend on the elevator, was required to stand near the edge to operate it, and that the opening was protected only by a bar across, while the lining of the elevator shaft made a horizontal edge above the opening, so that one standing near the opening might come in contact with such bar or edge and be dragged from the elevator and precipitated down the shaft. Dallemand v. Saalfeldt (Ill.) 753

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Evidence; judicial notice of lake. 617

Presumption as to probate of will in other state. 136

Presumption as to due care in employing servants. 377

Effect of omission of stamp upon use of instrument as. 305

Of title by possession of land. 831

Proof of circumstances as basis of inference. 175

EXECUTION.

See LEVY AND SEIZURE.

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

See also APPEAL AND ERROR, 6; TRIAL, 6; TRUSTS, 5.

The failure to apply for an extension of a vacancy permit for premises that are still vacant at the expiration of the time for which such a permit has been granted, with an agreement by the insurer to extend the time on application therefor, constitutes negligence on the part of an executor or administrator with the will annexed, who is in possession of the premises and of the policy of insurance thereon, which will make him liable in damages in case the property is destroyed by fire, and the insurance cannot be collected because of the failure to procure the extension of the vacancy permit. Henderson Trust Co. v. Stuart (Ky.) 49

EXEMPTION.

See LEVY AND SEIZURE, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

EXPLOSION.

See TRIAL, 15.

FACTORS.

See TRIAL, 12.

FEDERAL COURT.

See COURTS, 6.

FEDERAL LAWS.

See COURTS.

FINDINGS.

See APPEAL AND ERROR, 8.

FISHERIES.

Damage to, by Sewage, see EMINENT DOMAIN, 8.

See also CUSTOM.

1. The common law gives no right to fish in a pond on private land of another person, even if the fish are the property of the state, when they cannot be reached without trespassing on private property. Albright v. Cortright (N. J. Err. & App.) 616

2. A license to trespass on private property to fish in a pond which has been stocked by the public is not given by the New Jersey statutes concerning fish and game, and could not be given by the legislature. Id.

3. A person cannot claim by prescription merely, as one of the public, a right to fish on private land of another, because the public cannot prescribe. Id.

See also EASEMENTS, 1.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Fisheries; rights of public in; in tidal waters; common right. 617

FIXTURES.

See also MORTGAGE, 3.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Fixtures; railroad as trade fixture on land. 243

FLOOD.

See MASTER AND SERVANT, 5; TRIAL, 11.

FORECLOSURE.

See MORTGAGE, 3.

FOREIGN CORPORATIONS.

See CONFLICT OF LAWS, 2.

FORFEITURE.

See MINES, 3.

FORMER JEOPARDY.

See CRIMINAL LAW, 1.

FRAUD AND FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES.

By False Certificate, see BANKS, 1.

See also JUDGMENT, 4.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Fraud; liability of bank for misrepresentation in reports. 514

Necessity of bad motive; representations as to third party. 212

FROGS.

See MASTER AND SERVANT, 12; NEGLIGENCE, 1.

48 L. R. A.

GAMBLING.NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Gambling; injunction against enforcement of contract of. 844

GARNISHMENT.

A debt due from an insurance company for loss in another state has no situs in a third state, so as to sustain a garnishment there by a creditor of the insured, merely because the insurance company has appointed an agent in that state on whom process can be served, in pursuance of the state statutes as a condition of the right to do business therein. Strause Bros. v. Aetna Ins. Co. (N. C.) 452

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Garnishment; of debt for insurance; situs of. 453

GAS.

See EVIDENCE, 3; MINES, 2-4.

GRAIN.

See WAREHOUSEMEN, 1.

GRAND JURY.

1. The records of the court need not show how or by whom grand jurors were selected and drawn, as the presumption is that that duty was regularly performed by the proper officers. State v. Thomas (Ohio) 459

2. It is not necessary that a foreman be again appointed for a grand jury or the oath readministered to him or to the other members as a body, where, after the grand jury have been sworn, a member is discharged on account of sickness and another person having the legal qualification is sworn in his stead, as provided by Ohio Rev. Stat. § 7202. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Grand jury; organization of; failure to challenge. 460

GUARANTY.

See SURETY COMPANIES.

GUARD RAIL.

See MASTER AND SERVANT, 12; NEGLIGENCE, 1.

HABEAS CORPUS.

A person may be discharged on habeas corpus from a judgment and sentence under an act of Congress which is unconstitutional or so indefinite as to the offense charged as to be void and without effect. Stoutenburgh v. Frazier (D. C. App.) 220

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Habeas corpus; not to be used as writ of error; scope of writ. 220

HAWKERS.

See PEDDLERS.

HEALTH.

Police Regulation of, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 21.

HEIRS.

As Parties, see ACTION OR SUIT, 8.

HIGHWAYS.

See also BRIDGES, 1, 5; PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS, 3-5, 14.

1. An indictable nuisance is created by a bay window which extends 4 feet and 7 inches over a street, at a point 8 feet above the ground, although it does not interfere with travel on the highway, where the statute declares that a building, structure, or fence shall be deemed a public nuisance if "erected or continued upon or over any highway so as to obstruct the same or lessen the full breadth thereof." State v. Kean (N. H.) 102

2. An ordinance making it a penal offense to maintain a sign suspended or projecting over a sidewalk is not included in charter power to open streets and keep streets and sidewalks free and clear from obstructions, and is unreasonable, oppressive, and void as applied to a sign which does not impede, delay, obstruct, or in any way endanger the use of the sidewalk. State v. Higgs (N. C.) 446

3. The lack of barriers on the side of approaches to a bridge will not make a municipality liable for injuries caused by a team going off the bank, when the roadway was wide enough for two teams to pass without difficulty and the proximate cause of the accident was the fact that the horse became frightened and so unmanageable that the driver could not keep him within the limits of the road. Bell v. Wayne (Mich.) 644

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Highways; encroachment on, by signs.

446

Liability for changing grade.

853

Liability for defects in; injury to runaway horse.

644

HOLIDAYS.

An indictment is not invalid because found by a grand jury sworn and impaneled on the statutory holiday known as Labor Day, in the absence of any statutory provision that the courts shall not sit on a holiday. State v. Thomas (Ohio) 459

HUSBAND AND WIFE.

See also JUDGMENT, 6, 7.

1. An estate by entireties, and not one of joint tenancy, is created by a deed made to husband and wife "jointly," and the word "jointly" will be construed as surplusage. Simons v. Bollinger (Ind.) 234

2. A woman's mere ignorance of the rule of law that marriage will revoke her intended husband's will is not sufficient to overturn an antenuptial settlement by which she 48 L. R. A.

agrees to permit his property to go as provided in the will. Hudnall v. Ham (Ill.) 557

3. An antenuptial contract by which a wife agrees, in consideration of a certain sum of money, to release all her interest in her husband's estate in order that it may pass by certain provisions of his will, with a covenant not to interfere in any way with the disposition of the property made by the will, will preclude her from contesting the right of the beneficiaries under the will on the ground that the will was revoked by the marriage,—especially when she has ratified the contract after her husband's death by accepting the consideration agreed upon. Id.

4. A binding judgment against defendant in a divorce proceeding is authorized by his voluntary appearance, without reservation and without objection to jurisdiction, seeking advantage of the decree in opposition to an application for amendment of the decree so as to allow alimony, although it is void as to him for want of service of process. Lynde v. Lynde (N. Y.) 679

5. The remarriage of a divorced woman to one whose ability to support her is unquestionable will prevent the further application for her benefit as alimony of the income of a testamentary trust instituted for the support of the husband from whom she was divorced. Wetmore v. Wetmore (N. Y.) 666

6. A contract by which a husband agrees to pay certain moneys to his wife in discharge of his obligation to support her is not against public policy, when made, not for the purpose of a voluntary separation, but after a separation has actually occurred on account of the misconduct of one of the parties which justified it. Henderson v. Henderson (Or.) 766

7. A decree based on a post-nuptial agreement by which a wife is given a certain sum per month for her maintenance constitutes a contract which cannot be modified by the court on account of a change in the husband's financial condition, so as to reduce the amount payable, without the wife's consent. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Husband and wife; injunction against enforcing invalid contracts relating to marriage. 842

Estates by entireties; how created. 234

Validity of contracts for support on separation. 767

INCOME.

Of Life Tenant, see LIFE TENANTS, 1.

INCOMPETENT PERSONS.

See LEVY AND SEIZURE.

INCONSISTENT DEFENSES.

See PLEADING.

INDICTMENT.

See COURTS, 1; GRAND JURY; HOLIDAY.

INFANTS.

See also UNBORN CHILDREN, TRUSTS, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

1. Nonresident infants are not bound by a judgment settling their rights in real estate belonging to a partnership of which their deceased father was a member, entered before the service of summons by publication was complete, so that there was no jurisdiction to appoint a guardian ad litem for them. Darrow v. Calkins (N. Y.) 299

2. An allowance necessary for the maintenance of an infant may be ordered by a court of equity out of the income of a trust in the residue of an estate created by a will giving the trustee discretion to apply a portion of such income to the education of the infant, but making no provision for his maintenance, where the mother of the infant is the only other person entitled to any part of the income, and she joins in a request for the allowance. Pitts v. Rhode Island Hospital Trust Co. (R. I.) 783

INJUNCTION.

Appeal from, see APPEAL AND ERROR, 10.

Against Enforcing Illegal Contract, see CONTRACTS, 5.

See also EQUITY.

1. An injunction against the enforcement of a statute requiring the inspection of beer cannot be granted on the ground that the statute is unconstitutional, where the statute is enforceable only by criminal proceedings, since equity has no jurisdiction to enjoin criminal prosecutions. State ex rel. Kenamore v. Wood (Mo.) 596

2. An injunction to prevent the consolidation of competing street railways in violation of the Constitution may be granted without compelling a resort to the harsher method of forfeiting the charters. Trust Company of Georgia v. State (Ga.) 520

3. An injunction against the passage of an ordinance, within the general power of the municipality, creating a contract between a city and a street-railway company, is void for want of jurisdiction, whether the ordinance is authorized by law or not, since the passage of such an ordinance is a legislative act which the court has no power to supervise. State ex rel. Rose v. Superior Court of Milwaukee County (Wis.) 819

4. Failure to submit to a committee an amendment to an ordinance as originally proposed does not constitute any ground on which a court of equity can grant an injunction against passing the ordinance. Id.

5. An injunction may issue against the exercise of the power of sale under a mortgage which is void as against public policy. Basket v. Moss (N. C.) 842

6. Injunction is the proper form of remedy to enforce the right of a stockholder in a private corporation, given by Ohio Rev. Stat. § 3254, to inspect the books and records of the corporation. Cincinnati Volksblatt Co. v. Hoffmeister (Ohio) 732
48 L. R. A.

7. An injunction to protect riparian proprietors against the pollution of a river by city sewers cannot be refused because of the possibility of future legislative action respecting a plan of sewerage. Platt Bros. & Co. v. Waterbury (Conn.) 691

8. Riparian owners having no title to the bed of a stream where the tide ebbs and flows are not entitled to an injunction against a city on account of the pollution of the stream. Grey ex rel. Simmons v. Paterson (N. J. Err. & App.) 717

9. By reason of the great injury which would fall upon a city by restraining the continuous use of its sewerage system, and the acquiescence of riparian owners above where the tide flows, where their injury is comparatively small, it would be inequitable to grant them an injunction against draining sewage into the river. Id.

10. A city cannot be enjoined from discharging sewage into a stream, when it acts skillfully and in conformity to statute, and the stream constitutes the only natural and reasonably possible line of drainage. Valparaiso v. Hagen (Ind.) 707

See also EMINENT DOMAIN AND WATERS.

11. An injunction against a wrongful assessment for the grading and paving of an alley, where the work had been legally authorized, should not include an order for the restoration of the alley to its original condition, but should extend only to a stay of proceedings under the invalid assessment, and under Wis. Rev. Stat. 1898, § 1210c, the court may direct a reassessment. Kersten v. Milwaukee (Wis.) 851

12. The remedy by appeal from a wrongful assessment under the charter of Milwaukee, Wisconsin, subchap. 7, § 11, is not exclusive of a remedy in equity, where the assessment is shown to be arbitrary and fraudulent. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Injunction; against nuisance. 717,722

Against nuisance by polluting waters. 700

Against draining sewage into stream. 707

Against passage of ordinance. 824

Against violation of law by corporation; against boycott. 569

Against unlawful public improvement. 854

Mandatory; to enforce right to inspect books. 732

To prevent consolidation of railroads. 520

Allowing injunction, in favor of party in pari delicto, against enforcing or otherwise proceeding with illegal contract:—(I.) Introductory; (II.) contracts for assistance in obtaining office; (III.) contracts as to confederate money; (IV.) contracts relating to marriage: (a) in general; (b) marriage brokerage bonds; (V.) contracts for illicit intercourse; (VI.) betting and gambling contracts: (a) in general; (b) in case of assignment; (c) relief at law generally; (d) judgments; (VII.) contracts for compounding crime; (VIII.) miscellaneous. 842

INSANE PERSONS.

See LEVY AND SEIZURE.

INSOLVENCY.

Effect of, on Contract, see CONTRACTS, 6, 7.

See also BANKS, 7.

INSPECTION.

Of Books of Corporation, see CORPORATIONS, 4, 5; INJUNCTION, 6.

Of Mines, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 22, 23.

See also CLOUD ON TITLE; MINES, 1.

INSPECTION LAWS.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Inspection laws; destructive of property. 597

INSURANCE.

See also EVIDENCE, 6; EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS; GARNISHMENT; TRIAL, 6, 13.

1. The construction most favorable to the assured is to be adopted in case of doubt as to the proper construction of an insurance policy. Fenton v. Fidelity & C. Co. (Or.) 770

2. A member of a mutual benefit society cannot be compelled to pay an assessment, where his contract does not provide that he shall pay assessments or make any provision as to nonpayment, except that his certificate shall be forfeited therefor. Gibson v. Megrew (Ind.) 362

3. An assignment of a claim on an employer's liability policy for imperative surgical relief furnished to an injured employee under an emergency clause in the policy, though made before there has been any judgment establishing the claim, is not made invalid by a clause in the policy giving the insurer the right to defend actions on claims for damages. Fenton v. Fidelity & C. Co. (Or.) 770

4. An indemnity against liability for damages on which an assignable cause of action will arise as soon as the accident occurs, although the assured is insolvent and cannot pay the claim, is created by a policy insuring an employer against liability for damage through injury to employees, and providing that the insurer shall have immediate notice of an accident and exclusive power to settle and adjust the claim. Id.

5. The amputation of about one fourth of a person's foot does not give any right to the full amount of insurance on the ground that all the use of the foot is lost, under a by-law of a mutual benefit association providing for full payment in case of the "amputation of a limb (whole hand or foot)," as the word "whole" applies to the foot as well as the hand, and the injury insured against is not the loss of the use of a hand or foot but the amputation of a limb that should include a whole hand or a whole foot. Fuller v. Locomotive Engineers' Mut. L. & A. Ins. Assn. (Mich.) 86

6. The attempt of a traveling salesman to get upon a train which is already in motion is not, as matter of law, a voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger, within the meaning of an exception in an insurance policy. Fidelity & C. Co. v. Sittig (Ill.) 359

7. A voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger within the meaning of an insurance policy does not mean simply a voluntary performance of the act which results in injury, but also that it is performed with a consciousness of the danger, or that the danger is so apparent that a man of ordinary intelligence would under the circumstances necessarily know it. Id.

8. The acceptance of a proposition to buy real property, which is definite in nothing except the amount to be paid, does not defeat insurance thereon under a policy providing that it shall be void if the interest of the assured becomes other than "the entire, unconditional, unencumbered, and sole ownership." Arkansas Fire Ins. Co. v. Wilson (Ark.) 510

9. The rights of one whose property is destroyed by fire after an oral contract to insure it, but before a policy therefor is issued, are subject to the provisions of the standard policy prescribed by law, and he can recover only by compliance with the conditions required by such policy, including that as to furnishing proofs of loss within a specified time. Hicks v. British America Assur. Co. (N. Y.) 424

10. The value of property destroyed by fire after an oral contract to insure it, but before the issuance of a policy thereon, cannot be recovered as damages for breach of the agreement to issue the policy, where the failure to deliver the policy did not cause any damage to the insured, since the oral agreement constituted a binding contract of insurance which could be enforced against the insurer except for the failure of the insured to comply with the conditions contained in the standard policy of insurance, which were by law made a part of the contract. Id.

11. The denial by a local insurance agent that any contract of insurance had been made, when in fact there was an oral agreement to insure which was binding, will not waive the condition as to proofs of loss which is by law made a part of the contract because contained in the standard policy of insurance, since that policy also provides that no such agent shall have power to waive any condition therein, except in writing. Id.

12. A denial in an answer by an insurance company of all allegations in the complaint will not have the effect of ratifying an unauthorized denial by a local agent of the existence of any contract of insurance, so as to waive a condition as to proofs of loss, when the agent's denial was by the terms of the policy ineffectual to constitute such waiver because not in writing. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Insurance; parol contract of; power of agent.	424
Against employer's liability; construction of policy; when claim accrues.	771
Change of interest in property.	510
Voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger.	359
Construction of policy in favor of assured; loss of foot.	86
Liability to assessment in benefit society.	362

INTERNAL REVENUE.

See also COURTS, 3.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Internal revenue; effect of omission to stamp an instrument on which the law requires a stamp, or to cancel the stamps on such an instrument:—(I.) Applicability of revenue laws to state courts: (a) provisions excluding unstamped instruments from evidence; (b) provisions invalidating unstamped instruments; (c) provisions as to recording; (II.) intent as affecting consequences of omitting stamp: (a) generally; (b) presumption and burden of proof as to intent; (III.) scope of acts, generally; effect of repeal; (IV.) effect of omission: (a) generally; (b) upon use of instrument as evidence: (1) as primary evidence; (2) secondary and parol evidence; copies; (3) as collateral evidence; (c) upon writs, processes, and orders of court; (d) in Confederate states; (e) miscellaneous; (V.) subsequent stamping: (a) what remedy available: (1) by party or collector; (2) stamping copies; (b) time; (c) application to collector: (1) who may apply; (2) to what district; (3) power of deputy collector; (4) miscellaneous; (d) what stamps required; (e) effect; (VI.) pleading and practice: (a) raising objection by demurrer; (b) necessity and sufficiency of averments as to omission; (c) who may raise or waive objection; (d) time of raising objections; (e) questions of fact; presumptions generally; (f) stamp not part of instrument; (VII.) failure to cancel; defective cancellation; (VIII.) foreign laws.

305

INTOXICATING LIQUORS.

See MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 10.

JOINT TENANTS.

See HUSBAND AND WIFE, 1.

JUDGE.

See COURTS, 1.

JUDGMENT.

See also HUSBAND AND WIFE, 4, 7; INFANTS, 1; TAXES, 1.

1. A finding of facts made after the end of the term at which judgment was rendered, when the court had no power to modify or change the judgment, and after the time for an appeal had expired without an appeal being taken, cannot be made by the court a part of the judgment, nor of the record of 48 L. R. A.

judgment, nor the foundation of a writ of error to reverse the judgment, although there are statutory provisions (such as Conn. Gen. Stat. §§ 1107, 1111) to the effect that any party is entitled to have a finding of the facts on which judgment is founded appear on the record and become part of the judgment. Corbett v. Matz (Conn.) 217

2. A decree partitioning lands between a life tenant and remaindermen, setting off a part of the property in fee simple to the life tenant, when based on a petition that avers that the plaintiff is a life tenant, is wholly void for lack of jurisdiction. Love v. Blauw (Kan.) 257

3. Failure of a life tenant to challenge a deduction of interest, on an annual accounting by a trustee, from her income, does not prevent her from raising the question thereafter as to the distribution of moneys then in the hands of the trustee. Re Hoyt (N. Y.) 126

4. A judgment is not a lien on lands which the judgment debtor has previously conveyed, though with intent to defraud creditors, under Sand. & H. (Ark.) Dig. § 4204, which provides that judgments shall be liens on lands of the judgment debtors, and § 3049, providing for the sale on execution of lands of which the judgment debtor, or any person for his use, is seized in law or equity. Doster v. Manatee Nat. Bank (Ark.) 334

5. The probate in common form of a will under statutes making it an exercise of judicial power, and the judgment conclusive as to all matters properly cognizant in the probate proceedings, and as to the property covered by the will, is, so far as regards personality, within the provision of the United States Constitution requiring full faith and credit to be given in each state to the judicial proceedings of every other state, even as against persons not made parties to the proceeding. Martin v. Stovall (Tenn.) 130

6. The supreme court of New York will enforce a final decree of the New Jersey chancery court adjudging a defendant in a divorce proceeding over whom it has jurisdiction indebted to plaintiff in a definite sum as alimony, but it will not enforce provisions as to future alimony and as to equitable remedies to enforce compliance with the decree. Lynde v. Lynde (N. Y.) 679

7. The provisions of the New York statute upon the subject of alimony in divorce proceedings are not available to a plaintiff seeking to enforce in the courts of that state a decree of another state granting alimony and providing for its own enforcement. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Judgments; effect of probate of a will in another state:—(I.) As to personal property; (II.) wills of real estate; (III.) presumption; (IV.) as to full faith and credit; (V.) conclusiveness of decree of probate from another state: (a) generally; (b) after filing for record; (VI.) classification by states. 130

Conflict of laws as to limitation of actions on.	632
Of other state; for divorce and alimony; lack of jurisdiction; enforcement.	681
Effect of, as an estoppel.	128
Lien of.	334

JUDICIAL NOTICE.

See EVIDENCE.

JUDICIAL SALE.

1. The owners in being of real estate stand not only for themselves, but for all that may come after them, for all the purposes of litigation affecting the jurisdiction of the court to deal with the whole title. Rugles v. Tyson (Wis.) 809

2. The entire property of a trust estate may be laid hold of and administered by a court of equity so as to protect the interests in remainder of infants or persons unknown who are likely to be interested in it against the danger of destruction by tax and other liens, when the matter is brought before the court in a proceeding instituted by the life tenant to obtain authority to sell a part of the property, although the primary object of the proceeding was to get an adjudication as to the power to authorize a sale which should bar possible remaindermen, and all the counsel representing the different parties attempt to limit the investigation to a part of the property. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Judicial sales; who may purchase at. 346

JURISDICTION.

See COURTS, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

JURY.

As to Jury Trial, see TRIAL, 1-3, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

JUSTICE.

Guaranty of, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 24.

LABOR DAY.

See HOLIDAYS.

LANDLORD AND TENANT.

See also ACTION OR SUIT, 5; NEGLIGENCE, 4.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Landlord's liability for fall of building. 157

LEGACY.

See WILLS, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

LEGISLATURE.

See BRIDGES, 3; CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 3.

LEVY AND SEIZURE.

1. The fact that a wife claims to be the owner of exempt property the greater portion of which belongs to her insane husband will not defeat her claim of exemption set 48 L. R. A.

up thereto by her as the head of a family, if no injury results from the failure to state the particulars as to the title. Ecker v. Lindskog (S. D.) 155

2. A selection of the exempted property which is allowed to the head of a family by South Dakota Constitution and Laws 1890, chap. 86, may be made by the wife, when the husband is incompetent to make it because he has been adjudged insane and is confined in a state hospital, although most of the property claimed belongs to him. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Levy; exemption for benefit of family: right of wife to make selection; when husband is insane. 155

LIBEL AND SLANDER.

See also EVIDENCE, 5.

1. A publication in church papers by officers of a church, concerning the character of their pastor, is privileged, if they honestly believe it to be their duty toward other members of churches of the same denomination to publish it. Redgate v. Roush (Kan.) 236

2. The fact that a publication in a church paper, which is privileged as a communication to church members, incidentally may have been brought to the attention of other persons, will not take away its privileged character. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Libel; liability for exceeding privilege. 236

LIBERTY.

Constitutional Guaranties of, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 18, 20.

LICENSE.

Constitutionality of Statutes as to, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 17, 21.

See also COMMERCE, 3; CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 8; FISHERIES, 2; MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 7, 8; PEDDLERS: TIMBER.

1. An exercise of the power of taxation for the sole purpose of revenue or undue restraint or prohibition of a business will not be saved from the constitutional restrictions that apply to it as the imposition of a tax, by its designation in the statute as a "license fee." State ex rel. Wyatt v. Ashbrook (Mo.) 265

2. The requirement of uniform taxation upon the same class of subjects made by Mo. Const. art. 10, § 3, is violated by the anti-department store act of May 16, 1899, imposing license taxes upon those merchants in cities having 50,000 or more inhabitants who employ fifteen or more persons in the same establishment, and sell goods enumerated in more than one of the classes or groups designated in the act, while the amount of tax to be imposed in any city is within certain limits left to the discretion of commissioners who may fix different rates for the different cities governed by the statute. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

License; to pollute waters. 705

LIENS.

On Stock, see BANKS, 5, 6.

On Mine, see ESTOPPEL, 1.

Appeal from Decision as to, see APPEAL AND ERROR, 5.

See also BANKS, 5, 6; JUDGMENT, 4; SURETY COMPANIES; VENDOR AND PURCHASER.

LIFE TENANTS.

Right to Crops, see EMBLEMENTS.

Rights in Trust Estate, see TRUSTS.

See also ACTION OR SUIT, 5; JUDGMENT, 3.

1. A premium on bonds paid on investing trust funds the income of which, under a will, is to be paid to testator's daughter for life, with remainder to certain nephews and nieces, cannot be charged to the daughter and the amount thereof deducted from her income so as to restore the principal of the trust fund in order that it may be turned over unimpaired at the termination of the life estate, where testator has expressly declared his intention to provide for his daughter in the "most bounteous and liberal manner as to expenditure," and obviously intended to devote to her use the entire income of the fund, making the disposition of the principal after her death a secondary consideration. Re Hoyt (N. Y.) 126

2. A deed to one during his natural life, who is to deed or will the lands to the bodily heirs of another, the former having the discretion of allotting the lands as he may see proper, confers a life estate on the first taker, with vested remainder to the heirs of the other person mentioned, which will open to let in afterborn children; and the interests of children dying before the life tenant will pass to their heirs. Fort Jefferson Improv. Co. v. Dupoyster (Ky.) 537

3. Notes given for rent to a life tenant, though not due at the time of her death, and although a crop of corn is then still on the ground, belong entirely to her estate and are not apportionable between it and the remainderman, where the lease has expired during her lifetime and the lessee has gathered, or is entitled to gather, all the crops raised on the premises, and has had the full benefit of the lease. Noble v. Tyler (Ohio) 735

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Life tenants; charging with premium paid on investment in bonds. 127

LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.

See also ADVERSE POSSESSION, 1; CONFLICT OF LAWS, 2.

1. The rule that the right of action for trespass to real estate accrues to the one owning the property at the time the trespass is committed does not apply to the emptying of a sewer system into a stream to the injury of a riparian owner, where the extent of the injury cannot then be for all time estimated, while subsequent change of the 48 L. R. A.

outlet and enlargement of the system materially increase the injury after the change in the ownership of the riparian property. Smith v. Sedalia (Mo.) 711

2. Concealment of the defalcation of a bank teller prevents the running of the statute of limitations in favor of the surety on his bond, as well as in his own favor, until the discovery of the defalcation. Lieberman v. First Nat. Bank (Del.) 514

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also CONFLICT OF LAWS.

Limitation of actions; as affecting execution; as affected by concealed fraud; in case of surety or guarantor; acknowledgment of debt. 514

LIMITATION OF LIABILITY.

See COURTS, 2; DEATH; SHIPPING.

LOBBYING.

See CONTRACTS, 3.

LOCAL SELF-GOVERNMENT.

See SCHOOLS, 3; TOWN.

LOGS.

See also SALE, 1, 2.

A log-driving company's possession of logs in a river while driving them, not as agents of the person to whom they have been sold and are being sent, but by virtue of the charter of the company, although all owners of logs driven by it are made members of the company by force of the statute, does not constitute the possession of the person to whom they are being taken so as to preclude the stoppage of the logs in transitu by the seller. Johnson v. Eveleth (Me.) 50

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Log-driving company as carrier. 51

LOTTERY.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Lottery; what constitutes. 775

LYNCHING.

Liability for, see COUNTIES.

See also CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 2, 12; EMINENT DOMAIN, 9.

MAJORITY.

See VOTERS AND ELECTIONS.

MANDAMUS.

Mandamus to the treasurer of a town to compel payment of a share of the expense of a bridge district to which it belongs is properly issued against him without making the bridge district or the towns which belong to it parties defendant. State ex rel. Bulkeley v. Williams (Conn.) 485

MARITIME LAW.

See DEATH.

MARSHALING ASSETS.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Marshaling assets; of insolvent bank. 565

MASSES.

See also TRUSTS, 5.

A will creating a trust for the saying of masses may be upheld as a "charitable use," since the saying of mass in open church, where all who choose may be present and participate therein, is a solemn and impressive ritual, from which many may draw spiritual solace, guidance, and instruction, and the money expended therefor is of benefit to the clergy, thus accomplishing one of the cherished objects of religious uses. Webster v. Sughrow (N. H.) 100

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Masses; trust by will for. 101

MASTER AND SERVANT.

See also ACTION OR SUIT, 2; DAMAGES, 4; TRIAL, 9, 10, 15.

1. An employer is not liable for the services of a physician summoned by his manager or foreman to attend an employee in case of an injury by accident in a laundry during the employer's absence. Holmes v. McAllister (Mich.) 396

2. A railroad company is not liable to an employee for injuries caused by the incompetence of a coemployee, because of its negligence in employing him, if his incompetence was not with respect to acts for the performance of which he was employed. Smith v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. (Mo.) 368

3. A railroad company is not bound to use the same degree of care in employing a wiper or fire puller to work in a roundhouse that is necessary in employing an engineer or hostler. Id.

4. A master is not bound to furnish the safest and best appliances that could be used; but he is acquit of fault if what he furnishes is reasonably safe and suitable. Grattis v. Kansas City, P. & G. R. Co. (Mo.) 399

5. The breaking of a railroad trestle by a flood and the drift carried thereby renders the railroad company liable to an employee injured thereby on the ground of negligence, if the character of the flood and drift is such as might reasonably have been anticipated. Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. Fowler (Ind.) 531

6. A railroad company cannot be held negligent for placing a switch signal target on the same side of the main track with the side track, although an injury which happened might have been avoided if the target had been on the other side of the track, where there is no uniform rule as to which side of the track such target shall be placed on, and under some circumstances it is better to have it on one side and under other circumstances it is better to have it on the other side. Grattis v. Kansas City, P. & G. R. Co. (Mo.) 399

7. It is not negligent on the part of a railroad company towards its servants to use a stub switch which is safe when used in the proper manner, although it is unsafe to run a train through it from the wrong direction. Id.

49 L. R. A.

Warning.

8. An employer need not warn an employee whose special business is to oil a shaft and bearing, of his introduction of a set screw to fasten a collar near the end of the shaft, although it projects in such a manner as to be likely to catch the clothing of persons coming near it. Ford v. Mt. Tom Sulphite Pulp Co. (Mass.) 96

Scope of employment.

9. A brakeman who goes upon a caboose attached to a moving train in search of his working clothes, which he had left according to custom in the caboose when he finished his last previous trip, and who jumps from the caboose when through with his search, is not acting within the scope of his employment or of the license which custom may have given him to return to the caboose for his clothes. Olson v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. (Minn.) 796

10. The conductor of a freight train who takes the engine and goes forward a mile or two from a station by order of the road superintendent, to see whether certain culverts are safe or whether they have been injured by a recent heavy storm, is within the scope of his employment while riding on the engine between two of such culverts over a trestle, which breaks down, causing his death. Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. Fowler (Ind.) 531

Assumption of risk.

11. Assumption of risk is a term of the contract of employment, expressed or implied from the circumstances of the employment, by which the servant agrees that dangers of injury obviously incident to the discharge of his duty shall be at his risk. Narramore v. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. (C. C. App. 6th C.) 68

12. A statute requiring railway companies to block guard rails and frogs on penalty of a fine changes the rule of liability and relieves an employee who continues to work with knowledge of the violation of the statute by his employer from the effect of the assumption of risk which would otherwise be implied against him. Id.

13. The dangers attendant upon the running of an unsafe elevator are not assumed by one employed to wash bottles in the basement, and whose duty does not involve the use of the elevator. Dallemand v. Saalfeldt (Ill.) 753

14. An employee who performs a particular service by order of the foreman, which is outside the scope of his employment, does not thereby assume risks incident thereto unless they are such that an ordinarily prudent man would not encounter them. Id.

Contributory negligence.

15. The mere fact that in an employee's judgment an act required by the employer is unsafe does not, as matter of law, render him guilty of negligence in performing it, if the employer assures him that there is no danger. McKee v. Tourtellotte (Mass.) 542

16. A youth nineteen years old, employed only five to seven weeks at work in which he occasionally uses an elevator, is not, as matter of law, charged with knowledge that it is unsafe, where no instruction upon the matter is given him, and there is nothing to show that the danger is apparent. Dallemand v. Sealfeldt (Ill.) 753

17. That an employee is told by a third person that the work is not safe will not prevent his recovery for an injury, if he believes his employer's assurance that it is safe. McKee v. Tourtellotte (Mass.) 542

Fellow servants.

18. The head hostler in a roundhouse, who has no power to hire or discharge anyone, is the fellow servant of a fireman on an engine, so that his knowledge of the incompetence of a wiper, and that he attempts to move engines without authority, will not charge the railroad company with liability for injury to the fireman through the wiper's negligently moving an engine. Smith v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. (Mo.) 368

19. The conductor and engineer of a freight train are both fellow servants of a fireman, so as to preclude him from recovering for injuries received by reason of the derailment of the train at a switch that was caused by the negligence of the engineer and the conductor. Grattis v. Kansas City, P. & G. R. Co. (Mo.) 399

20. A servant of a truckman who is sent with a horse by his master, by whom he is paid, to a warehouse, to use the horse in operating tackle for hoisting goods, which work is under the direction of the foreman of the warehouseman, is not a fellow servant with the warehouseman's servants, by whose negligence in putting in place the pulley blocks and tackle he is injured. Murray v. Dwight (N. Y.) 873

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Master and servant; relation of, when servant is working for third person. 673

Conductor as vice principal or fellow servant. 399

The duty of a master with respect to the employment of his servants:—(I.) General principles: (a) nature and extent of the master's duty stated; (b) duty considered as creating an exception to the doctrine of common employment; (c) standard of care obligatory upon the master in regard to the selection of his servants; (d) what constitutes an incompetent servant; (e) plaintiff's recovery dependent upon proof of master's actual or constructive knowledge of co-servant's unfitness; (f) duty to inquire into the fitness of a servant at the time he is hired; (g) duty of the master to keep himself informed as to the fitness of a servant already in his employment; (II.) probative value of various facts as tending to show culpability on the master's part: (a) incompetence of servant; (b) race and color of delinquent servant; (c) appearance and manner of the servant while testifying; (d) language of delinquent servant himself indicating recklessness of character; (e) minority; (f) previous experience of the servant; (g) acts of negligence prior to the accident; (h) act of negligence which caused the accident; (i) temporary unfitness at the time of the accident; (j) derelictions of duty subsequent to the injury in suit; (k) disclaimer of fitness by delinquent servant himself; (l) specific statements as to unfitness made by co-employees of delinquent servant; (m) reputation of delinquent servant: (1) admissibility, generally; (2) reputation not evidence of actual unfitness; (3) nicknames as evidence against the master; (n) length of the period during which the unfitness has continued; (o) a promise by the master to discharge the delinquent servant; (III.) duty to employ an adequate number of servants: (a) generally; (b) whether the master has performed his duty. 368

Distinction between assumption of risk and contributory negligence; injury to servant by violation of statute; liability for unblocked frogs and guard rails. 71

Liability of an employer for injuries received by servants owing to the want of blocking at switches:—(I.) Want of blocking not negligence per se apart from statute; (II.) statutes requiring frogs, etc., to be blocked; (III.) want of blocking considered as a risk assumed by the servant. 68

Right of a servant to recover for injuries caused by projecting screws in shafts and other moving machinery:—(I.) Discussion of the question whether the maintenance of a set screw imports negligence at common law; (II.) liability of master under statutes; (III.) defenses of assumption of risks and contributory negligence. 96

Liability for injuries received by the servant in the performance of duties outside the scope of his original contract:—(I.) Introductory; (II.) no recovery where servant undertakes new functions proprio motu and without master's acquiescence; (III.) when negligence is predicated of a command to do work outside the scope of original contract; (IV.) risks of work outside scope of employment, when deemed to be assumed; (V.) doctrine of common employment qualified as regards servants working outside the scope of their employment; (VI.) contributory negligence as a defense; (VII.) absence of compulsion, an essential element of assumption of risks and contributory negligence: (a) generally; (b) protest or objection by servant; (c) fear of losing position. 796

Effect of an assurance of safety given by the master or a co-servant:—(I.) General rule; (II.) illustrative cases; (III.) rationalis of rule; (IV.) when an assurance of safety is not conclusive in the servant's favor; (V.) whose assurances bind the master. 542

Servant's right of action for injuries received in obeying a direct command:—(I.) Introductory; (II.) direct orders an immaterial factor, where the risk to which they exposed the servant was one of those assumed; (III.) contributory negligence, when not predicated of compliance with a direct order; (IV.) master and servant not upon the same footing; (V.) servant usually entitled to act on the assumption that his master has performed and will perform his duty; (VI.) rationale of the servant's right to rely on the master: (a) order an implied assurance of safety; (b) order tends to throw servant off his guard; (c) necessity for prompt obedience; (d) direct order tends to negative voluntariness of action; (VII.) when direct orders will not justify the servant's obedience; (VIII.) negligence in respect to the manner of carrying out the order; (IX.) specific order no excuse unless the servant's act was induced by it; (X.) by whose orders the master is bound. 753

Providing physician for injured servant. 397

MAXIMS.

1. Damnum absque injuria. Platt Bros. & Co. v. Waterbury (Conn.) 691

2. Equity regards and treats that as done which in good conscience ought to be done. Wyman v. Ft. Dearborn Nat. Bank (Ill.) 565

3. Res ipsa loquitur. Dettmering v. English (N. J. Sup.) 106

4. Vigilantibus non dormientibus æquitas subvenit. Doster v. Manistee Nat. Bank (Ark.) 334

5. Volenti non fit injuria. Walters v. Charleston Mills (C. C. App. 4th C.) 503

6. When the law gives priority, equity will follow it. Doster v. Manistee Nat. Bank (Ark.) 334

7. Where equities are equal the legal title must prevail. Economy Savings Bank v. Gordon (Md.) 63

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

No one can take advantage of his own wrong. 295

MAYOR.

See COURTS, 4; MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 5.

MERGER.

See MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 14.

MESNE PROFITS.

See EJECTMENT; EVIDENCE, 14.

MILEAGE BOOKS.

See COMMERCE, 1; CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 11.

MINES.

Inspection of, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 22, 23.

See also ESTOPPEL, 1; EVIDENCE, 3.

1. The failure to limit the number of inspections of mines does not make Ill. act July 1, 1895, as amended July, 1897, providing for an inspection of mines at the cost of the mine owners, void on the ground that it is oppressive and may impose a burden by imposition of fees which would destroy the business of the mine owners, where the statute, after providing that the inspection shall be made at least four times a year and as often as the inspectors deem necessary, provides that they may be removed for neglect or malfeasance, and prohibits them from doing any act to the injury of the operators of mines. Chicago, W. & V. Coal Co. v. People (Ill.) 554

2. The boring of a well within ninety days is a condition precedent to the continuance of an oil and gas lease which, in consideration of $1, grants all the oil and gas in certain land, with the privilege of operating therefor for the term of five years, and as much longer as oil or gas is found in paying quantities, not exceeding thirty-five years from date, with a royalty of one-seventh part or share of the oil produced and saved, but with a proviso that a well shall be completed within ninety days, in default of which the lessee shall pay a forfeiture of $50, since the only substantial consideration consists of the prospective royalties. Hugbins v. Daley (C. C. App. 4th C.) 320

3. No judicial proceeding is necessary to avoid an oil and gas lease for failure to comply with a condition precedent by boring a well, where the lease merely gave the right to the oil and gas, with the privilege of operating therefor on the land, since the landlord has never been out of possession and cannot re-enter upon himself. Id.

4. A gas pump may lawfully be used to increase the production of an oil well, although the production of wells on adjoining property is thereby diminished. Jones v. Forest Oil Co. (Pa.) 748

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Mines; forfeiture of oil lease; delay in drilling well. 320

MOB.

Liability for, see COUNTIES.

See also CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 2, 12; EMINENT DOMAIN, 9; MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 12; PLEADING, 4.

MONEY.

See CONFEDERATE MONEY.

MONOPOLY.

See also NEWSPAPERS, 2; SCHOOLS, 4.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Monopoly; illegality of; created by by-laws of press association. 568

MORTGAGE.

Injunction against Sale under, see CONTRACTS, 6; INJUNCTION, 5.

Notice of Infirmary in, see NOTICE.

See also PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS, 16; RECEIVERS, 1, 2.

1. A bona fide purchaser for value and without notice of a mortgage given without any consideration and which is not accompanied by any negotiable obligation holds it as a valid encumbrance as against creditors of the mortgagor, since his equities are at least equal to theirs, and in such case the legal title prevails. Economy Savings Bank v. Gordon (Md.) 63

2. A mortgagee of a street-railway company, though not bound by a compromise contract between the mortgagor and the city, with respect to liens on the property for paving, cannot accept the benefit of such contract for the relief of the property from a lien existing under the company's charter ordinance without being subjected to the burden of a lien which the contract provided for. Union Trust Co. v. Richmond City R. Co. (Ind.) 41

3. Railroad structures and improvements placed upon land acquired by purchase, but which was subject to a prior mortgage, do not constitute a part of the security under the mortgage, because they do not go to the betterment of the mortgagor's estate, and do not pass to a purchaser of the land on foreclosure sale, but are to be regarded as trade fixtures which the railroad company may remove. St. Louis, K. & S. W. R. Co. v. Nyce (Kan.) 241

4. Damages by the construction or operation of a railroad to land outside the right of way cannot be recovered by a purchaser on foreclosure sale who first bid off the tract outside the right of way and then the right of way, even if the former owner might have had a right of action for such damages. Id.

5. A purchaser of land of a corporation on foreclosure who, before the sale is approved or he has complied with his bid, voluntarily pays a claim for taxes, without knowledge of any dispute as to its validity, and is denied credit therefor when completing his purchase, may be subrogated to the claim for such part of the taxes as the property was certainly subject to; but the court will not require a receiver of the property to recognize such voluntary payment of that part of the taxes which was in dispute, or to assume the burden and responsibility of litigation upon it. Walters v. Charleston Mills (C. C. App. 4th C.) 503

6. A purchaser at a sale under foreclosure is not such a party to the suit as to entitle him to bring in a new party or to raise new issues, although he becomes subject to the jurisdiction of the court for all orders necessary to compel the perfecting of his purchase, with the right to be heard upon all questions thereafter arising which affect his bid and are not foreclosed by the terms of the decree of sale, or are expressly reserved to him by such decree. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Mortgage; rights of mortgagor to use of property. 751

Title to railroad built on mortgaged land. 244

Rights of bona fide purchasers of. 63

MOTIVE.

As Affecting Right of Action, see ACTION OR SUIT, 1.

48 L. R. A.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.

Imposing Burden on, see ACTION OR SUIT, 3.

Constitutional Rights of, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 6, 13.

Unconstitutional Ordinance as to Sewers, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 9.

Liability for Discharging Sewers into Streams, see also EMINENT DOMAIN.

Right to Take Legacy, see TREATIES; WILLS, 3.

Injunction against, see INJUNCTION, 7-12.

Right to Discharge Sewers into Streams, see WATERS, 3-9.

See also BONDS, 3-6; CHARITIES, 1; DRAINS; INJUNCTION, 3, 4; NUISANCES, 3; PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS, 13; TOWNS.

1. Implied authority to operate a rock quarry outside the limits of a city is not conferred upon the city by general provisions in its charter for the purchase, holding, sale, and conveyance of real and personal property necessary for its uses and purposes. Duncan v. Lynchburg (Va.) 331

2. A city is responsible for the acts of a board of sewer commissioners within the scope of their authority under a charter which gives the board authority to execute certain powers vested in the city. Platt Bros. & Co. v. Waterbury (Conn.) 691

3. An ordinance is not void for uncertainty by reason of a provision giving the mayor discretion to impose a fine of $50 or imprisonment for thirty days upon conviction, where the statute makes the violation of the ordinance a misdemeanor and the Constitution of the state makes exactly the same provision as to the punishment for misdemeanors. State v. Higgs (N. C.) 446

4. The cost of providing water for a city, although expressly authorized by charter, is not a "necessary expense" of the city, within the meaning of N. C. Const. art. 7, § 7, which prohibits indebtedness or taxation of a city for anything except necessary expenses, without a two-thirds vote of the qualified voters. Edgerton v. Goldsboro Water Co. (N. C.) 444

5. A mayor cannot veto the judicial action of the board of aldermen sitting as a court in a matter of which the statutes have made it the exclusive and final judge, as in the determination of the election of its members, under N. H. Pub. Stat. chap. 48, § 11, although by chap. 47, § 7, it is provided that "he shall have a negative upon the action of the aldermen in laying out highways, and in all other matters; and no vote can be passed or appointment made by the board of aldermen over his veto, unless by a vote of two thirds at least of all the aldermen elected." Cate v. Martin (N. H.) 613

6. Cigarettes are not included among the "other provisions" referred to in Ill. Rev. Stat. chap. 24, art. 5, § 1, ¶ 50, providing for the regulation by cities of sales of specified articles of food "and all other provisions." Gundling v. Chicago (Ill.) 230

7. An ordinance requiring a license for the sale of cigarettes is within the authority given by Ill. Rev. Stat. chap. 24, art. 5, § 1, ¶ 66, authorizing the enforcement of "all necessary police ordinances," and § 78, authorizing all acts and regulations "which may be necessary or expedient for the promotion of health or the suppression of disease." Id.

8. An ordinance providing that the mayor shall grant licenses in certain cases does not delegate the power of the city council to him, when the council in substance grants the licenses by authorizing him to do so when certain conditions are complied with. Id.

9. An ordinance prohibiting the sale of "any meats, fish, butter, cheese, lard, vegetables, or any other provisions" where dry goods, clothing, jewelry, and drugs are sold, is not authorized by Ill. general incorporation law, art. 5, cl. 50, § 1, under which the city was organized, providing that the city council may "regulate" the sale of meats, poultry, fish, butter, cheese, lard, vegetables, and all other provisions, since the ordinance does not provide a regulation of the sale of provisions, but makes an arbitrary prohibition of such sales where certain other goods are sold. Chicago v. Netcher (Ill.) 261

10. An ordinance prohibiting the sale of any intoxicating liquors in any place of business where dry goods, clothing, jewelry, and hardware are kept for sale is not authorized by Ill. general incorporation act, art. 5, cl. 46, § 1, giving cities power to "license, regulate, and prohibit" the sale of such liquors, since the ordinance is not an exercise of the police power, but is purely arbitrary, not having any connection with and not tending in any way towards the protection of the public against the evils arising from the sale of intoxicating liquors. Id.

11. The imposition by the general assembly of taxes upon municipal corporations or the inhabitants or property thereof for municipal purposes, in violation of Mo. Const. art. 10, §§ 1, 10, is made by the Missouri anti-department store act of May 16, 1899, § 6, providing that the two thirds of the license fee or tax imposed upon department-store merchants is to be paid to the treasurer of the city wherein such stores are located, and the remaining third in the state treasury for the use of the state. State ex rel. Wyatt v. Ashbrook (Mo.) 265

12. A municipality is not liable for the participation by its officers in a conspiracy or in a mob, since such acts of the officers are not within the scope of their duties, but must be deemed to be performed by them as individuals. Wallace v. Norman (Okla.) 620

13. A city is not liable for a nuisance created by the pollution of a stream by its employees and chain gang while operating a rock quarry outside the limits of the city, which its charter gives no authority to operate, unless it is implied from certain provisions which expressly include a denial of liability for the failure to exercise, or the improper exercise of, the powers thereby conferred. Duncan v. Lynchburg (Va.) 331
48 L. R. A.

14. The city of Brooklyn is the proper party defendant in an action for damages caused by a sewer constructed by the town of Flatbush before the town was merged in the city, since N. Y. Laws 1894, chap. 356, limiting and defining the liability of the city for debts and obligations of the town, merely confines the area of taxation for such debts and obligations to the territory which would have been liable but for its annexation to the city. Huffmire v. Brooklyn (N. Y.) 421

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Turning Sewage into Waters, see WATERS.
See also PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS.

Power of the legislature to impose burdens upon municipalities, and to control their local administration and property:—
(I.) Introductory; (II.) power to impose burdens: (a) generally; (b) public and quasi-public improvements; (c) compelling payment of nonlegal demands; (d) validating defective obligations; (III.) power in respect to officers and local administration; (IV.) power in respect to property and franchises. 465

Board of education of, as a mere incident. 786

Delegation of power by common council as to license; ordinance unconstitutional. 230

Increase of indebtedness by funding bonds. 735

Liability for acts of mobs; for acts of officers. 622

Liability for maintaining pond as a nuisance. 291

Liability for nuisance; for ultra vires act. 231

Necessary expenses of. 444

Ordinance restricting a lawful trade. 443

Veto power of mayor. 613

Violation of ordinance as a crime; prohibiting encroachment on streets by signs. 446

NATIONAL BANKS.

See BANKS, 5, 6.

NEGLECTANCE.

See also BRIDGES, 6, 7; BUILDINGS; EVIDENCE, 10, 17; EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS; MASTER AND SERVANT, 2-4, 6-8, 15-17; PLEADING, 1; TRIAL, 6-12.

1. An employee's contributory negligence is a defense to an action founded on a violation of the statutory duty of a railroad company to block guard rails and frogs. Naramore v. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. (C. C. App. 6th C.) 68

2. One who has constructed a wall owes a duty to persons lawfully on the premises to take reasonable care that the wall shall be so constructed as not to fall. Detmering v. English (N. J. Sup.) 106

3. One who causes the fall of a wall on a neighbor's land by allowing water collected from a roof to be discharged through an aperture in a gutter upon the other's land is not relieved from liability for the damage because of the fact that the wall was not well constructed. Fitzpatrick v. Welch (Mass.) 278

4. The owner of a building standing on a business street, who, knowing that it was negligently constructed by the use of improper materials and liable to fall of its own weight, continues to use the building or permit it to be used, is guilty of continuing a nuisance, and is liable for injuries caused by its collapse to a person lawfully standing in front of it at the time, although it was then in the possession of a lessee. Waterhouse v. Joseph Schlitz Brew. Co. (S. D.) 157

5. The drowning of children in a pond while skating on the ice formed upon it does not render the owner of the land liable, in the absence of anything to show that the children were there by permission or invitation. Arnold v. St. Louis (Mo.) 291

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also MASTER AND SERVANT.

Negligence; as to unsafe building; liability for its fall when occupied by tenant. 157

Custom as test of. 98, 106

Liability for maintenance of dangerous pond. 291

NEGROES.

See CIVIL RIGHTS; SCHOOLS, 1.

NEWSPAPERS.

1. A corporation engaged in collecting and vending news, with charter power to own and operate telegraph lines and exercise the right of eminent domain, cannot discriminate between newspaper publishers in the sale of its news, since its business is affected with a public interest. Inter-Ocean Publishing Co. v. Associated Press (Ill.) 568

2. A by-law of a press association which provides that its members shall not furnish its special news to or receive news from any person or corporation which shall have been declared antagonistic to such association is void as creating a monopoly. Id.

3. A weekly publication circulating among various classes of people within the county and state of publication, the contents of which consist principally of legal notices and information regarding the courts and of legal matters in general, while it also contains advertising of a miscellaneous character, literature of a general kind, and a limited amount of general news of current events, is a newspaper, within the meaning of Neb. Code Civ. Proc. § 497, which provides for publication of legal notices in a newspaper. Hanscom v. Meyer (Neb.) 409

4. The principal distinguishing feature of a newspaper in contemplation of a statute providing for the publication of notices in newspapers is that it be a publication appearing at regular or almost regular intervals, at short periods of time, as daily or weekly, usually in sheet form and containing news; that is, reports of happenings of recent occurrences of a varied character, such as political, social, moral, religious, and other subjects of a similar nature, local or foreign, intended for the information of the general reader. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Newspapers; what are. 410

Boycott of, by press association. 568

NEW TRIAL.

See APPEAL AND ERROR, 16.

NORMAL SCHOOLS.

See also PUBLIC MONEY.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Normal schools; appropriating public money for. 576

NOTICE.

See also MASTER AND SERVANT, 16.

A savings bank is not charged with notice of infirmity in a mortgage an assignment of which it takes as security for a loan, by the fact that its treasurer is cashier of the bank at which the mortgagee, mortgagor, and a corporation of which they are members, and to raise money for which the mortgage is executed, keep their accounts, so that he might have learned the disposition made of the money borrowed. Economy Savings Bank v. Gordon (Md.) 63

NUISANCES.

Of Vapors, see ACTION OR SUIT, 4.

Of Sewage in Streams, see WATERS, 4-6.

Prescriptive Right to Maintain, see EASEMENTS, 2-5.

See also HIGHWAYS, 1; MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 13; NEGLIGENCE, 4.

1. What the law grants cannot constitute a nuisance per se, either public or private, and, if the law is obeyed, no actionable wrong can result. Valparaiso v. Hagen (Ind.) 707

2. A nuisance caused by the pollution of a stream to the damage of riparian owners whose injuries are similar in kind, though different in degree, is not a public, but is a private, nuisance such that a single landowner may maintain a private action for damages. Smith v. Sedalia (Mo.) 711

3. A city cannot be held liable for the drowning of children in a pond which is situated partly upon a street and partly upon private premises, on the ground that the pond is a nuisance which the city has failed to abate, where it does not appear that the accident happened upon that portion of the pond which is located upon the street. Arnold v. St. Louis (Mo.) 291

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also WATERS.

Nuisance; of bay window in street. 103

Polluting waters. 718

- Effect of prescription. 718
 Effect of license or prescription. 714
 By performance of public work authorized by statute. 722

OFFICERS.

As Parties, see ACTION OR SUIT, 5.
 See also CONTRACTS, 4.

1. When a person legally holding one office is elected or appointed to another, but is prohibited by a statute from holding both, upon accepting the second his de jure title to the first ends, and his successor may at once be appointed or elected; but, if the former occupant refuses to vacate the office, his successor will be compelled to take the necessary legal steps to oust him. Oliver v. Jersey City (N. J. Err. & App.) 412

2. An officer legally elected and qualified, who enters upon the duties of his office, and afterwards is appointed to and accepts another office, but in good faith continues to publicly discharge the duties of the first, his term not having expired, and no successor having been appointed or elected in his stead, nor any adjudication made against his title,—is an officer de facto. Id.

3. The official acts of an officer de facto are valid, as far as the rights of third persons and the public are concerned, unless the defects in the officer's title are notorious, and sufficient to overcome the apparent evidence to the contrary; but when they see a person occupying an important public office by virtue of an election by the people, and publicly exercising its duties within the period for which he was elected, they are entitled to consider him to be such officer, and will be protected in their rights if they do so. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

- Officers; de facto. 412
 Injunction against enforcing contracts to obtain office. 842

OIL.

See COMMERCE, 3; EVIDENCE, 3; MINES, 2, 3.

OPINIONS.

As Evidence, see EVIDENCE, 7.

ORDINANCE.

Injunction against Passage of, see INJUNCTION, 3, 4.
 Passage of, see MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.

ORIGINAL PACKAGES.

See COMMERCE, 3.

OYSTERS.

Destruction of, by Sewers, see EMINENT DOMAIN, 8.

PARLIAMENTARY LAW.

See also MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 5.
 48 L. R. A.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Declaration of result of vote; vote by presiding officer; casting vote. 613

PARTIES.

See ACTION OR SUIT, 6-8; APPEAL AND ERROR, 5; MORTGAGE, 6; MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 14.

PARTITION.

See also JUDGMENT, 2.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Partition; what lands subject to; in case of life tenants. 258

PARTNERSHIP.

Heirs of Partners as Parties, see ACTION OR SUIT, 8.

See also INFANTS, 1.

1. Partnership real estate retains its character of realty in the absence of any express or implied agreement to the contrary between the partners, for the purpose of adjusting the rights of a surviving partner and the heirs of a deceased one, except so far as is necessary to adjust the partnership obligations and the accounts between the partners. Darrow v. Calkins (N. Y.) 299

2. The intention to convert real estate into personalty is manifested by its purchase for partnership purposes with partnership funds, and its use in the partnership business indiscriminately with chattel property. Id.

3. A conveyance of his interest in the partnership real estate by one partner to the other in trust to hold as partnership property, and to return the proper portion of the proceeds at the winding up of the partnership, is not in contravention of § 55 of the New York statute of uses and trusts, which contemplated merely the creation of original trusts. Id.

4. A conveyance of his undivided half in the partnership real estate by one partner to the other, to be held as partnership property, with power to manage and sell, and to pay over to the grantor, his heirs, assigns, or other legal representatives "such portion thereof as shall, at the closing of the partnership business," belong to the grantor, discloses an intention to change the interest of the grantor and his representatives from one in lands to one in the surplus which shall remain after a sale of the property and the adjustment of the partnership affairs. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Partnership; real estate of; rights of survivors and representatives of partners. 301

PAVEMENTS.

See PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS.

PEDDLERS.

One who solicits orders for a firm having a permanent place of business in the state, without carrying any goods except those which have been previously ordered by his customers or exposing any goods for sale, is not doing "business as a hawker or peddler," nor "exposing for sale or selling" goods, within the meaning of N. H. Laws 1897, chap. 76, requiring a license from peddlers. State v. Wells (N. H.) 99

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Peddlers; who are. 99

PENALTY.

For Breach of Contract, see CONTRACTS, 8.

See also TRIAL, 1.

PERPETUITIES.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Perpetuities; rule of, as to trust for saying masses. 101

PHYSICIANS.

See also MASTER AND SERVANT, 1.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Physicians; employment of; continuation of employment. 397

PLEADING.

Questions as to, on Appeal, see APPEAL
AND ERROR, 17.

Effect of, as Waiver, see INSURANCE, 12.

See also EVIDENCE, 15.

1. A complaint alleging the negligent maintenance of a building that was improperly constructed is not insufficient because it fails to state specifically in what respects it was negligently constructed, or in what respect the materials used were insufficient for such a structure. Waterhouse v. Joseph Schlitz Brew. Co. (S. D.) 157

2. An allegation that inspection of beer as required by statute would cause irreparable damage is insufficient basis for equity jurisdiction, when it has no other foundation except a legal conclusion from the statute, and the statute properly construed is satisfied by inspection of the beer while in vats in a manner that would cause no damage. State ex rel. Kenamore v. Wood (Mo.) 596

3. An allegation that the wrongful creation of a stagnant pond caused the ill health of the plaintiff is sufficient without averring in terms that such wrong was the natural and proximate cause of the sickness. Carland v. Aurin (Tenn.) 862

4. Allegations that a person was lynched by a mob of individuals who had assembled for an unlawful purpose and attempted to exercise correctional power over such person and his fellows are not negated by specific averments that the person was struck by an article "thrown at him by one of the mob," and shot with a bullet from a revolver in the hands of some of the mob. Champaign County v. Church (Ohio) 738

5. An amendment to an answer by setting up the statute of limitations is permissible under Wis. Rev. Stat. § 2830, authorizing amendments in furtherance of justice to correct a mistake in any respect, where the defendants are poor people, unacquainted with legal matters, and the failure to plead the statute was due to a mistake of their attorney. Illinois Steel Co. v. Budziaz (Wis.) 830
48 L. R. A.

6. The imposition of terms as a condition of granting leave to amend a pleading is not absolutely required by Wis. Rev. Stat. § 2830, authorizing amendments in the discretion of the court "upon such terms as may be just." Id.

7. A question as to the powers conferred by a city charter may be raised by demurrer in an action against the city for an alleged nuisance, since the court will take judicial notice of the charter. Duncan v. Lynchburg (Va.) 331

8. The defense that a contract is invalid on grounds of public policy cannot be waived by failure to plead it. Cansler v. Penland (N. C.) 441

9. Inconsistent defenses cannot stand when the admission of the truth of one necessarily proves the falsity of the other. Seattle Nat. Bank v. Jones (Wash.) 177

10. The denial of an allegation by a general denial is nullified, so that proof of the allegation is unnecessary, by a special averment in an affirmative defense of the truth of the allegation which had been denied. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Pleading as answer and as cross complaint; allegations of law or fact; theory of. 42

Of estoppel. 341

As to omission of stamp from instrument. 317

Right to plead inconsistent defenses:—

(I.) Scope of note; (II.) inconsistency in single plea; (III.) original common-law rule as to inconsistency between pleas; (IV.) the rule under the statute of Anne: (a) with reference to inconsistent facts; (b) with reference to different modes of trial; (c) relaxation of the rule; (V.) The rule in equity; (VI.) the rule under reform procedure: (a) general statement of the doctrine; (b) what defenses are inconsistent: (1) distinction between inconsistency in fact and inconsistency by implication of law; (2) test as to what inconsistency is objectionable; (c) application of the rule to particular actions: (1) actions pertaining to contracts generally; (2) actions pertaining to bills and notes; (3) actions pertaining to sales; (4) actions pertaining to negligence and for assault; (5) actions pertaining to personal property; (6) actions pertaining to realty; (7) actions for libel or slander; (8) miscellaneous actions; (VII.) effect of inconsistency as a waiver or admission: (a) the prevailing rule; (b) exceptions to the rule; (c) explanation of the apparent conflict; (VIII.) inconsistency, how taken advantage of; (IX.) conclusion. 177

Discretion to permit amendment. 831

PLEDGE.

A statement to a bank by a borrower, that stock in his safe may be considered as collateral for his loans, is executory in its nature so long as the stock remains in his possession and until it is in fact pledged to the bank by a delivery. Buffalo German Ins. Co. v. Third Nat. Bank (N. Y.) 107

POLICE POWER.

See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 15-23.

PONDS.

See NEGLIGENCE, 5.

POSSESSION.

Of Logs Driven in River, see LOGS.

POWERS.

Of Appointment, see LIFE TENANTS, 2.

Authority to execute a power by will is exclusive of its execution in any other manner. Kuggles v. Tyson (Wis.) 809

PREMIUM.

On Investment of Trust Funds, see LIFE TENANTS, 1.

PRESCRIPTION.

Easement by, see EASEMENTS, 2-4.
See also FISHERIES, 3.

PRESS ASSOCIATION.

See NEWSPAPERS, 1, 2.

PRESUMPTION.

See EVIDENCE.

PRINCIPAL AND AGENT.

A promise to pay for services engaged by an employee without any authority, for the benefit of a third person, when accompanied by a denial of any liability, does not constitute a ratification, but is a mere promise to pay the debt of another, which is void under the statute of frauds. Holmes v. McAllister (Mich.) 396

PRINCIPAL AND SURETY.

See also APPEAL AND ERROR, 6; BONDS, 1, 2.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also SURETY COMPANIES.

Limitation of surety's liability; delay of creditor; rule in equity. 514

PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATIONS.

See EVIDENCE, 8; LIBEL.

PROXIMATE CAUSE.

See EVIDENCE, 17; HIGHWAYS, 3.

PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS.

Injunction against Assessment for, see INJUNCTION, 11, 12.

Decision as to Constitutionality of, see COURTS, 5.

Constitutionality of Statutes as to, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 13, 14.

See also BRIDGES, 1-5; MORTGAGE, 2.

1. A petition from abutting lot owners is 18 L. R. A.

not a necessary condition of the improvement of an alley, under the charter of Milwaukee, Wisconsin, subchap. 7, § 6, when the council follow the technical course of procedure therein mapped out. Kersten v. Milwaukee (Wis.) 851

2. An undertaking to maintain a new pavement for a series of years, required as a guaranty of the perfection of the work, is not a contract for repairs within the meaning of a statute requiring contracts for repairs to be let to the lowest bidder. Seaboard Nat. Bank v. Woesten (Mo.) 279
Barber Asphalt Paving Co. v. Hezel (Mo.) 285

3. The construction of a street, and its maintenance for a term of years at a cost sufficient to preserve good work and good material from becoming imperfect from natural and unavoidable causes, may be included in a single contract by a municipality having complete control over the construction and repair of its streets, where the object is to obtain a better quality of construction, although the charter provides for letting the contract for "repairs" to the lowest bidder, which are to be paid for out of the general fund, while the cost of construction is to be charged on adjoining property. Id.

4. The fraudulent purpose of the public authorities in fixing the minimum price to be paid for maintaining at public expense a pavement constructed at the expense of the abutting owner, both of which items are included in a single contract, so low that an unlawful burden will be cast on the abutting owner, will not, after the completion of the pavement, defeat the contractor's right to recover on the tax bills, unless he participates in the fraud. Id.

5. That the price for maintenance of a pavement is below what would be fair compensation for the work is not sufficient to avoid, in favor of the abutting owner, a contract covering its construction and maintenance, under a charter requiring the city to pay for maintenance, and the abutting owner for construction, where there is nothing to show that the contract price for construction is not fair and reasonable, and the contract is in fact but for a single work,—that of construction with a guaranty of endurance. Id.

6. An assessment purporting to be made according to benefits will not be sustained, although the board making it say they viewed the premises and exercised their judgment, if the facts and circumstances show quite conclusively that they could not have exercised their judgment in arriving at the result. Kersten v. Milwaukee (Wis.) 851

7. Assessing lots for so-called benefits in proportion to their frontage, and making the aggregate of benefits closely approximate the total cost of the work, are circumstances too significant not to arouse suspicion that benefits were not considered, although the board making the assessment say they viewed the premises and exercised their judgment, —especially when there was a deep cut opposite some of the lots and a deep fill opposite others. Id.

8. An assessment for grading an alley, based solely on the cost of the work in front of the abutting lots, without regard to benefits and apportioned by the front foot, is arbitrary and void. Id.

9. When a municipal corporation has exercised the power conferred by Ill. Rev. Stat. art. 9, chap. 24, § 1, of prescribing the method of payment for local improvements, and the work has been done, to be paid for by special assessment, the expense cannot be made a general charge against the city. Pontiac v. Talbot Paving Co. (C. C. App. 4th C.) 328

10. An assessment of an annual charge for the use of a common sewer under Mass. Pub. Stat. chap. 50, §§ 1-3, authorizing just and equitable annual charges or rents for the use of such sewers to be paid by everyone who enters his sewer into the common sewer, is not unconstitutional because of the fact that the person assessed therefor had previously paid part of the cost of building the sewer, if the assessment for its use is proportional to, and not in excess of, the benefits received therefrom. Carson v. Sewerage Comrs. (Mass.) 277

11. Abutting property may be constitutionally assessed for benefits from the watering of streets. Phillips Academy v. Andover (Mass.) 550

12. A vote appropriating money for street sprinkling expressly stating that it is appropriated under Mass. Stat. 1895, chap. 180, means that the provisions of that act are to be applied in regard to the expenditure, and, in the absence of anything limiting the amount of the assessment, the fair inference is that the whole cost is to be assessed on the abutting property. Id.

13. A municipal corporation is not liable to an action for refusal to proceed to levy a new special assessment to pay for street improvements after the original one was set aside for irregularity, under a contract by which the contractor agreed to look only to such assessments for his compensation and to take the risk of their invalidity, in accordance with a statute which expressly provides that the claim shall not become a public charge in any event, but the duty, if it exists, must be enforced by mandamus. Pontiac v. Talbot Paving Co. (C. C. App. 4th C.) 326

14. Property abutting on a previously opened portion of a street constituting a cul de sac cannot be assessed for benefits to pay the cost of an extension which will convert the cul de sac into an open street, as the owners, by dedication or otherwise, have already borne their full share of the cost of the original improvement, and cannot be assessed again to pay the cost of extending that improvement through other properties. Re Orkney Street (Pa.) 274

15. A provision in an ordinance authorizing a street railway to be laid, that the space 48 L. R. A.

between the tracks shall be paved in the manner specified "when and as the street may be" thus paved, must be understood to mean that the paving between the tracks shall be at the expense of the company. Union Trust Co. v. Richmond City R. Co. (Ind.) 41

16. A lien upon a street railway for a paving assessment to which the company is subject under its charter is superior to the lien of a mortgage upon the property. Id. See also RECEIVERS, 2.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Public improvements; assessment of benefits; conclusiveness of. 853

Assessment limited to benefits; provision for maintenance and repair of street. 285

Charter obligation to pave or repave street. 43

Contracts for; cost of reconstruction and maintenance. 280

Legislative power as to payment for. 472

Liability of city for failure to make valid assessment. 327

Nature of power of assessment; what property subject to assessment; property not abutting. 276

PUBLIC MONEY.

Appropriations of the money of the state for the general and other expenses of a private Normal University, in consideration of the gratuitous instruction of teachers for the common schools, are not an assumption of the debts or liabilities of such corporation or a loan or extension of credit in aid of it in violation of Ill. Const. art. 4, § 20, but are within the legislative discretion as to the means of carrying out the provisions of Const. art. 8, § 1, requiring the legislature to provide for a system of free schools. Boehm v. Hertz (Ill.) 575

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Public money; unconstitutional appropriations of; use for private purposes. 576

PUBLIC POLICY.

See CONTRACTS.

PUFFING.

See AUCTION.

PUMP.

See MINES, 4.

PUNCTUATION.

See STATUTES, 3.

PURPRESTURE.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Purpresture; what is; bay window in street. 103

RAILROADS.

Covenant to Run Trains, see COVENANT, 3.

Combination of, see CORPORATIONS, 3.
 As Carriers, see CARRIERS.
 See also DAMAGES, 2; EVIDENCE, 4;
 MASTER AND SERVANT, 2, 3, 5-7, 9,
 10, 12, 18, 19; MORTGAGE, 3, 4;
 NEGLIGENCE, 1; TAXES, 8.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also MASTER AND SERVANT.

Railroad; as part of realty; built before condemnation of land. 243
 Combination of competing lines. 352
 Power to lease. 522

REAL PROPERTY.

See also ACTION OR SUIT, 5; JUDICIAL SALE, 1; PARTNERSHIP.

1. The death of a person while in college, thereby making it impossible to perform a condition subsequent imposed by will on an estate which was given him subject to be divested if he should fail to carry out the intentions of the will "through his own disinclination or incapacity, or the indifference of his parents or guardians," will not divest the estate so as to prevent its descent to his heirs at law and next of kin, since the performance, becoming impossible by the act of God, is dispensed with. Ellicott v. Ellicott (Md.) 58

2. A will giving a grandnephew an estate "for the purpose of securing to him a liberal education," requiring him to finish a collegiate course at one of two specified universities, and providing that the property shall pass from him if, "through his own disinclination or incapacity, or the indifference of his parents or guardians, he should fail to carry out these intentions," with a further provision that until he is twenty-five years of age the property shall be held by a trustee, who shall "deliver over the property and estate into his hands and possession" when he is twenty-five years old, if the directions of the will have been carried out, expressing also a special desire that the grandnephew shall not sell a certain place until he shall attain the age of twenty-five years,—vests in him an equitable estate at the death of the testatrix, subject to be divested by the nonperformance of the condition imposed, which is a condition subsequent, and not precedent. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Real property; recording of deed as notice. 538

RECEIVERS.

1. A street railway is within the reason of the rule of a court of equity which subjects proceeds of mortgaged railway property in the hands of a receiver to the payment of current debts made in the ordinary course of business, if there has been any diversion of the current receipts to increase the value of the security. Union Trust Co. v. Richmond City R. Co. (Ind.) 41

2. A preference of a claim for paying the track of a street railway out of the proceeds 48 L. R. A.

of the property on foreclosure cannot be allowed on account of the purchase by the company of cars and other equipment after the paving was begun, materially increasing the value of the mortgaged property, unless such equipment was paid for out of the current earnings of the company. Id.

3. An action against receivers of a railroad company appointed by a Federal court, for injuries caused by the company's negligence before their appointment, cannot be maintained in a state court without permission of the court which appointed them. Smith v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. (Mo.) 368

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Receiver; preference of other claims over mortgage. 42

RECITALS.

See BONDS, 4.

RECORDS.

See GRAND JURY, 1; REAL PROPERTY.
 NOTES AND BRIEFS; WILLS, 6.

REFERENCE.

The court may itself find the facts in question without a reference therefor, where a referee has failed to pass upon objections to evidence. Credle v. Ayers (N. C.) 751

REFUNDING.

See BONDS, 5, 6.

RELIGIOUS SOCIETIES.

See also LIBEL AND SLANDER.

1. Notice of an attempt to organize a church and of the time and place of forming the organization, as required by Wis. Rev. Stat. § 1990, is not necessary where the incorporators are not members of a religious organization, but desire to organize a corporation in connection with a church of their own peculiar tenets to be associated therewith. Frank v. Mann (Wis.) 956

2. A religious corporation de facto is created where an attempt in good faith is made to comply with a statute which authorizes the formation of such corporation. articles are drawn and signed in form as the statute requires, except as to the acknowledgment, and they are recorded, the corporation organized, and the right to exercise the franchise of being a corporation asserted for several years. Id.

3. A majority of the members of a church corporation organized as a body of Christian believers of a particular sect cannot devote its property to a use inconsistent with the purposes of the corporation by employing a pastor whose teachings are inconsistent with those of the sect to which the church belongs. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Religious society; corporation de facto; diversion of property to unauthorized use. 858

REMAINDERS.

Protection of, see JUDICIAL SALE, 2.
Rights of, see LIFE TENANTS.
Rights in Trust Estate, see TRUSTS.

REMEDY.

To Enforce Statute, see ACTION OR SUIT, 2.

RENT.

See LIFE TENANTS, 3.

RÉSUMÉ.

For Résumé of Contents of Book, see 865

ROOF.

See BUILDINGS, 2, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

SALE.

See also LOGS.

1. Logs in a river being driven by an incorporated log company, though it is not a common carrier, but has a duty under its charter of driving the logs and the possession of them so far as the logs are susceptible of possession, are subject to the right of stoppage in transitu in favor of a person who had sold them and had delivered them in the river for the purpose of their being driven to the purchaser's booms and mill. Johnson v. Eveleth (Me.) 50

2. A contract for the delivery of logs "over the dam" at the outlet of a lake into a river, whence they are to be driven by a log-driving company down the river to the booms and mill of a purchaser, does not make the dam the final destination or place of delivery of the logs so as to terminate the right of stoppage in transitu while they are being driven down the river. Id.

3. Constructive possession of a mass of logs being driven down a river to the booms and mill of a purchaser does not result in his favor, so as to terminate the right of stoppage in transitu, by the fact that a few of the logs had actually floated down to his mill and been received by him. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Sale; on condition; passing of title. 773

SAVINGS BANKS.

See NOTICE.

SCHOOLS.

See also CIVIL RIGHTS; CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 3.

1. The constitutional requirement of the maintenance and support of a system of free common schools wherein all the children of the state may be educated does not require a school board to admit to any school under its control all the children who may desire to attend that particular school, or prevent the legislature from exercising its discretion as to the best method of educating the different classes of children in the state, whether those classes are determined by nationality, color, or ability, so long as it provides for all alike in the character and extent of the education furnished and facilities for its acquirement. People ex rel. Cisco v. School Board (N. Y.) 113

2. The authority of the state to regulate and control public schools includes the power to provide for the selection of uniform text-books for all the schools of the state, and to provide for the purchase thereof under a contract with the lowest bidder. Leeper v. State (Tenn.) 167

3. No right of local self government is infringed by a statute which provides for the selection of uniform text-books for all the schools in the state by a commission and for letting a contract therefor to the lowest bidder. Id.

4. A statute prescribing uniform text-books for schools throughout the state, with provisions for their selection by a commission and the letting of a contract thereafter to the lowest bidder for supplying any books that have been approved by the commission, is not in violation of Tenn. Const. art. 1, § 22, against monopolies, since the purpose of the statute is not to confer any pecuniary benefit upon the state or school officials or publishers, but to confer a benefit upon the public. Id.

5. The fact that the state is not bound by an agreement authorized by statute, giving a publisher the right to furnish all the text-books used in the public schools of the state, does not make the privilege invalid, so as to relieve a school teacher from liability for violating the provisions of the statute by using unauthorized text-books. Id.

6. There is not such lack of safeguards against extortion and oppression as to render invalid a statute providing for the purchase of all the text-books used in the public schools of the state from the same publisher, where the statute provides for a letting at the lowest rates, in free competition, after public advertisement, and that the prices shall always be as low as the books have ever been or are now being published under contract in any state, county, or district of the United States, when like conditions prevail, while power is conferred upon a commission to judge of these conditions and enforce them. Id.

7. Requiring payment in advance in order to obtain school books which have to be delivered out of the county is not an arbitrary provision of a statute providing for the purchase of all the text-books used in the public schools of the state from one publisher on a contract let to the lowest bidder, and does not infringe the rights of the citizen to make purchases on credit. Id.

8. The right of the voters of a district township to rescind a vote for a tax to build a schoolhouse in a subdistrict, at a regular meeting subsequent to that at which the tax was voted, exists by necessary implication from the power to vote the tax, when they rescind the vote before the tax has been collected, levied, or certified to the board of supervisors for that purpose. Hibbs v. Adams Dist. Twp. (Iowa) 535

9. A vested right to have a tax for building a schoolhouse levied and collected is not acquired so as to prevent rescission of the vote for the tax, by commencing an action to compel the certification of the tax for levy and collection. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Schools; monopoly in furnishing text-books. 167

Separation of white and colored children. 114

Voting school tax; right to rescind vote. 535

SEAMEN.

See COMMERCE, 2.

SEARCH.

See DISORDERLY PERSONS.

SEIZURE.

See DISORDERLY PERSONS.

SEPARATION.

See HUSBAND AND WIFE, 6.

SET SCREWS.

See MASTER AND SERVANT, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

SEWERS.

Pollution of Waters by, see WATERS.

SHERIFF.

See CONTRACTS, 2.

SHIPPING.

Acceptance of Vessel under Contract, see ESTOPPEL, 2.

See also COMMERCE, 2; COURTS, 2; DEATH.

The method for limitation of the ship owner's liability for maritime losses provided in the act of Congress of 1851 by transfer to a trustee is not exclusive; but the limitation may be claimed under a general denial in an action at law. Loughin v. McCaulley (Pa.) 33

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Shipping; limitation of liability; assertion in state court. 34

State statute as to soliciting desertion of seamen. 153

SIGNS.

See also HIGHWAYS, 2.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Signs; of merchants; encroaching on streets. 446

SITUS.

See GARNISHMENT; TAXES, 8.

STAMP.

See COURTS, 3.

STAMP TAX.

See INTERNAL REVENUE, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

48 L. R. A.

STATE.

Action by, see ACTION OR SUIT, 1.

STATUTE OF FRAUDS.

See PRINCIPAL AND AGENT.

STATUTES.

Remedy under, see ACTION OR SUIT, 2.
See also MINES, 1.

1. The ambiguity or uncertainty in the language of the Missouri anti-department store act of May 16, 1899, which leaves it a matter purely of guess work to determine whether the license fee is intended to be exacted for selling the articles of each of the seventy-three classes or for only each of the twenty-eight groups therein designated, and also fails to define the life and duration of the license to be issued, whether it is for a day, month, or year, for the life of the applicant, or for the duration of his business at a fixed place,—is sufficient to render the statute void. State ex rel. Wyatt v. Ashbrook (Mo.) 265

2. Provisions of a statute which relate to a particular subject indicated in its title, and which are a part of or incident to it, or in some reasonable sense connected with or auxiliary to the object in view, must be deemed to be within the title of the act. Boehm v. Hertz (Ill.) 575

3. A court may punctuate a statute or disregard punctuation, as may be necessary to ascertain its true meaning and intent. Union Refrigerator Transit Co. v. Lynch (Utah) 790

4. An amendatory statute is not invalid on the ground that it imposes burdens on a pre-existing corporation, if the amendments merely modify a statute to which the corporation was subject by making the provisions more favorable to the company. Purdy v. Erie R. Co. (N. Y.) 669

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Statutes; in derogation of common law. 560

Revenue measures; what are; sufficiency of title. 596

STOCK.

Lien on, see BANKS, 5, 6.

See also CORPORATIONS.

STOCKHOLDER.

Law Governing Liability of, see CONFLICT OF LAWS, 2.

STOPPAGE IN TRANSITU.

See also LOGS; SALE.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Stoppage in transitu; of driven logs. 51

STREET RAILWAYS.

See also CARRIERS, 1, 2; INJUNCTION, 2, 3; MORTGAGE, 2; PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS, 15, 16; RECEIVERS, 1, 2.

A consolidation of street-railway companies is not in violation of Ga. Const. art.

4, § 2, ¶ 4 (Civ. Code, § 5800), which prohibits the purchase by one corporation of shares or stock in another, or the making of contracts between them, when the effect will be to create a monopoly or lessen competition, if the consolidated street railway will furnish greater and less expensive facilities and conveniences of transportation, and the competition between the old companies was at certain points only and unimportant and insignificant as compared with the general interests of the public. Trust Company of Georgia v. State (Ga.) 520

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Street railways; consolidation of; competition of. 520

Right to use streets as a franchise; contractual relations with city; property rights in streets. 823

STREET SPRINKLING.

See PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS, 11, 12.

SUBROGATION.

See BANKS, 2; MORTGAGE, 5.

SURETY COMPANIES.

See also CORPORATIONS, 1.

A statute permitting trustees to charge against the estate in their hands such sums as they have paid to any company for becoming surety on their bonds gives no lien in favor of the company, in the absence of express provision to that effect. Re Clark (Pa.) 587

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Surety companies; legal powers and privileges of surety and trust companies:—(I.) In general; (II.) special act creating; (III.) granting special or exclusive privileges to; (IV.) power to act as guardian, etc., without bond; (V.) power to act as surety: (a) in general; (b) on appeal bond; (VI.) right to counter security; (VII.) right to relief from suretyship; (VIII.) right to tax, amount paid to, as costs; (IX.) right of personal representative, etc., to credit for amount paid to; (X.) foreign companies: (a) power to act as surety; (b) power to act as trustee, etc. 587

SURFACE WATER.

See ACTION OR SUIT, 5; WATERS, 9.

SWITCHES.

See ACTION OR SUIT, 2; MASTER AND SERVANT, 6, 7, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

TACKING.

See ADVERSE POSSESSION, 2.

TAXES.

See also BRIDGES, 5; CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 12; LICENSE; MORTGAGE, 5; MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 11; SCHOOLS, 8, 9; TOWN, 3.

1. The discrimination between different classes of judgments made by Kan. Laws 1897, chap. 243, providing for the taxation 48 L. R. A.

of personal judgments for money only, but exempting judgments on foreclosure of mortgages prior to the sale of the lands, judgments for work and labor, or for material furnished in the erection of buildings, and improvements on lands or lots, renders the statute void under Kan. Const. art. 11, § 1, requiring uniformity of taxation. Hamilton v. Wilson (Kan.) 238

2. The occupancy of real estate by an educational institution or its officers for the purposes for which it was incorporated, in order to exempt the property from taxation under Mass. Pub. Stat. chap. 11, § 5, cl. 3, as amended by Stat. 1889, chap. 465, must have, or be supposed to have, a direct connection with such purposes. Phillips Academy v. Andover (Mass.) 550

3. Dormitories and dining halls furnished by a college for the use of students are devoted to college purposes and therefore exempt from taxation under Mass. Pub. Stat. chap. 11, § 5, cl. 3, as amended by Stat. 1889, chap. 465. Harvard College v. Cambridge (Mass.) 547

4. A dwelling house occupied by the president of a college and his family, built with funds given expressly for the purpose of erecting a dwelling house for the president and his successors in office, and situated on the college grounds and kept in order and repair at college expense, while the whole lower floor, except possibly the kitchen, is used for class day, commencement, and other receptions, and for many hospitalities incident to the president's functions, and the hall and drawing room are also used for the convenience of the college and the president, for meetings of the faculty and committees, for conferences with university officers and students, for calls on university business, and for the annual meetings of the corporation at which degrees are voted, is exempt from taxation as property occupied by the institution or an officer thereof for the purposes for which it was incorporated. Id.

5. Houses occupied by college professors, with the permission of the college and without their having any estate therein or paying any rent therefor, but for the use of which an allowance is made as part of the compensation for their services, while the principal or dominant consideration in regard to the occupation has reference to the performance of their duties in the offices which they hold as professors and otherwise, rather than to the private benefit which they would receive in the way of homes for themselves and their families, are exempt from taxation under Mass. Pub. Stat. chap. 11, § 5, cl. 3, as amended by Stat. 1889, chap. 465. Id.

6. Premises occupied by the professors of an academy and their families are exempt from taxation, under Mass. Pub. Stat. chap. 11, § 5, cl. 3, as amended by Stat. 1889, chap. 465, exempting real estate of such institutions when occupied by them or their officers for the purposes for which they are incorporated. Phillips Academy v. Andover (Mass.) 550

7. A tax on property employed in interstate commerce, if it is within the jurisdiction of the state, is not a regulation of interstate commerce. Union Refrigerator Transit Co. v. Lynch (Utah) 790

8. Railway cars owned by a foreign corporation having no place of business in the state, when they are leased to various shippers, but come into, or pass through, and do business in the state, have a situs therein for the purpose of taxation. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also INTERNAL REVENUE.

Taxes; extent of power of taxation; delegation of power.	266
For what purposes authorized.	740
On personal judgments.	240
Situs of property for purpose of, as affecting interstate commerce.	790
Lack of uniformity.	266
Exemption of college buildings.	547
Recovering payments of illegal taxes.	506

TELEGRAPHS.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Telegraphs; public business of.	569
---------------------------------	-----

TERRITORIES.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Territories; distinguished from states; citizens of.	419
--	-----

TEXAS FEVER.

See CARRIERS, 7.

TICKETS.

See CARRIERS, 1, 2.

TIDE.

See WATERS, 1, 2.

TIMBER.

1. A written contract of sale of an undivided half of land constitutes a revocation pro tanto of a prior license to cut timber thereon, so far as it remains unexecuted. Bruley v. Garvin (Wis.) 839

2. Timber cut under a parol license before any notice of revocation of the license does not become the property of a subsequent purchaser of the land who had no valid contract therefor before the timber was cut. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Timber; oral contract for; parol license to cut.	840
--	-----

TOWN.

Imposing Burdens on, see ACTION OR SUIT, 3.

Deprivation of Property of, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 13.

See also BRIDGES, 1-5.

1. The right of a town to regulate its town finances and affairs, superior to all legislative control, is not among the rights and privileges "derived from our ancestors," 48 L. R. A.

to "define, secure, and perpetuate" which the Constitution of Connecticut was adopted and to which its preamble refers. State ex rel. Bulkeley v. Williams (Conn.) 465

2. No such right of local self-government is given to a town, under the Constitution of the United States or that of Connecticut, as precludes the legislature from exacting of the town payment of a portion of the expense of an incorporated highway or bridge district of which the town is made a part, although the town has no share in choosing the members or directing the affairs of such district. Id.

3. The representation of a town in the state legislature, which charges the town with a portion of the expense of a highway or bridge district in which the town is placed and which is under the control of commissioners not selected by the town, but who draw orders for funds upon it, is sufficient answer to the objection that the town is taxed by these commissioners without representation. Id.

TRADING STAMPS.

Constitutionality of Statute as to, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 20.

TREATIES.

A city in Switzerland is entitled to take a legacy from a citizen of the United States under the treaty with Switzerland, which permits citizens of the two nations to make such dispositions of property in favor of each other. Succession of Meunier (La.) 77

TRESPASS.

See FISHERIES, 1, 2.

TRIAL.

See also MASTER AND SERVANT, 16.

1. Right of trial by jury is not violated by a statute making a county liable to a penalty of a specified amount for the death of a person caused by mob violence. Champaign County v. Church (Ohio) 733

2. The practice of withdrawing a juror for the purpose of postponing or continuing the trial of a civil case does not prevail in Oregon. Usborne v. Stephenson (Or.) 432

3. The only cause for withdrawal of a juror in a civil case, if that practice can be resorted to for any reason, is surprise on the trial, and a motion therefor cannot be based upon matters happening long prior to the trial, which had been considered on motion for a continuance before the jury were impaneled. Id.

4. The question whether a usage has been established and its binding force upon the parties is a question of law, when the facts are undisputed. Runyan v. Central R. Co. (N. J. Sup.) 744

5. The reasonable necessity for killing a trespassing dog is a question for the jury under all the facts and circumstances of the case. Hodges v. Causey (Miss.) 95

6. The negligence of an executor in failing to apply for an extension of a vacancy permit for insured premises which continue vacant, which had been granted with an agreement to extend it on application, is held to be a question of law for the court. Henderson Trust Co. v. Stuart (Ky.) 49

7. It is a question for the jury whether the crossing of a bridge by a steam traction engine drawing a water tank is a usual and ordinary mode of travel and transportation of property over bridges in that locality, such as should have been anticipated and provided for in the exercise of ordinary care. Hardin County v. Coffman (Ohio) 455

8. The necessity of bracing a wall in the course of construction is a question for the jury, and not for the court, where there is evidence that bracing was provided for by the plans. Dettmering v. English (N. J. Sup.) 106

9. The negligence of the conductor of a freight train in going forward with the engine to examine culverts after a storm, under the order of the road master, is a question for the jury. Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. Fowler (Ind.) 531

10. Whether or not an employee acts properly in obeying an order of a foreman to take bottles to an upper floor by the use of an elevator is a question for the jury. Dallemand v. Saalfeldt (Ill.) 753

11. The question whether or not a flood which broke a railroad trestle was such as could have been reasonably anticipated is for the jury. Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. Fowler (Ind.) 531

12. The question of care and diligence in respect to the disposal of goods received on consignment, which had been retained for almost a year, when they were consumed by fire, may be submitted to the jury, where there is evidence of their value in the market. Usborne v. Stephenson (Or.) 432

13. Whether or not an accepted offer to purchase insured property constitutes a breach of the condition in the policy against change of ownership is a question for the court, and not for the jury. Arkansas Fire Ins. Co. v. Wilson (Ark.) 510

14. It is erroneous to instruct the jury as to what their verdict shall be if they find certain facts, when there is no evidence on which those facts can be found. Smith v. Sedalia (Mo.) 711

15. A charge that a master should instruct his employee as to the nature, force, and probable effect of an explosion of a pot of molten metal taken by the employee from a blast furnace, in case it comes in contact with water, and that it is not sufficient merely to instruct that an explosion is likely to follow such contact, is not erroneous as requiring more than a warning that an explosion would be likely to cause injury. Riblich v. Lake Superior Smelting Co. (Mich.) 649

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Trial; withdrawal of juror:—(I.) Power to withdraw juror: (a) in civil cases; (b) 48 L. R. A.

in criminal cases: (II.) effect of withdrawal of juror in civil cases: (a) English cases: (1) in general; (2) as to costs; (b) American cases; (III.) effect of withdrawal of juror in criminal cases. 432

TROVER.

See also DAMAGES, 3.

A purchaser of property in good faith from a person who holds it under an agreement by which a third person has retained the title thereto, if he sells the property again, is liable for conversion, although he is not in possession of the property. Wood v. Nichols (R. I.) 773

TRUST COMPANIES.

See SURETY COMPANIES.

TRUSTS.

Sale of Property by Court of Equity, see JUDICIAL SALE, 2.

Premium on Investment of Funds, see LIFE TENANTS, 1.

See also CHARITIES; HUSBAND AND WIFE, 5; JUDGMENT, 3; MASSES; PARTNERSHIP, 1-3; SURETY COMPANIES.

1. The interposition of a court of equity to preserve a trust estate from destruction by reason of some circumstance not foreseen and provided for by the creator of the trust cannot extend to any change of the trustee's scheme further than is necessary for the preservation of the property. Rugles v. Tyson (Wis.) 809

2. The best interest of infant owners of an estate in remainder requiring an allowance to them of an immediate benefit therefrom for their maintenance and education will not warrant a court of equity in making an allowance to them from the trust estate during the existence of a life tenancy, where the trust not only fails to give any interest to the remaindermen until after the life tenant's death, but also makes their interest contingent by providing that the life tenant may, by her will, in her discretion, distribute the estate among her surviving children and grandchildren, and, in default of her appointment, gives the estate to her surviving children and the descendants of deceased children by right of representation. Id.

3. A life tenant of a trust estate to whom is given a power of appointment by will for the distribution of the remainder at her discretion among her surviving descendants, in default of which the remainder shall go to her living children and to the descendants of those who are dead by right of representation, though competent to sell her life interest so as to separate it from the power of appointment, has no authority to separate her estate from the estate in remainder, and should not be given that power by a court of equity without some overpowering necessity existing to demand it, because that course would substitute a mere expectancy for a certainty, contrary to the settlor's scheme. Id.

4. On the sale of part of a trust estate to discharge liens which exist by fault of the life tenant such portion of the proceeds as would go to the life tenant if the value of her life estate were estimated and paid to her may be paid over to her, not as a payment of the value of her interest, but as an investment, if secured by life insurance on her life in reputable level premium companies authorized to do business in the state, and if she adequately secures payment of the premiums and also secures prompt payment of future taxes on the unsold property by mortgage to the trustee upon her life estate therein, making it a first lien on such estate. Id.

5. A separate fund for the care of a burial lot and another for the saying of masses cannot be set aside by an executor under a will creating a trust "to pay the expense of keeping my burial lot in a proper and respectable condition and for having anniversary mass said annually," leaving it entirely to the executor's discretion to provide for the perpetuation of such services in any way he may deem proper, since the branches of the trust are to be administered together by the same trustee. Webster v. Sughrow (N. H.) 100

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Trusts; allowance out of income for support of infant. 783
Payment of premium on investment of trust funds. 127
Protecting interests of remaindermen in. 811

UNBORN CHILDREN.

See also JUDICIAL SALE, 1; LIFE TENANTS, 2.

An infant has not before birth such an independent existence that a negligent injury to him will sustain an action in his favor after he is born. Allaire v. St. Luke's Hospital (Ill.) 225

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Unborn children; status of; liability for injury to. 226

USAGE.

See CUSTOM.

USURY.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Usury; conflict of laws as to limitation of actions for. 637

VAPORS.

From Drain, see ACTION OR SUIT, 4.

VENDOR AND PURCHASER.

See also CHAMPERTY, 2.

Upon rescission of a deed of real estate because the grantors had, to their knowledge, no title which they could convey, of which fact the vendee was ignorant, a lien for purchase money wrongfully received by the vendors may be decreed upon any portion of the land of which the vendors were 48 L. R. A.

the owners. Fort Jefferson Improv. Co. v. Dupoyster (Ky.) 537

VERDICT.

Review of, on Appeal, see APPEAL AND ERROR, 11-13.

VETO.

See MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 5.

VOTERS AND ELECTIONS.

A majority of all the electors voting at the election for any purpose, and not simply all who vote on the adoption or rejection of the constitutional amendment submitted at a general election, is necessary for the adoption of a constitutional amendment under Miss. Const. 1890, § 273, requiring "a majority of the qualified electors voting." State ex rel. McClurg v. Powell (Miss.) 652

WAIVER.

See INSURANCE, 11.

WALL.

See NEGLIGENCE, 2, 3.

WAREHOUSEMEN.

See also MASTER AND SERVANT, 20.

1. Flax is included in the word "grain," within the meaning and intent of Minn. Gen. Stat. 1894, §§ 7645 et seq., providing that grain delivered for storage in a warehouse shall be received as a bailment, and not as a sale. State v. Cowdery (Minn.) 92

2. Authority to sell property described in a storage receipt issued under Minn. Gen. Stat. 1894, § 7640, is not conferred upon a warehouseman by a provision that the property may be mingled with other property of the same kind or transferred to other elevators or warehouses. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Warehousemen; tickets of, as contracts of bailment; misappropriation of property. 93

WATERS.

Easements in, see EASEMENTS.

Pollution of, by Sewers, as a Taking of Property, see EMINENT DOMAIN.

Injunction against Pollution of, see INJUNCTION, 7-10.

See also ACTION OR SUIT, 5; BUILDINGS, 2; LIMITATION OF ACTIONS, 1; MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 4, 13, 14; NEGLIGENCE, 3; NUISANCE, 2.

1. The title of riparian owners above the ebb and flow of tide extends to the middle of the stream, subject only to a servitude to the public for purposes of navigation. Grey ex rel. Simmons v. Paterson (N. J. Err. & App.) 717

2. Riparian owners along the Passaic river where the tide ebbs and flows have title only to high-water mark. Id.

3. The right to use tidal streams as outlets for public sewers carrying off surplus water and the sewage from buildings may be conferred by the legislature upon municipalities. Sayre v. Newark (N. J. Err. & App.) 722

4. The use of a stream for drainage is unreasonable, when it results in the concentration of filth and its discharge into the stream in such quantities that it is necessarily carried to the premises of another, where it produces a nuisance dangerous to health and destructive of the value of the property. Platt Bros. & Co. v. Waterbury (Conn.) 691

5. The right of surface drainage into a river does not include the right to discharge into it from sewers such noxious substances and in such quantities that the river cannot dilute them or safely carry them off without injury to the property of lower proprietors. Id.

6. A city which has legislative authority to construct its system of sewers, discharging their contents into a river, is not subject to the charge of maintaining a public nuisance. Grey ex rel. Simmons v. Pater-son (N. J. Err. & App.) 717

7. The grant to a city of a right to withdraw from a river such quantity of water as may be required to furnish a supply of pure and wholesome water does not vest in the city any right to the waters of the stream distinct from the rights of the general public, or preclude the legislature from subsequently authorizing another city to drain sewers into the stream where the tide ebbs and flows. Id.

8. The use of city sewers by connecting property therewith does not preclude the owner from recovering damages to his riparian property rights in premises farther down the river on account of the pollution of the waters by the sewers, where it does not appear that the damage was due in part to his fault. Platt Bros. & Co. v. Waterbury (Conn.) 691

9. The owner of a city lot has not the right to fill in or raise the surface so as to prevent the natural flow upon it of surface water from the higher ground of an adjoining owner, but is subject to the same rule which governs rural property. Car-lard v. Aurin (Tenn.) 862

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Waters; easement of riparian proprietors; pollution of, by sewers. 718

Pollution of, by sewage. 708, 714

Public right or easement in rivers; private rights in public streams; pollution of, by sewers. 700

Right of municipal corporation to drain sewage into waters:—(I.) Introduction; (II.) statutory authority; (III.) taking or damaging property; (IV.) miscellaneous. 691

Servitude of surface water. 862

Tidal streams; rights of riparian proprietors; pollution of. 722

Title to lake; to bed of river. 617

48 L. R. A.

WIDOW.

See DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION.

WILLS.

See also CHARITIES, 1; CONFLICT OF LAWS, 1; DEEDS; HUSBAND AND WIFE, 2, 3; JUDGMENT, 5; POWERS; REAL PROPERTY.

1. An instrument is not subscribed at the end thereof, as required by statute to constitute a valid will, where it consists of four pages in one sheet folded lengthwise down the middle, with the formal opening and a portion of the bequests on the first page of the sheet, another portion on the third page, which is marked page 2, while the remainder and the signature are on the second page, which is marked page 3, there being nothing to connect the portions on the third page with those above the signature. Re Andrews's Will (N. Y.) 662

2. An antenuptial agreement in support of a will will not prevent the revocation of the will by the subsequent marriage, where the statute says that "a marriage shall be deemed a revocation of a prior will." Hud-nall v. Ham (Ill.) 557

3. The capacity of a foreign city to accept a legacy is not wanting so as to defeat the gift, merely because the capacity for a time is suspended until a permit is obtained from the council of state. Succession of Meunier (La.) 77

4. The interest of a legatee in a legacy to which he is entitled only on condition that he be declared by the executors to be a reformed man at the expiration of a certain period is not vested until such decision is made. Re Jones (Mich.) 580

5. A condition in a legacy that the legatee's right thereto shall depend upon the decision of the executors at the end of a certain time, that he is a reformed man, is not void for uncertainty, and such decision is a condition precedent to his right to the legacy. Id.

6. Courts will not refuse to give effect to statutes providing for the recording of foreign wills, and giving them the same effect as if made and proved in the state, because such effect is not given to foreign wills by the state from which the record comes. Martin v. Stovall (Tenn.) 130

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also JUDGMENT.

Wills; condition of legacy; gift vested or contingent. 580

Effect of antenuptial agreement; election; revocation by marriage. 559

Subscribing at end. 662

Vested or contingent interests under; conditions of gift. 58

WITHDRAWING JUROR.

See TRIAL, 2, 3.

1

1

